The Collegian: What It's All About

By STEVE TRIPOLI
Editor-in-Chief

The paper you're reading right now (honest, it's not always this big) is the UMass student newspaper. The purpose of this article is to tell you a little about it and what we're trying to do here. So please read on.

Our number one problem is that we need people. As I see it, the major job of this newspaper is to keep students aware of what's going on here - the decisions that affect your lives. You, the students, are getting ripped off every day. By the University and some faculty you're getting ripped off for your educations. By the Administration, the Athletic Department, your own student government, and others you're getting ripped off for your dollars. You should be aware of it, and that's the Collegian's job.

But we can't do it because we don't have the personnel, and that's where you come in. We can get to the bottom of a lot of what's coming down that affects you on this campus if we can investigate it, and we need people, students, YOU for that. It's easy to rip copy off the AP wire and bring you national and international news. It's easy to give you the comics. Anyone can do that. But for the real job that this newspaper should do students are the answer. So we're begging you to come in. Out of a $211,000 dollar budget that this newspaper has about $85,000 comes directly from the Student Activities Tax that you pay. That's about $5 for each undergraduate. So you see, it's your paper.

It's a waste of your $85,000 and a ripoff if the paper doesn't do its job. So help us do it. Come to our recruitment meeting or drop in any time. We're on the second floor of the Student Union. You can be a reporter (we need a lot of reporters), a photographer, an editorial columnist, a sports writer, a layout person, you can even sell ads. The entire success of a paper is in its people, especially a college paper. We can do really good things if the people are there.

Past experience proves it. The few times that the paper has started looking into some the wrong things at UMass the people who have had an accusing finger pointed at them have nearly freaked out. The media has the power to change things on this campus, and its controlled by students. Try to get into that line of thought. UMass does not deserve to be painted dire colors - all is not evil here. But the pressing issues are where the wrongs are, and that's what we have to deal with, while we're appreciating the good things that UMass has to offer.

Furthermore, you can have a good time working here. The people are great, and you can make a lot of friends and fee that you're accomplishing something. If nothing else you'll come out of it with a little practical knowledge of journalism and a lot of friends (there's a personality for every taste at the Collegian, as you'll find out quick enough)

So give us a try. We're fun, and we have a lot of important work to do. Here's hoping you'll be a part of it this year.

Health Services: What It Has To Offer

The University Health Services continues toward the development of a comprehensive health program to meet students' health-related needs. A summary of the services and activities of the Health Services follows:

THE MEDICAL CARE DIVISION

Appointments for the Outpatient Clinic can be made during regular clinic hours with a physician of your choice by calling 545-0057. If you can't get an appointment when you need it, or you feel you must see someone right away, come to the Walk-In Clinic. However, the drawbacks are that you may have to wait longer to see a nurse or a physician and you don't have the choice of your physician. If the problem can wait for a few days, you may find the phone call for an appointment worth it.

A nurse practitioner is a specially trained registered nurse working under the supervision of a physician. If you have any minor or routine problems, see the nurse practitioner in the Outpatient Clinic.

Emergency treatment is available 24 hours a day. A nurse is always on duty and a physician is either on duty or on-call. If the door to the clinic is locked, just ring the emergency doorbell.

The Health Services also provides bed care for students with serious illnesses. The 60-bed Inpatient Department is located on the third floor of the Health Center. If you should become ill, keep in mind that you are less likely to fall behind in classwork if you stay on campus where books and class notes are available.

There is a full support system to medical care here, including clinical laboratory, x-ray, physical therapy and pharmacy. These are all included in your health fee with the exception of long-term medications. Special clinics are also organized in the Health Services, including nutrition, immunization, allergy, and contraception services. You may call the Health Center at 545-2671 for more information.

DENTAL HEALTH DIVISION

A full-time dentist will be joining the Health Services staff in September and will be available for consultation. Once the new addition opens in January, the Dental Health Division will provide emergency dental care and dental health education services as part of your health fee. Some routine preventive care such as examination and cleaning will be provided on a modified fee-for-service basis. You will be referred to either a local dentist or your family dentist for restorative care.

HEALTH EDUCATION DIVISION

The Health Education Division provides a broad range of programs and activities aimed at the development of sound responsible attitudes and behavior in students as individuals and as a group.

If your dorm or group would like to sponsor a program on such topics as mental health, nutrition, first aid, student drinking, unisexuality or just about any other health related topic, contact this office. They also have a large supply of pamphlets and printed materials on many health topics for student use (V.D., smoking, colds, mono; just to name a few).

The Division also sponsors a Peer Sex Education Program on campus. It is based on the premise that students can often be more empathetic and effective in helping other students. A Peer Sex Educator lives in the dorm or Greek house he/she serves and is responsible for establishing a Sex Education Program in the dorm, provides counseling, information and referrals dealing with the various aspects of human sexuality. The Health Resource Program also utilizes trained peers. Selected students serve as communiques of health information, help set up programs and serve as communications link with the Health Services. They also have some basic first aid training.

The Division also handles the extensive Health Services evaluation program each year. Let them know if you have a complaint. The Student Advisory Board and Interview Panel are also coordinated through this office. If you have any interest in the programs offered by the Division, please drop by the office which is located in the Health Center or call 545-2492.

ROOM TO MOVE

Affiliated with the Health Services and cooperating with the Health Education Division is Room to Move, a student run non-establishment Drug Drop-In Center. It came about as a result of student concern about helping related problems but feel free to just stop in to talk about whatever is on your mind. The staff of Room to Move also arranges discussion groups and workshops on such subjects as drug use on campus, specific categories of drugs and alternatives to drug use. No records are kept — confidentiality is guaranteed. Room to Move is located on the bottom floor of the Student Union, next to the Hatch. The phone number is 545-0400.

MENTAL HEALTH DIVISION

The Mental Health staff is composed of clinical psychologists, psychiatrists and social workers. People go to Mental Health for a variety of reasons. Sometimes it is for a specific problem or other times it is simply for someone to talk with. Someone who, because of training and experience, can possibly help you see things in a slightly different light.

Besides handling group therapy and one-to-one consultation, the staff members make an effort to get out into the community through dorm talks, work with Room to Move and Peer Sex Education, consultation at summer orientation and a weekly Collegian column dealing with common student problems. It is of the utmost importance to know that the Mental Health records, like all Health Services records, are strictly confidential. They cannot be released to anyone without the written authorization of the student. If you would like to talk to someone at Mental Health, just call 545-2337 for an appointment. No referral is needed. The Division is located on the third floor of Machmer Hall. Check in with the receptionist in Room 303.

ENVIRONMENTAL HEALTH & SAFETY DIVISION

The main focus of this division is prevention. The staff tries to provide a safe healthful environment for all who work and study at the University. They are responsible for such things as kitchen and dining inspections, radioactive material control, campus injury prevention and fire extinguisher refills and inspections. The staff of the division also provides technical and administrative assistance and consultation to those individuals and departments that need help in minimizing environmental problems on campus. If your dorm, fraternity or sorority has problems in any of the above areas, call Environmental Health & Safety at 545-2682. Their offices are located in Brooks House.

We hope that this information will be of help to you during the year. Remember, this is your Health Services here to serve you and meet your needs. Have a good year and stay healthy!

H
SERVICES

The construction of the new addition to the University Health Center has been moving along. The anticipated date of opening is sometime in January. The new addition will provide increased area for outpatient services including expanded facilities for physical therapy, laboratory, x-ray, and pharmacy services. Also housed in the new addition will be the new Division of Dental Health.

To insure adequate patient parking in the Health Center area, students are asked to cooperate with the established regulations. The loop road to the Health Services should be open at all times for access by emergency and service vehicles. Please use the spaces reserved for patient parking only if indeed you are a patient.

Presently, due to the problems of space, other divisions of the Health Services are located around the campus. You will find the Mental Health Division in Machmer on the 3rd floor; Environmental Health & Safety Division is located on the 2nd floor of Brooks House and the Community Health Education Division continues to be housed on the 2nd floor of the Health Center.

Students Have Input Through Health Board

The University Health Services exists to serve students and other members of the University community. Students pay for personal health services through their health fee and should have a say in the kind of care and types of services they receive. Therefore, a viable mechanism for consumer involvement is a high priority.

The Health Services Advisory Board has emerged as an organization for consumer involvement. Early in its development, the meetings covered a wide variety of topics for projects. These include the improvement of communication between the Health Services and the students through a regular column in the Collegian and radio interviews; participating in an evaluation program of the Health Services; devising an expanded campus transportation service to the Health Center; reviewing and re-writing the student supplemental health insurance policy; and interviewing prospective candidates for Health Services staff positions. One of the important functions of the Advisory Board concerns budgetary procedures. By reviewing each budgetary item and considering priorities for services, student input is an important factor in determining the health fee.

Another important accomplishment of the Student Advisory Board last year was the institution of the Ombudsman Desk in the Health Center lobby. Every day during regular clinic hours a student is there to provide information, answer questions, and receive complaints. This information is then related to the appropriate staff members who act on the suggestion or complaint.

The Board is always seeking people interested in setting goals and participating in the work of "responsible consumerism". Hopefully, the role of the Advisory Board will continue and grow as an integral part of the Health Services. If you are interested in participating, watch for notices of meetings in the Collegian, or call the Health Education office at 545-2492.

Birth Control Handbook

"1+1 / 3". Is this a brilliant graduate student in calculus speaking to his first discussion section? Not quite. Rather, it is the title of the new handbook on birth control and human sexuality being distributed at Registration in Boyden Gym. Written by and for UMass students, the booklet covers in as concise and clear a manner as possible some of the more important aspects of human sexuality. Topics include male and female anatomy, venereal disease, intercourse, conception, contraception, sterilization, rape, abortion, and adoption. There is also a discussion of the services available in the Amherst area - what they offer and how to get in touch with them.

The Handbook, published with Student Activities Tax money from the Student Senate under the auspices of the Senate's Women's Committee, was written by three UMass students. The Health Education Division of the University Health Services also provided valuable assistance. Their hope in writing the booklet is that it will provide students with more knowledge about what facilities are available to help them in the Amherst area. The pamphlet was also published with the aim of providing a less biased and value-laden view of human sexuality than is available in other material.

Police Rape Line

The University Police Department has established an anonymous phone line for women who have been a victim of any sex offense. Women may call to provide descriptions of the man, the place, time, and vehicle used. This information will remain confidential and will be used to identify unknown sex offenders in the Five College community. Women who call need not divulge any information about themselves unless they wish to.

Many women who have been victims of a sex offense and who have not notified the police feel a sense of guilt. The phone line provides a mechanism for women who have been victims of sex offenses to report it to the police while remaining anonymous. This line is open to any woman in this community.

The phone is operational 7 dys a week, during the days, and is staffed by a policewoman. Call 545-2121.

It should be stressed that you can all to report a sex offense to the police 24 hours a day. The phone line has been established for those individuals who do not want to sign a complaint, but who want to give the information to the police. The phone line is merely to guarantee that you will be able to speak to a policewoman. Call us anytime of the day or night if you need help.

On Campus Services Here To Serve You

By STEVE TRIPOLI

There are a number of free or low cost services available on this campus to students who need or desire them. They range from grocery stores to health services, but they're all here for you, the student, and this article will attempt to familiarize you with them.

If you're feeling ill there's the Infirmary, located in the Central part of campus. You can go there any time of the day or night (just ring the emergency bell by the front door at night) and get medical attention. It's already paid for with the health services fee you paid on your semester bill.

If the problem's in your head you can make an appointment with the Mental Health Service, located on the third floor of Machmer Hall, right across from the Student Union. There's a really great staff there, and they're there to help you. ALL VISITS ARE STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL, AND NO INFORMATION CAN BE RELEASED WITHOUT YOUR PERMISSION, unless your life or someone else's appears to be in danger.

A good place to go if you're having problems with drugs (and that includes alcohol) is the Room To Move Drop-in center, located in the basement of the Student Union across from the Post Office and down the hall from the Hatch. You can also go there if you're just having problems with your head, and you can go there most any time of the day or night.

There are two post offices in the Student Union-Campus Center complex. An automated one is located between the barber shop and the pinball machines in the CC and there's a regular one down the hall from the Hatch in the SU.

If you need a check cashed, you can cash a small (up to $25) one at the Student Union lobby counter. For most anything bigger than that you can go to Whitmore. All you need for either place is a valid UMass ID.

For you people who live off campus or just want to stock your own dorm refrigerator without getting ripped off at Munchy's there's the People's Market, a non-profit grocery store run by and for students. It's located on the ground floor of the Student Union near the rear entrance of the Ballroom. Since all it has to do is pay its employees and pay overhead (which is almost nil in the Student Union) the prices are only a little above cost.

The Student Activities office, located on the mezzanine of the Student Union, is for those of you interested in extracurricular activities. RSO, or Recognized Student Organizations, is based in the office. All student organizations, such as the Collegian, WMUA, and a couple of hundred others, are Recognized Student Organizations. There's one for everyone's interests.

If you're handy and you're having trouble with your car, you can rent for a nominal fee all the equipment you'll need to fix it from the Student Automotive Workshop, another RSO group. Just inquire at the Student Activities office if you're interested.

Most of the counseling for academic or financial aid problems can be found at the appropriate office in Whitmore. Just look it up. One notable exception is CASIAC, located in Machmer Hall. Here anyone in the College of Arts and Sciences can get academic counseling.

If you'd like lecture notes for one of your courses, you can find them at the Student Senate Lecture Note Service. This service covers most major courses and a few not so major ones. It's located in the Student Union.

Across from the Hatch in the SU are two places where you can do your thing or just let your hair down, the Craft Shop and the Games Area. In the Craft Shop you can get what you need to work on leather goods, beads, and the like. In the Games Area you can play pool, foozball (yes, foozball), ping-pong, or bumper pool for as little as 10¢ an hour. It's a good place to unwind.

If you want music there's the Music Room, right across from the Bluewall in the CC. You can get a set of headphones and just plug in and relax for a while there.

If you've lost something check Lost and Found in the basement of the CC at the coat check counter. They just might have it for you there.

If you're into some trouble with the law or just want to know your rights you can see Dick Howland, Attorney for Students, on the top floor of the Union. He's there most every day and can be reached 24 hours a day in an emergency at either 545-0341 or 256-8448.

If there's something missing here in the way of services that you'd like to know about it's either accidental or it doesn't exist. If you'd like to find out if it does exist try Student Activities at 545-2351. If you can't get through there try the Collegian at 545-2550. Just remember one thing. There's a lot going on here that's here for you to take advantage of. Use the services and activities provided. They'll make your years at UMass a lot easier and more enjoyable.

Concert Committee In Need Of Help

This fall marks the return of major concerts to the U.Mass. campus, something that hasn't happened in nearly three years. The Concert Committee will be presenting a series of concerts in Curry Hicks Cage, beginning in late October. To make this series a reality, the committee will need a wide array of people of differing backgrounds and interests. The goal is to provide an educational as well as a musical experience for those involved, in that the concerts will be totally produced by and for students. Unlike most musical enterprises, we are more interested in presenting quality music, as opposed to making a profit. There are any number of things that you could do in working with the committee, so, if you feel that you have anything to contribute to the committee, or would simply like to find out what we are going to be doing, come to an open meeting on Sept. 11, at 7:00 p.m. in Rm. 168-170 Campus Center, or stop by the committee's office in Rm. 428 of the Student Union.

Band Book

The Student Activities Office offers as a service to the University community an up-to-date listing of bands in the area. Individual and student groups use the Band Book for reference in locating a band. It is also available to people in the surrounding communities and other schools and colleges in the area.

If you would like to have your Band listed come into the office located in the Student Union mezzanine and ask for a form.

Student Activities Office Ready At New Location

The Student Activities Office in the Student Union is the focal point for student social action, community action, governmental, and cultural enrichment activities, in addition to serving as the headquarters for Recognized Student Organizations (RSO) and the Program staff.

The Program Advisors provide resource materials; counsel on program planning, organizational development, and leadership training; advice on program selection and procurement, and assistance on budgeting, purchasing, contracts, and other business matters.

The RSO makes available to student groups a banking and bookkeeping service and offers advice on financial and business concerns such as bidding, insurance, budgeting and accounting.

The staff also includes an advisor for student publications to provide professional assistance in the preparation of the Collegian, Index, Spectrum, and other student publications; a Crafts Advisor who operates, manages, and advises students in the Student Union Craft Center; and the Space and Events Office which is responsible for the scheduling of academic facilities for non-curricular activities. Most members of the Student Activities staff are Notaries Public for the convenience of the students, particularly for absentee balloting.

Participation in extracurricular activities offers opportunities to further broaden objectives of a University experience. The knowledge, skill, and judgement developed in the classroom can be tested and refined through use in many organizational settings. Following trends set in the past few years, the staff expects to work with even more social action groups in addition to programs such as M.A.R.Y. (Massachusetts Association for the Reintegration of Youth), J.O.E. (Juvenile Opportunities Extension), Belchertown-Boltwood Project, and NES (Northern Educational Service) which are receiving increased attention among students.

Totally there are approximately 500 student organizations including social action, political, educational, religious, cultural, social, professional, recreational, communications media, student government, and special interest groups. Descriptive lists of the organizations and names of many of their officers are available in the Student Activities Office.

To provide more support of increased activities within the residential areas, the Student Activities Office will again have graduate assistants assigned to those areas. Graduate assistants will provide individual students and groups with counsel and guidance in student activities as they relate to residence life. The assistants also act as liaison between the Student Activities and residential area staffs.

The Student Activities staff is available and willing to provide assistance to any existing group with their activities or to students who wish to organize new groups. The following staff members are located in the Student Activities Office located on the mezzanine of the Student Union — telephone 545-2351:

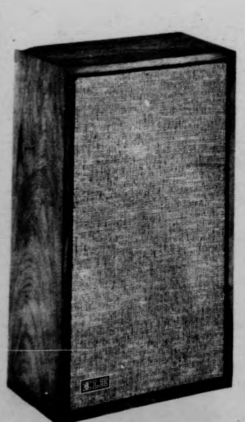
KLH High Performance Speakers and Receivers

Model Fifty-Five MO

The Model Fifty-Five AM, FM, FM Multiplex stereo receiver is designed to provide you with all the performance, flexibility of connections and versatility of control that you will ever want or need at a price which makes it unique. The modest cost of the Model Fifty-Five does not reflect compromises in either its performance or flexibility but rather a judicious and reasonable design of power supply, power amplifier stages and amplifier-output-protection system resulting in substantial economy. Its preamplifiers, and AM and FM tuners, for example, are on a par with more expensive, albeit more powerful receivers.

Model Fifty-Two

The Model Fifty-Two AM, FM, FM Multiplex stereo receiver is designed to provide you with all the performance, power, flexibility of connections and versatility of control that you will ever want or need in a receiver at a price which makes it unique. While it affords you the facility to effect a very wide range of functions, interconnections and adjustments, its large degree of "human" engineering makes it easy to operate, even for a novice, without a confusing clutter of controls.



KLH Model Thirty-Two

The KLH Model Thirty-Two is the first moderately priced loudspeaker to provide the level of performance and the characteristics of expensive loudspeaker systems. Its flat frequency response, superior musical balance, extraordinary linearity and low distortion definitely indicate its relationship to the far more costly loudspeakers in the KLH line.

KLH Model Six

Acoustic Suspension Speaker System

The KLH Model Six, probably the most widely accepted high performance speaker ever made, is a moderately priced bookshelf size loudspeaker system designed to supply a unique level of musical satisfaction. The Model Six combines very wide frequency range, low distortion, and exceptional smoothness across the audible range.

An Outline Of Amherst College And What It Has To Offer

Amherst was founded in 1821 as an independent liberal arts college for "the education of indigent young men of piety and talents for the Christian ministry." It has never been connected, however, with any church or sect. Its charter, granted by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in 1825, bans tests of religion in choosing students and teachers.

Among Amherst's founders were Noah Webster, the lexicographer, and Samuel Fowler Dickinson, grandfather of the poet Emily. The College received its initial support from many residents of the town from which it takes its name. (The town, which was incorporated in 1759, was named for General Jeffery Amherst, then Commander-in-chief of British forces in the New World and protector of the colonies in the French and Indian War.) The College has enjoyed a long and close association with the community, particularly with such poets and writers as Emily Dickinson, Helen Hunt Jackson, David Grayson (Ray Stannard Baker), and Robert Frost.

The campus is situated on a hill adjacent to the central town common. The surrounding area is characterized by apple orchards and tobacco farms lying on the flat, fertile land of the Connecticut River Valley and by ranges of hills to the south and east. Nearby are towns and places whose names recall another age in the life of New England: Deerfield and Bloody Brook, Pelham and Daniel Shays Highway, Northampton and Jonathan Edwards' Church. A few miles away are four other institutions of higher learning: Hampshire, Smith, and Mount Holyoke Colleges, and the University of Massachusetts with which Amherst engages in a number of cooperative educational ventures.

The College offers the bachelor of arts degree and cooperates with the University of Massachusetts in a Five College Ph.D. program. The College curriculum involves study in the humanities, the social sciences, and the natural sciences and combines a broad education with knowledge of some field in depth. Emphasis falls upon each student's responsibility for the selection of an appropriate program. Special freshman seminars exist to assist an exploration of various aspects of intellectual commitment. Freshmen may select a major field of study on entrance; exceptionally qualified students may satisfy graduation requirements in three years; some may engage in independent study free of formal courses in their junior and senior years; honors work — the intensive consideration of a limited subject — is encouraged.

Whatever the form of academic experience — lecture course, seminar, conference, studio, laboratory, independent study at various levels — intellectual competence and awareness of problems and methods are the goal of the Amherst program, rather than the direct preparation for some profession. The curriculum enables students to arrange programs for their own educational needs within established guidelines. To assist undergraduates in their course selections, faculty advisors, representing all academic departments, have been selected. They provide such counsel as is requested, but the ultimate responsibility for a thoughtful program of study rests with the individual student.

The College's faculty is engaged in two primary activities: first, the education of undergraduates, and, second, research and writing. Its 150 members hold degrees from colleges and universities throughout this country and abroad. Classes range from a lecture course of 180 to several courses of only five students; about 80 percent of the classes and sections have twenty-five students or less.

Amherst is equipped with considerable physical resources: a library of some 441,715 volumes, science laboratories, theater, gymnasium, swimming pool, skating rink, squash and tennis courts, playing fields, a museum of fine arts and another of natural sciences, a central dining hall where all students eat, dormitories, language laboratory, and classroom buildings. There are a wildlife sanctuary and a forest for the study of ecology, an observatory and planetarium, a computer center, and varied equipment for specialized scientific research. At Amherst, and at its neighboring institutions, there are extensive offerings of lectures, concerts, plays, films, and many other events. The College's endowment is approximately $57 million (book value).

In the early 1960s Amherst increased its enrollment from 1,000 to approximately 1,200 students. To accommodate these additional undergraduates and to provide improved facilities the College constructed a new dining hall, five new dormitories, and the Robert Frost Library. New buildings for science and music were completed in 1968.

Amherst has a full program of intercollegiate athletics in most sports. Every freshman and sophomore is required to take part in a program of physical education to improve his fitness and allow him to participate in team and recreational sports. In addition, about 90 percent of the students participate in an organized program of intramural athletics.

Undergraduates may also take a part in a variety of other extracurricular activities: journalism, publishing, broadcasting, music, dramatics, and a wide assortment of specialized interests. Religious groups, working independently or through the religious advisors, maintain a program of worship services, Bible study, community service projects, and other activities.

Many Amherst students join a fraternity or house at the end of their freshman year. These organizations provide housing for many of their members and are one focus of social life after the first year. Since 1946 the fraternities have selected their members without consideration of race or religion, and since 1951 every student who has wanted to join a fraternity has had the opportunity to do so.

As the campus has grown so has the College's involvement with the world. In 1821 most students came to Amherst from nearby towns intending to become ministers or missionaries. Facilities were simple; for three years South College was Amherst's only building, housing dormitory, library, and classrooms. Today students come from most of the fifty states and many foreign countries and bring with them backgrounds and interests far different from those of the "indigent young men of piety and talents" who preceded them nearly a century and a half ago.

Instruction still adheres to the liberal arts and sciences, but world forces are now felt in the classroom and out. Modern transportation and communication have changed what was once a sleepy little New England village into a growing center of activity and concern. Involvement in research or in social and economic issues takes some students to many parts of the country and abroad — as it does most of their teachers as well. Civil rights issues and national policies have an impact on the campus that would have been unimaginable even a generation ago. Graduates for the most part continue their formal education to become teachers, physicians, lawyers, and businessmen. At Amherst, hopefully, they will have only begun their education at "commencement," but will have developed attitudes and values that will encourage them to participate thoughtfully and generously in the service of mankind.

THE INTERTERM

The January Interterm is a four-week period between semesters free from the formal structures of regular classes, grades, and academic credit. It is, in essence, a time when each student may undertake independent study in a subject or area to which he might not have access during the normal course of the year.

A student may center his activities on the campus or elsewhere as he chooses. He may read, write, paint, compose, or inquire into some question or concern as his inclination, ingenuity, and resources permit. He may wish to explore further or more deeply a subject which has aroused his curiosity or about which he wishes to know more. He may also, if a teacher agrees to assist him, seek guidance from or work with a member of the faculty and other students in a joint endeavor.

The purpose of the Interterm is to remove, for four weeks, the constraints that prevail during normal class work and permit students to adjust their inquiry to their own interests and capabilities. With this freedom each student assumes the responsibility of using his time to his best advantage and of increasing his understanding of himself and of his educational and social environment.

FIVE COLLEGE COOPERATION

Amherst has an arrangement with Mount Holyoke College, Smith College, Hampshire College and the University of Massachusetts by which any of their regular courses is, under special circumstances, open to Amherst students.

The oldest cooperative venture is the Hampshire Inter-Library Center (HILC) located now in the Goodell Library at the University. HILC, a separate legal entity, is a depository for research materials and learned journals which are beyond the reach of any of the five libraries operating independently. An FM radio station (WFCR, 88.5 mc.) is run cooperatively through the Western Massachusetts Broadcasting Council composed of representatives of the five institutions. Other cooperative activities include a joint Astronomy Department; courses in the History of Science and in African-American studies; a Ph.D. program; a common calendar of events; a committee on transportation; a registry of part-time workers; and a Coordinator for cooperative projects.

NATIONAL THEATRE INSTITUTE

Through a Twelve College Interchange arrangement, undergraduate participation in the program of the National Theatre Institute, Waterford, Conn., is possible. Further information is available in the Office of the Dean of Students.

Hampshire College: What It Is And What It Offers

Four basic aims guide Hampshire's educational and operational philosophy. Simply stated, they are:

1. To help students achieve independence, self-reliance, and responsibility for their learning.
2. To create an institution responsive to new ideas, opportunities, and needs.
3. To operate a high-quality college primarily on the income from student charges.
4. To demonstrate the educational and fiscal advantages of cooperation among five closely situated colleges.

Designed to help realize these goals, the Hampshire College program utilizes a variety of innovative academic and fiscal policies; some examples follow:

- Students proceed to the Bachelor of Arts degree through three Divisions rather than the traditional freshman-senior sequence. Progress and competence are measured by divisional examinations which the student helps devise. This method accommodates individual learning patterns.
- There are no course or credit hour requirements. Work is undertaken to gain competence within divisional areas of study.
- Four Schools encompassing broad areas of study replace the traditional divisions and departments.
- No grades are given at Hampshire College. Students perform self-evaluations of course work or projects they complete; these are supplemented by faculty comments.
- Great emphasis is placed on extra-collegiate projects and field studies that involve students in the nonacademic world.
- All faculty members are appointed for fixed term contracts, ranging in duration from three to seven years. This practice enables the College to be continually responsive to new educational directions.
- Hampshire operates on a "4-1-4" academic calendar: Spring and Fall semesters are separated by a January term during which students may intensely pursue a single subject or activity independent of other course or program demands.

Five College Cooperation

Participation in the consortium called Five Colleges, Incorporated, allows Hampshire College to share a wide range of educational and cultural resources with nearby Amherst, Mount Holyoke, and Smith Colleges, and the University of Massachusetts. New programs, courses, and faculty additions at any one school attempt to complement rather than duplicate resources found at the othr cooperating institutions, and are monitored by the Five College Coordinator's Office.

Students at any of the five colleges may take courses on a free exchange basis at any of the other four, if the chosen courses are significantly different from those available on the student's home campus. To make intercampus travel easier, free half-hourly bus service links Hampshire with the other schools, which all lie within a seven-mile radius.

At present, only one formal five-college department exists-the astronomy department. However, cooperation does exist among the institutions in a number of other areas of common interest. This has led the Five College Coordinator to publish compendiums for courses available at all five schools in Black studies, Latin American studies, history, women's studies, and philosophy, among others. In addition, there is a comprehensive summary of all undergraduate liberal arts courses at the colleges and the University.

Other joint ventures include a Five College Calendar which conveniently lists events at the five institutions; a Five College FM radio station (WFCR); the Hampshire Inter-Library Center (a joint depository for expensive, but relatively little-used material); and a student coordinating board for promoting and aiding cooperative student ventures.

Academic Structure

Studies at Hampshire College are organized within broad fields of inquiry represented by four Schools: Humanities and Arts, Natural Science and Mathematics, Social Science, and Language and Communication. Organization of the curriculum around Schools instead of the traditional departments encourages more multidisciplinary activities.

As students progress through the three Divisions, they move toward greater independence in study. However, this independence does not mean there is little contact with faculty. Every student has a faculty adviser to help plan and implement an individual program for each Division.

Division I (Basic Studies) introduces students to the aims and methods of liberal arts education at Hampshire College. This is done through close examination of particular topics in small seminars, covering disciplines in all four Schools. Students learn how to understand their own educational needs and abilities, how to do independent study, and how to use the conceptual and research tools or skills and techniques of each chosen discipline.

Division II (School Studies) students develop a concentration in one field or combining several fields, while continuing to explore other areas. Students determine with their faculty advisers what they want to achieve in their concentration, and design a program of study that will allow them to explore in depth one or more disciplines and to broaden their knowledge of the linkages among disciplines. Off-campus field study for all or part of an academic year is encouraged for upper division students.

Division III (Advanced Studies) occupies the students with advanced work in their chosen concentrations and integrative seminars in which broad and complex topics requiring the application of several disciplines are encountered.

Competency examinations regulate advancement between the Divisions. The examination process is one of Hampshire College's unconventional features; it is characterized by the following principles:

- In Division I, a total of four examinations are taken—one for each School. The single examinations for Divisions II and III are based on the student's individual concentration and may involve more than one School.
- Students play a major role in designing their own individualized exams by working with their faculty adviser, instructors, and members of an evaluating team in devising examination questions or tasks.
- Examinations are ungraded—pass is the only mark of record for successful completion of Division I examinations; Divisions II and III examinations may be marked pass or distinction.
- Examinations may take many forms: for example, a lecture, take-home essay, mock trial, conventional classroom examination, computer program, musical composition or performance, or laboratory research.
- Students may elect to take an examination at any time during the academic year, having determined their readiness with a faculty adviser. However, a three-week reading and examination period is set aside at the end of the Spring term when students and faculty give examinations their undivided attention.
- Examinations are retrospective, testing knowledge and skills acquired through past effort, and they are also prospective, measuring competences useful for the student's further work at Hampshire and beyond.

Requirements for graduation include successful completion of examination for each Division and completion of all Division III work. Thus some students may be recommended for graduation after three years of study; others may take as long as five or six years, depending on their program and initiative.

Special Programs

In addition to the offerings of each of the four Schools, several programs have been devised which cut across school and traditional subject-matter boundaries.

The Law Program attempts to cultivate in all students an awareness of law and an understanding of its principles and importance in our daily lives. This is done through a number of multidisciplinary courses and seminars offered by the Schools, plus student-selected independent study and field work. As in many other areas of the Hampshire curriculum, student initiative has been responsible for planning and developing several courses for the Law Program.

The Early Identification Program is a natural outgrowth of Hampshire College's commitment to community service. EIP was created to demonstrate nationally how a liberal arts college could use its resources to help economically and culturally disadvantaged children realize their full human potential.

A number of fifth graders from public schools in the nearby industrial city of Holyoke are selected each year and continue in the program for eight years. Hampshire students and faculty work in conjunction with Holyoke residents and teachers during EIP's year-round operation to help raise the children's educational aspirations. Guaranteed scholarships for those successfully completing thr program provide incentive for participants to prove themselves worthy and capable of going on to college.

The Human Development Program encourages students to explore and understand various aspects of the individual's growth process. Each term a series of common experiences such as lectures, films, demonstrations, and workshops deals with a specific theme, such as "Human Liberation toward Freedom and Dignity." In addition, seminars (led by faculty from all four Schools) present different approaches to the study of human development.

Campus Life

The House Concept

Hampshire is a residential college. As such, it attempts to create an environment sufficiently attractive that students will want to live on campus, in opposition to a trend toward off-campus housing at many schools. Thus Hampshire College offers its students a sense of freedom and shared responsibility in residential life commensurate with the latitude of choice in the general curriculum. This is done in two ways. First, the College has a diversity of housing styles and several different modes of living and dining. Second, the House system was conceived as a way of creating community feeling by emphasizing human sensitivity and by integrating academic and residential life.

Each of the five Houses is a coeducational residence center for about 250 students, with facilities for a Housemaster, and the Housemaster's family and staff. Rooms are singles and doubles arranged in both coeducational and noncoeducational suites of from four to twenty students. Hampshire has both larger dormitory-style Houses and smaller apartment-like complexes. In the latter, students may either cook for themselves in their suites, or they may purchase meals in one of several College dining facilities.

Under the guidance of the Housemaster, who is also a member of the College faculty, the House becomes a governing and intellectual entity. Each House has its own special series of courses, lectures, and films which complement the College's academic curriculum. House courses place no restriction on subject, format, or length, and may be offered or taken by any person within the community. These may or may not be academic in nature, but students often use them to prepare for divisional exams. Recent House courses have included painting, women's studies, gourmet cooking, auto mechanics and self-defense.

Activities

Students at Hampshire have organized a diversified program of activities. Thee range from Climax (the student newspaper) to art exhibits, theater groups, and musical groups such as the Hampshire College Chorus and the Brass Choir. The Third World Organization welcomes as members all Black, Latino, and Asian students. Every week a number of different lectures, films, or concerts are held on campus, in addition to the regular activities. And, of course, there is a multitude of activities and events always available on the other four campuses in the area.

The Outdoors Program

Hampshire College has no formal varsity athletics or required physical education classes. Instead, it offers the Outdoors Program: voluntary, coeducational activities stressing involvement with nature and development of physical skills that can be sued over a lifetime.

Briefly, the goals of the program are: to provide for recreational needs of the college community; to introduce to the outdoors individuals who might otherwise remain oblivious to it; to encourage some fusion of the intllectual with the physical; and, to devlop particular skills (such as whitewater boating and mountaineering) for interested persons.

Through the Outdoors Program, every student can take advantage of Hampshire's attractive physical setting and its accessibility to outstanding recreational resources. Hikes and camping trips are scheduled for all seasons, in the Holyoke Range bordering the southern edge of Hampshire's campus, and in the mountains of northern New England and New York. Students also ski cross country on campus trails and practice kayaking in the Hampshire Pond before running local rivers. Other activities include cycling, canoeing, rock climbing, and archery, as well as informal games of soccer, volleyball, basketball, tennis, and touch football on campus and with a few other schools.

College Governance

Emphasis on decentralization and self-government is apparent in the organization of Hampshire's governance, as established by its constitution.

Ultimate authority for governance of the College is vested in the twenty-four member Board of Trustees. The Board includes one faculty and one student Trustee, each elected by their respective constituency. Other members include a broad range of men and women representing different facets of American higher education, business, and government. In addition, there are six working committees of the Board, and each of these has student and faculty representatives serving as full voting members.

The administration of the College is under the supervision of the President, Charles R. Longsworth. He is the chief executive officer, and acts as the principal medium of communication between the Board of Trustees and the faculty, students, and alumni. The Vice President, Robert C. Birney, acts as the College's second officer and substitutes for the President at his request or whenever appropriate. Faculty development and supervision of the academic program are responsibilities of the Dean of the College, Myron J. Lunine, plus the four School Deans. Each School has student participants who contribute to the current activities and long-range planning in courses, programs, and faculty development.

Mount Holyoke

SOUTH HADLEY, MASS. -- Mount Holyoke begins its 137th year on Thursday, September 6. Students will return to a campus that looks the same, though the summer has been one for catching up on repairs and improvements and maintenance. The large freshman class that enters, numbering 515, will add to an underestimatedly large return of upper classmen so that housing on campus is used in very full measure, and some creative thinking had to go into finding new accommodations for several students. In an era when many college campuses are faced with empty beds, it's a happy problem, though it is a problem, with which to grapple. "Mount Holyoke is chock full," says Ruth E. Warfel, Dean of Students, "as a larger number than projected early in the spring, have elected to return to the campus in the fall, and not to take leaves of absence although they indicated that they might."

Founded in 1837 by Mary Lyon, Mount Holyoke is the oldest continuing institution of higher education for women. This will be its third academic year since its reaffirmation in the fall of 1971 to remain a college for women. Faculty, students and administrative staff are continuing to seek ways to make that commitment mean something special, not only in terms of who attends the College, but how they learn and what they learn, how they teach and what they teach.

There are constant alterations in courses and course content, and among the listings, for example, of courses that deal with women, are The Woman in Europe, an offering of the History Department, American Women Through their Writings, an interdisciplinary course offered by the Departments of English and sociology, Sex and Politics, offered by the department of political science, The Social Roles of Women, and Socialization and the Family, both offered by the department of Sociology and Anthropology, and Roman Women; fictional and historical, offered by the Classics Department.

Freshman seminars at Mount Holyoke are a recent addition to the curriculum and this year include Failure and Success in America, a seminar which will evaluate via several basic documents of American history, "how widely diverging writers of great perception looked at the nation's past and predicted its future;" from Opera to Literature, "a study of great works of literature which are also great operas;" Mathematical Models in Psychology, which will explore "both the rewards and perils of mathematicizing the social sciences."

The cultural agenda will be full, and plans presently in the works include a dance concert on September 13 and 14, a symposium on Cosmology on October 12 and 13, a cultural weekend planned by the Afro-American Society on October 11 - 14, a Laboratory Theatre production of "La Rone" on October 18 - 21, and again October 25 - 28. Concerts such as Phillip de Fremery, guitarist on October 19 and the Warbeke Concert given by the Bucharest String Quartet on November 15 will heighten the fall. In December, Allen Bonde, Assistant Professor Music and Sharon de Fremery will give a piano concert, and there will in addition, be concerts throughout the year by the Mount Holyoke choral groups.

The fall brings the annual celebration of Founder's Day --- this year on November 11, an always special all-college event. There will be a Christmas vesper service on December 2 and the Laboratory Theatre will present "Spoon River Anthology" from December 7 to 11.

courses and programs. This will be Mount Holyoke's third Winter Term and from the outset, the program has succeeded in involving a good number of faculty and students and even Five-College students. There is a special feeling about the month of January at Mount Holyoke and more and more it is shared by students from Hampshire, Smith, Amherst, and the University.

February gets back to business and a symposium on "Women in Business" is bound to attract a large audience of both men and women in the valley. The Lab Theatre production "'Tis a Pity She's a Whore" follows in mid-March. There will be another dance concert in April, the 51st annual Glascock poetry readings are scheduled for the weekend of April 26th and the final play of the Laboratory Theatre season, "The Effect of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Marigolds" is scheduled for May 9 - 14.

The social season, still to be expanded, will include the Chris Rhodes band on September 15th, a formal dance as part of the Fall weekend (October 5-6), with entertainment by Brewer & Shipley, Winter Term festivities throughout the month of January, Winter Weekend on February 22 - 24, and Spring Weekend, May 3 - 5.

New buildings? No, although the groundbreaking for the new Willits-Hallowell Center is scheduled for the spring of 1974, but repairs, improvements, and all those things a maintenance department must do to refurbish, all have been done over the summer, so that students will return to a facility in good working order, and in very good shape.

There will be increased course exchanges this fall between the Five Colleges and Mount Holyoke expects to welcome about 350 students from the other four campuses who are taking courses in South Hadley during the first semester.

There's a new Dean of the Faculty at Mount Holyoke, Emily L. Wick, Professor of Chemistry, formerly of M.I.T., an avid sailor, experienced administrator, provocative teacher. She's looking forward to a very interesting year, to learning all about the people and possibilities at Mount Holyoke and in the valley. "I expect a good time as well as many challenges."

Mount Holyoke has always been strong in the sciences and offers the availability of sophisticated equipment to undergraduates.

Scenes from the Smith College Campus

When the 96th academic year begins at Smith College on Monday, September 10, it is expected that there will be a total undergraduate enrollment of approximately 2,646, including a freshman class of about 700 women. Applications for the Class of 1977 numbered 2,482; 1,317 were accepted. In the fall of 1972 there was a total of 2,574 students enrolled, 2,362 of whom were in Northampton (the others were away on exchange programs, abroad, etc.) There were 43 men at Smith. At the beginning of the second semester there were 2,598 enrolled, 2,374 in Northampton, of whom 39 were men. Forty-eight male undergraduates are expected at Smith this fall. (While males can study here for a semester or a year, they cannot receive an undergraduate degree from Smith.) In 1972, 2,406 women applied; 1,205 were accepted; 618 came.

Smith College began in the conscience of a New England woman. The sum of money with which the first land was bought, the first buildings erected, and the foundations of the endowment laid was the bequest of Sophia Smith who, finding herself at the age of sixty-five the sole inheritor of a large fortune, left it for the founding of a college for women because after much perplecity, deliberation, and advice, she had concluded that in this way she could best fulfill a moral obligation.

The advice had its inception in the mind of a New England minister. From John Morton Greene, Sophia Smith received suggestions which she pondered and discussed, and from among which she finally accepted that which we must acclaim as the wisest and most beneficent. The idea that Mr. Greene presented and Sophia Smith adopted is clearly expressed in a passage in Sophia Smith's will that must be regarded as their joint production, drafted by him, amended and approved by her. The language is as follows:

"I hereby make the following provisions for the establishment and maintenance of an Institution for the higher education of young men, with the design to furnish for my own sex means and facilities for education equal to those which are afforded now in our Colleges to young men.

It is my opinion that by the higher and more thorough Christian education of women, what are called their "wrongs" will be redressed, their wages adjusted, their weight of influence in reforming the evils of society will be greatly increased, as teachers, as writers, as mothers, as members of society, their power for good will be incalcuably enlarged."

Later, after enumerating the subjects which still form a vital part of the curriculum of the College, she adds: "And in such other studies as coming times may develop or demand for the education of women and the progress of the race, I would have the education suited to the mental and physical wants of woman. It is not my design to render my sex any the less feminine, but to develop as fully as may be the powers of womanhood, and furnish women with the means of usefulness, happiness and honor, now withheld from them." She further directed that "without giving preference to any sect or denomination, all the education and all the discipline shall be pervaded by the Spirit of Evangelical Christian Religion."

When one considers what would today be regarded as the somewhat narrow and puritanical type of culture in which the authors of these sentences were living, one cannot fail to be impressed by their wisdom, liberality, and far-sightedness. The general terms in which the purposes of women's education are defined are perfectly valid today. Provision is made for change of outlook and development in the scope of education. While the fundamentally religious interest of the founder is stressed, the College is kept clear of entanglement with institutional Christianity.

The growth of Smith College is evident enough in the contrast between the small beginnings and the present achievement: between the original corner lot of thirteen acres and a campus of 400 acres, including the astronomy observatory site in Whately; between Sophia Smith's legacy of $400,000 and total assets of $131,480,590, between the first class of fourteen and the 1971-72 enrollment of 2,550; between the eleven graduates of 1879 and an alumnae roster of 35,281. Expansion has meant no change in the ideals set for the College by the founders and carried on by all the great company who have loved and worked for Smith College. By putting quality first, by coveting the best, by cherishing the values for which the College has always stood, those who serve it now are united in devotion and in commitment with all who have served in the past. It is this corporate loyalty which has always been, and will continue to be, the abiding strength of Smith College.

Some Bars And Restaurants In The Area

By MARTY KELLEY

Amherst - Variety is the spice of life. The longer you spend in the Amherst area, the clearer the axiom gets. And as you stumble through your weekends at the University, it's apparent that your pocketbook governs your spirit. And so in the end it's different strokes for different folks.

Yeah some students have more expensive tastes. Some students have more money. But no matter how we look at it, in some small way all of us are touched by the bar and restaurant bonanza in the Amherst area. . .whether we can afford it or not.

Atmosphere is very important to the party going restaurant eating student of our Amherst commune. With all dining commons closed on weekends, we turn to the street for food and drink. . .or do we. . .

Suppose you didn't have a car. Well put on your sneakers and truck on down to either the Bluewall or the Hatch and of course as a backup there's the coffee shop. The price of beef hurts the coffee shop cheeseburger but for solace you can get bargain specials at the Hatch on weekends like turkey dinners for $1.29. And for you wino-dinos don't forget the $.59 Spaghetti specials on Saturday. The bar should be open by 5 p.m. to neutralize the taste.

And the Bluewall. . .well to many that's home. You can't beat her hot lunch service for less than what McDonald's offers. The lines diminish almost as fast as that roast beef on rye. And if you hang there you can get dinner for less than $2 and then comes the band.

Tuesday through Saturday you can boogie all you want at the Bluewall with the likes of the Ed Vadas Blues band, all of Sweetpie, and Big Screamin' McGrew. . .And you. Monday it's Cosell and Monday night football the professional way and on Sunday it's amateur style with WUMV-TV coverage of UMass football in its entirety both home and away. . .you see, you get a little bit of everything at the Wall. . .

Also within walking distance is everybody's Pub. A UMass degree isn't valid without a Pub mug in your room. If you want to get glazed before dinner you can always hit the very popular Friday afternoon happy hour. That night the frats and sororities have their night out as hero Frank Sullivan (DJ) returns for another couple of semesters. It's also kosher for you beeries to get to the Pub for DJ's screaming following Saturday's football games. If you can still see.

With groups like the Deadly Nightshade and Some of My Best Friends sharing center stage at the Pub, the general atmosphere takes away from her kitchen. But don't underestimate it. The Pub Club is one of the more tastier snadwiches in town and Beef and Beer nights make the trip to town rewarding. . .Don't forget the onion rings.

And of course every community like ours has a Hungry U. . .Our's is adjacent to Oddfellow's Hall and above the copy service. You should be able to get the measure of both.

Now as you ponder atmosphere, some simply can do without it when they eat and drink among other things. And Voila. . .you have the Drake and Quicksilver. . .And they're both an attraction yet to be matched.

Once the excitement at Quicksilver stemmed from the cockroaches dancing in the corner and guessing when next the checkered tablescloths would be changed. Well, they've been changed now as well as the general structure and overall condition of the beer drinking, shortorder hall. But the clientele remains the same. . .Our unshaven youth with the straggles and the answers to tomorrow. . .

And the Drake. . .Well they call her Amherst. All sorts of everybodies go to the Rathskellar to either talk about a new course, watch the Bruins on the Cable, or enjoy Rheingold, the most inexpensive beer in town. Also the surroundings do look like a cellar and as well it's inexpensive too. But a floor above you meet the antithesis and some pretty friendly waitresses too at the Village Inn Cocktail Lounge. The kitchen stays open to 2 a.m. But at that hour you'll be drinking coke.

In town Barsellotti's, the Rustic Roost, and even the Legion Home around the corner used to be redneck but times have changed and more and more students are pouring quiet drafts. There and as well as Chequers on University Drive are the best spots for what one could call an uninterrupted beer. Chequers has the Italian food that's comparable to the Aqua Vita restaurant before the bridge entering Northampton, but the finest food around is even further by car.

They call it Miss Flo's diner and she may outlive the university. For a Sunday night meal just like the way you used to have it at home, the Florence diner for anything from an inexpensive well-dressed meatloaf to a clam plate is your show. (Yes, we do have our local McDonald's, Hardees, and Howard Johnson's, all on Rt. 9 just beyond the Zayre parking lot.)

If it's late Sunday night and you got those study munchies, a couple of pleasantries could be Bell's pizza house on University Drive (hot Italian grinders) and Domino's pizza (not because old Domino has good pizza but he will deliver free and so will papa Bell.)

For entertainment food and booze the list in the Collegiate community is endless. From beer caterers such as Four Season's package store on Rt. 9 to the ice machine on College St. next to Cumberland Farms, you have commercial convienieces all around you. But that has to make sense. We all have to eat don't we. .

What To Do In The Amherst Area

By STEVE TRIPOLI

Even though UMass isn't near any great metropolis, the area in which we're located is pretty alive, and if you're tired of the entertainment being offered on campus there are alternatives. This article isn't going to be the definitive statement on everything in the area, but just an outline of a few things which come to mind that you may enjoy.

In Amherst itself there is plenty going on. If you're culturally minded uou can visit Emily Dickinson's House on Main St., but that's only by appointment between 3 and 5 p.m. on Tuesdays. There's also the Jones Library, which contains a lot of stuff by Dickinson and Robert Frost.

If you're an outdoors type there's hunting, fishing, and camping in the area and nearby. Some of the finest fishing in the area is in Quabbin reservoir, just a few miles away on Rte. 202. For camping you can try Sleepy Hollow at East Leverett, Mt. Tom State Reservation, Holyoke-Easthampton, or Lake Wyola Park in Shutesbury. You'll also find Lake Wyola good for swimming.

If there's anything else you're interested in for this general area drop into the Amherst Chamber of Commerce office around the corner from the Lord Jeff. There's plenty of info there and the lady who runs the place is super.

For you ski freaks (the season is creeping up fast!) there are a number of good places within an hour of Amherst. There's Mount Tom in Holyoke, Berkshire Snow Basin, Cummington, Berkshire East, Charlemont, and Mount Mohawk, Shelburne.

There are also some other places of interest in the area that don't really come under any specific category. There's the basketball Hall of Fame in Springfield, for one. The hours there are 10 to 5 daily and 1 to 5 Sundays, and it's located on Alden Street on the Springfield College Campus.

If you're the adventurous type you can take a trip out to Orange, about 25 miles from here, and try parachuting. It'll cost you about $55 for you're first day, but that includes classes and an actual jump. So if you have the bucks and guts that could be an exciting day.

On the historic side there's Old Deerfield, celebrating it's 300th anniversary this year. There are a lot of things to see there and a lot of organized stuff going on at the tercentenary celebration.

For nature lovers there's Arcadia Nature Center and Wildlife Sanctuary in Easthampton. It's one of the 44 sanctuaries of the Massachusetts Audubon Society, and it's a real nice place. You can get a map of the place at the Chamber of Commerce office in Amherst, if you're interested.

The Granby Dinosaur Museum (Rte. 202) is a pretty interesting place, too. You can go there and view actual dinosaur footprints made over 200,000,000 years ago. It's pretty fascinating.

These are just a few, and hopefully a fairly representative few, of the area's attractions. Check them out, and you can probably spend yourselves quite a few interesting weekends.

Attorney For Students

The Attorney for Students Office will open its fourth year in a new location. The office is in 432 Student Union on the top floor directly over the Hatch on the East Side of the building.

All regularly enrolled graduate and undergraduate students are free to consult with Mr. Howland on any legal problem. If active representation by counsel beyond the resources of the office is required, students are referred at their own expense. Most problems are able to be resolved in the office at no additional cost.

Last year between 30 and 40 students were advised daily. Appointments are not necessary or recommended except in special circumstances. Office hours are between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. daily except Fridays.

Mr. Howland is available by answering service and radio paging during the days at 545-0341 and when the office is closed call 256-8448.

Persons who are arrested should call Mr. Howland first, he will take whatever steps are required including other calls if requested.

Lecture Note Program

Once again, this year as last, the Student Senate Lecture Note Program will offer notes for classes. This year, however, the price of the notes will be lowered by approximately 20% to reflect more effective management of the services resources. The Note Service is also running a Print Shop available to students who are in need of offset printing services. The various RSO Groups will also use this service for their printing/duplicating needs.

Money earned by the Lecture Note Print Shop is used to offset costs of the lecture notes, thereby making a price reduction to the students possible.

Notes will be $2.00 per half semester for 100 minutes per week and $3.00 per half semester for 150 minutes per week. Anyone having questions about either the Lecture Note Program or the Senate Print Shop please call 5-2060.

UMass Summer In Review

BY MARK VOGLER

Heated issues wait to be resolved at the University this fall after a summer which was not quite as hot.

The parking situation, the rising food costs, and pending litigation on the loyalty oath are a few of several problems that students will have to address themselves to.

Students will undoubtly have the administration on the firing line — especially on the continuing battle on parking policy.

The summer was marked by several demonstrations on campus protesting the proposed parking fees now in effect. University employees and students paraded around Whitmore Administration Building with signs denouncing the administration's stance while Carol A. Drew, president of Local 1776 announced that the union would sue each member of the Board of Trustees individually, contending that the new parking fees "are illegal and discriminatory."

UMass officials were attacked on another front when a member of the Graduate Environmental Engineering Association declared that a program designed to reduce auto traffic in the center of campus would have adverse effects on the environment.

Because the parking policy is an intergral part of the no-fare transit system at the university, a convenient service for local commuters — faculty, staff and students — is being viewed unfavorably.

Students won't have many kind words for the Food Service Department when new policies are implemented to cut out the spiraling food costs.

Although director Joel Stoneham has declined to comment on how his department is coming to grips with the situation, the University acknowledges a "very serious problem."

Public Affairs Director Daniel M. Melley has said that Food Services "will have to kind ways to cut corners without sacrificing the quality of food."

Speculation about a $50-increase in board for the spring semester has come from the office of one student government leader, but the University has discounted that rumor.

In a memorandum to the Rents and Fees Committee, Stoneham indicated a food cost spiral of 18 percent as of June 15 coupled with an additional 30 percent increase after Phase Five were projected.

Rents and Fees Chairman Richard G. Savini said the figures indicated about a million dollars "to be made up by the department."

He said half of the deficit was erased earlier by a 10 percent budget price escalation and added economies as of June 25 which would save the department 14 percent more of its total food costs.

Savini said the remaining $500,000 would have to be made up "somehow." The way Stoneham decides to go about it could add insult to injury. His department has been heavily criticized in past years, most recently for food thefts.

Melley and Savini outlined some of the cost cutting or income increasing methods they said are under consideration.

Melley said the elimination of the "seconds" policy is being discussed along with dropping "some of the expensive foods" from the menu.

Savini said other alternatives discussed by the Food Services Department include termination of several dining commons employes, menu alterations, cutbacks in time alotted for lunch hours, an increase in soybean anolog consumption and addition of more "special nights."

A "special night" is a night when a menu item is offered extra. Savini said ice cream and other desert specials would be offered so patrons won't "load up on roast beef" and other high priced foods.

Current cost of board at UMass is $321.75 a semester for a 15-meal plan and $284.75 for 10 meals a week. The 15-meal plan has increased $15 a semester over last year.

A five-month overdue verdict on the state employes loyalty oath court case could result in the termination of hundreds of faculty and staff members at the University — or pose a direct challange to a U. S. Supreme Court ruling.

These are two of the "likely possibilities acknowledged by Judge Joseph S. Mitchell of Middlesex Superior Court after hearing the case in March brought by plaintiffs who have refused to sign the 1949 legislative enactment.

Mitchell said he was "purposely sitting on" the case because "it's difficult to make a decision either way." He postponed any decision over the summer months in order to allow the administration, faculty and staff members to return from their vacations.

Should Mitchell issue a favorable verdict in behalf of those who have refused to sign the loyalty oath, he could be challenging a Nixon Court decision made four years ago which reversed the ruling of a Massachusetts district court that a loyalty oath for teachers was unconstitutional.

"It's awfully difficult to in actuality overrule something the highest court in the land has upheld as constitutional," Mitchell said.

"Since the constitutionality of public employees taking the oath is now being considered — and teachers are public employees — the possibility of overrulling a Supreme Court decision exists."

Looking at the opposite alternative, he said a verdict upholding the loyalty oath as constitutional, could create an "emotional" situation, "especially if it leads to the termination of employees."

Whatever verdict Mitchell makes will "undoubtedly" be appealed by one of the parties, legal counsel for the oath opponents have said.

The case developed last November when three faculty members from the UMass-Boston campus filed a class-action suit against university personnel offices of all three University campuses (Amherst, Boston, and Worcester), seeking to bar dismissal of anyone employed between Oct. 29, 1969 and Sept. 21, 1972 who had not ascribed to the oath.

In January, the UMass-Boston plantiffs, represented by Stephen Oleskey, joined their cause with Atty. William A. Norris of Cummington, legal counsel for 18 faculty and staff members from UMass-Amherst and

Walking And Parking In Amherst

The Town of Amherst is gearing up for the onslaught of foot and vehicular traffic as the area schools and colleges reopen during the week of September 3-8.

A major campaign is planned to inform the public of the laws and regulations concerning motor vehicle courtesy and pedestrian safety.

Chapter 89 section 11 of the General Laws of Massachusetts requires that motorists yield the right of way to pedestrians on crosswalks, by slowing down or stopping if need be. Vehicles must not block crosswalks. Vehicles may not pass other vehicles which have stopped to permit a pedestrian to pass.

The law also prohibits pedestrians from "jaywalking," that is, failing to walk within crosswalks when they are available.

A banner reminding the motoring public to stop for pedestrians on crosswalks will be displayed above South Pleasant Street, adjacent to the Town Common, from August 27 through September 10.

September 5th is designated PUBLIC AWARENESS DAY, at which time Police Officers and School Crossing Guards will pass along thoroughfares in the Center of Town handing out notices to drivers and pedestrians alike, urging them to obey the laws, and noting violations.

Posters will be prominently displayed around Town bringing attention to Public Awareness Day and reminding the public that School is opening and the laws must be obeyed.

School buses will be on the road beginning Tuesday, September 4th, and motorists are reminded of the law requiring all traffic to stop for school buses displaying flashing red lights as they load and discharge passengers.

School buses will be allowed to use the new Cushman Bridge, which is still under final construction, the Board of Public Works has assured the Town Manager. Therefore, temporary routes for buses to avoid the Bridge will not be necessitated.

The opening of the new Fort River School has caused some changes in the positioning of School Crossing Guards and in the painting of crosswalks. The crossing guard stationed in previous years at Main Street and the East Street Common will be relocated, and a new crosswalk painted, at the intersection of Main and South East Streets, approximately 100 feet easterly of the former location.

Beginning September 4, School Crossing Guards, in uniform, will be posted from 8 a.m. to 9 a.m. and from 2 p.m. to 3 p.m. at the following locations:

1. North Pleasant Street at Marks Meadow School-Officers: Walter R. Babb and Charles E. Drake, Sr. (alternate)
2. North Pleasant and Fearing Streets-Officer: Clarence W. Thomas
3. East Pleasant and Strong Streets-Officer: Joseph E. Sarna
4. Chestnut Street at the Amherst Regional High School-Officer: Raymond J. Follett
5. Main and South East Streets-Officer: Gerrold O. Lamb, Sr.
6. College and South East Streets-Officer: Kenneth R. Crossman
7. West Street and Mill Lane-Officer: Lawrence E. Whitcomb
8. West Street at Crocker Farm School-Officer: Paul A. Vlach
9. West Street and Pomeroy Lane-Officer: Kenneth D. Grimm

SUBSTITUTES: Leslie B. Heath, Sr. and Kim E. Keegan

In recognition of the need of University Students to unload their belongings, parking restrictions will be lifted and parking will be allowed along Sunset Avenue, Butterfield Terrace and Eastman Lane from September 2nd through September 7th only.

a group of 33 from Berkshire Community College.

The state decided to combine the separate cases despite Norris' objection. He felt each should be heard separately to assure equal representation for the three groups.

Aside from these hot issues which may stir up some heated debates among administrators, faculty, staff and students there are perhaps other tense areas which haven't surfaced yet.

Whether it can be attributed to the political-social environment shaped by Watergate, UMass administrators aren't saying much these days — at least not to the press.

Public Affairs Director Daniel Melley has been transformed into the Ron Ziegler of the Amherst campus. Administrators don't want to be quoted anymore — "Dan Melley is the man to see if you want any information."

But then again, it's going to be one of those semesters where students don't have to grab a national issue and follow the trend of other colleges across the country. They have enough here to shout about. And if an administrator bottles up to the press, you really can't blame him. If he says the wrong word, the students may be shouting at him.

The only thing that can save the administration from heartburn this fall is apathy! What can save the students from apathy?

Help For The Handicapped

Accessibility to dormitories, classrooms, lavatories, auditoriums, and other campus facilities has long been a problem for the physically handicapped. In the past few years, however, many strides have been made in eliminating the common architectural barriers. An individual in a wheelchair can now travel from Southwest to the School of Education without having to scale a single curb. The vast majority of buildings on campus have at least one ramped entranceway. A good many buildings also have at least one pair of adapted lavatories. Because of the vast number of buildings and paths on campus, it would be impractical to enumerate all of the adaptations here. However, a booklet will be available mid-September which details the accessibility of every building on campus, including the location of ramps, lavatories, and elevators. The booklet also has a color coded map outlining all the paths on campus which have ramped curbs for wheelchair passage.

This booklet is the result of hundreds of hours of work by Ms. Marie Desmond, a physically handicapped graduate student. A copy of the booklet may be obtained, free of charge, from heads of residence or from the Campus Center Information Desk.

A new project, which will improve mobility for blind students, is underway and should be completed sometime this fall. It entails marking all the elevators in the commonly used buildings with raised numerals to indicate the floor locations and the location of the emergency buttons.

An additional project planned for this year is to mark paths and ramps into buildings and lavatories with the Universal Wheelchair symbol. Hopefully, this will not only improve the students' ability to find his way around campus, but also increase the University community's awareness of and exposure to this growing majority.

The Advisory Committee for Handicapped Student Affairs is presently the focus of the developing programs and projects for the physically handicapped. Students having questions or problems related to any facet of University life are invited to contact Ms. Judy Sharpe at 52671, Ext. 28. Ms. Sharpe is acting counselor for the committee and has successfully dealt with such areas as housing, scheduling, financial aid, and coordination of various services and offices on and off campus. All inquiries will be kept confidential.

WUMV To Air UMass Sports

Amherst - It's been said by more than one critic that the University of Massachusetts is 15 years behind its time in television. Well, Marty Kelley, a senior with his own major in sport journalism, plans to silence critics a bit. For sport and television is Kelley's new calling card.

Since final exams last spring Kelley has put together a nine town, 4 independent cable service, 22,000 home network for televising UMass sports events and other public affairs features of the university in conjunction with the newly formed WUMV-TV student group. As Sports Director Kelley will pilot the sports program that will consist of televising in its entirety the 11 game University of Massachusetts football season, most of the basketball and lacrosse season, and as well plans are now being laid to televise the Niagara basketball live to a waiting audience at the Boyden gymnasium this February.

The Sports Network will be sponsored for football by the Bluewall which is the site for the original airing of the sports events on the wide screen at the bar that can accommodate close to 1,000 students. Kelley has announced that the network will also include Channel 8 in Amherst and Pelham and Channel 12 Greenfield over the Pioneer Valley cable system. As well UMass football can be seen over the Video Enterprise System in Holyoke and South Hadley to over 10,000 homes on Channel 13. Spectrum Communications covering West Springfield, Agawam, and Westfield have also signed for the fall on Channel 28.

The first televised sporting event will be this Saturday's Holy Cross game to be seen at the Bluewall this Sunday night at nine o'clock. In Amherst time is set for Tuesday night at 7 and for 6:30 p.m. on Monday night over the Spectrum syndicate. Greenfield and Holyoke will air UMass football Monday and Tuesday night respectively.

Kelley, former sports director for WMUA radio and mike of UMass sports will handle the play-by-play assisted in the booth by senior Earl Barroll, a well-known and rather experienced football writer. WUMV-TV station manager Billy McKinnon will produce and direct the technical aspect while David Bunker will be the executive director.

1973/74 Celebrity Series

Gennady Rozdestvensky

A visit by the Leningrad Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Guest Conductor Gennady Rozdestvensky, will highlight the 1973/74 Celebrity Series, which includes four other major concerts under the sponsorship of the Fine Arts Council. The Leningrad Symphony Orchestra, in its first visit to this country since 1962, will appear in concert in Curry Hick Cage on November 19, 1973, for a single performance. The oldest symphony Orchestra in the Soviet Union, the Leningrad Philharmonic was found in 1882 as the Imperial Court Orchestra. For their visit here the Orchestra will offer Symphony No. 9 by Shostakovich, Violin Concerto by Tishchenko and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4 in F minor.

Ralph Kirkpatrick, Harpsichordist, and one of the world's great musician-scholars will open the Celebrity Series on Wednesday, October 17, and Thursday, October 18. Mr. Kirkpatrick will offer two entirely different programs for his University audiences.

On Wednesday, March 20, and Thursday, March 21, The Council will present The New York Pro Musica Antiqua in their production of the 17th Century Opera "La Dafna" by Marco Da Gagliano. The Opera will be fully staged and costumed and music will be performed on authentic period instruments.

The Celebrity Series will close in April with the appearance here of the brilliant pianist, Andre Watts, and the Springfield Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Robert Gutter. Mr. Watts will perform Brahams' Piano Concerto No. 1 in D. Works by Professor Charles Fussell of the UMass/Amherst faculty will also be performed by the Orchestra, as well as those of Berlioz and Debussy.

Barbara Stewart

You'll love STEWART'S COLLEGE TOWNE! That is, you will if you love the look of today's fashions; from sportswear to accessories, from coats and jackets to hand-made jewelry. As the Fashion Director of the most exciting young store in the Five College area, I'm delighted to introduce you to a whole new fashion experience.

Stewart's College Towne is located just ten minutes from campus, in the heart of downtown Northampton. The store has a tradition that goes back more than seventy years, but that's about the only thing 'old' about us. Bob Levitt, the proprietor, has been in the women's clothing business for eleven years. The sales staff is all home-grown, and we wouldn't have it any other way. One of the secrets of our success is the personal service the gals on the sales floor can offer based on years of experience dealing with customers from the Five College community. The Fashion Director (that's me) is in real life Mrs. Bob Levitt. My fashion experience was gained in both New York and Dallas, two of the most clothes conscious cities in the country.

Now, you ask, what do we sell? Answer: Sportswear; pants, shirts, sweaters, and skirts with a blazer or two besides; Ready-to-wear; dresses, car coats, winter coats and ski parkas: Accessories; handbags, mittens, hats, scarves, and hand hammered bronze jewelry. Our clothes are fun and easy to wear. Our approach is easy and low-key. Our prices will make you happy and so will the coffee and home-baked something we serve to the early birds each Saturday morning. Why not stop in and see for yourself?

Continuing Ed. Serves

By JOHN FISHER

John Jones is a veteran, recently returned from Vietnam. Before he went into the service, he had earned almost 40 credits at a community college. Now he is working as a teacher's assistant in a public school, and he hopes to complete his undergraduate work and become a full teacher.

Fred Smith is the president of a small corporation that has almost doubled in size during the last two years. He has recently become aware that management techniques that worked very well when his company was operating out of his garage will no longer serve him. For this reason, he spent three days last month attending a conference on management techniques for the small businessman.

Jane Doe had completed three years of college before she dropped out to support her husband while he attended graduate school. By the time he had finished his studies, Jane was pregnant with her first child and never went back to school. Now the children are almost college age and she is wondering whether it is too late for her to resume her academic career. Drawing on a new sense of personal worth which she gained from a non-credit workshop on attitudes about women, she is planning to meet next week with a counselor who will help her with the problems associated with returning to the University after an absence of almost twenty years.

Even though their stories are quite different, these three people have one important thing in common — they are all "irregular students" in the University's Division of Continuing Education. Above all else, the Division rests on the assumption that education is a life-long process. While most parts of the University are geared toward "regular students", who traditional four-year academic pattern, the Division of Continuing Education seeks to find and serve the "irregular students", whether those students are looking for a one-day conference on some specific problem relating to their profession, or a program leading to an academic degree.

Although the Division of Continuing Education was founded less than three years ago, it is already active in a great many areas. Chief among these are its conference services, its academic extension program, and its program of continuing education for women. Although its range of activities is a broad one, virtually all the programs of the Division are supported by the revenues they generate or by trust funds. This self-funding provision means that the Division of Continuing Education provides a wide range of services to the citizens of the Commonwealth with almost no state assistance.

Conference Services

Of all the activities of the Division of Continuing Education, those of its Conference Services are perhaps the most varied. The Division can provide facilities and management assistance for all on-campus conferences, seminars, and meetings, which range in size from a handful of people to several thousand. While the average conference may bring less than 50 participants to Amherst, the Division has handled conferences with as many as 7,000 attendees.

Whatever the size of the conference, the conference management staff performs three primary functions. First, it assists in pre-conference planning. This includes determining objectives, selecting speakers and other presonnel, choosing conference dates, and acquiring suitable facilities and equipment.

During the actual program, Continuing Education Staff members accept registrations, collect fees, and provide information and assistance relative to the conference. Conference personnel direct conferees to meeting rooms or reunite a parent with a missing child with equal charm and efficiency.

When the program is concluded, the Division analyzes and evaluates it for the sponsor and provides a financial report to account for monies received and spent.

The diverse nature of the programs provided by Conference Services reflects the varied interests of the citizens of the Commonwealth. Among the 24 conferences scheduled during a recent month were a meeting of insurance company executives, a course on attracting business to a small community, a workshop for journalists on reporting women's news, and a football reunion.

Academic Extension

The second major focus of the Division is its Academic Extension Program. In recent years there has been a movement in higher education to bring the campus into closer contact with the "outside world". While a number of programs have operated from the campus outward, attempting to bring students in contact with people and problems not directly related to the University, Academic Extension seeks to make the academic resources of the University available to those who have been "outside" the University framework until now.

Because of its liberal admissions policy and the flexible nature of its programs, Academic Extension opens up the possibility of a college education to virtually everyone. "We take almost everyone with a high school diploma and many without," says Dr. William Venman, Director of the Division of Continuing Education. "We are more interested in present college performance than we are in old high school records. We don't refuse anyone admission, but we counsel some people not to apply. Generally, we give a student 30 hours of course work and then let him continue toward his degree if his academic average is 2.0 or better, and he submits a satisfactory course plan for the remainder of his work."

The result of this policy of opening the doors of the University to all who are qualified has been the creation of a diverse and highly motivated student population. Students in Academic Extension come from a wide variety of backgrounds. Retired persons and business executives sit side by side in class. Young people who have never before attended college work with professionals who are seeking to advance their careers. Their diversity of outlook makes the Academic Extension courses among the most lively and interesting of those offered by the University.

Students in the Academic Extension program of the Division of Continuing Education are eligible for any undergraduate degree offered by the University, providing that they meet the matriculation requirements for that degree. The Division also offers its own degree, the Bachelor of General Studies. The B.G.S. is a career-oriented degree which can be specially designed to meet the personal and professional needs of a student possessing greater maturity and life-experience than the "regular" undergraduate.

offerings in Pittsfield, Greenfield, and Holyoke. Students in the Division of Continuing Education are also eligible to enroll in regular university courses on a space-available basis.

In addition to its regular programs, Academic Extension also offers college-level courses at any location in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts where sufficient demand exists. Recently, this has taken such forms as the offering of courses for teachers in Concord and the operation of a graduate program at Westover Air Force Base.

Continuing Education for Women

The problems that a woman faces in the academic community can often be very different from thos faced by a man. For this reason, the Division of Continuing Education has set up a special branch of Continuing Education for Women. According to the Director of Continuing Education for Women, Pat Sackrey, "Ideally, the university community should meet the needs of all the people. But right now the needs of women are still being defined and shown to be legitimate. It will be a long time before we can assume that these needs will be met routinely and within the University structure."

To help meet these needs, Continuing Education for Women is now operating the Everywoman's Center in conjunction with Community Development and Human Relations and the University Counseling Center. The Everywoman's Center seeks to provide "a place on campus for women who don't have a place". It is used by women of all ages as a resource center, a place to come in and talk about their classes and going back to school, and a center to organize for special workshops and women's activities.

Among the services of the Everywoman's Center is a counseling service which is available to all women. Although this service is primarily geared to the problems of women who wish to re-enter school after a long period of separation from the academic community, it provides comprehensive vocational, academic, and personal counseling for any woman who is in need of its services.

One of the most popular activities of Continuing Education for Women in Project SELF, a series of noncredit workshops of, by, and for women. The purpose of the Project SELF workshops is to seek to understand how and why being born female has limited the participants' lives and to find ways to break through those limits. The workshops deal with such topics as the relationship of women to society the role of women in the arts, and effecting change in one's own life. Because they follow the model of the support group, in which participants deal with one another on an equal basis, the Project SELF workshops allow for a greater degree of individual initiative than is usually found in the traditional classroom setting.

In the near future, Continuing Education for Women hopes to be able to bring its workshops to communities where such activities have not previously been available. They are also seeking to establish a scholarship fund for women who would not otherwise be able to attend college.

. . . and Other Activities

The activities of the Division of Continuing Education are by no means limited to the areas of Conference Services, Academic Extension, and Continuing Education for Women, however. In its search to find ways to serve the "irregular student" the Division has undertaken many other exciting experiments.

Earlier this year, the University of Massachusetts joined with eleven other major universities and American Educational Publications, a subsidiary of Xerox Corporation, to found University Independent Study, an adult home study project. The U.I.S. Program will permit students who are unable to attend regular college classes to take noncredit university-level courses by mail.

Under the terms of the U.I.S. agreement, the University of Massachusetts supplies a member to the project's Advisor Committee and provides staff members to assist in structuring and developing the U.I.S. courses. Continuing Education Director William Venman is the University's representative on the Project Advisory Committee and the Division has been active in coordinating other UMass activities for the project.

Yet another example of the Division's ability to bring the University's expertise to bear on a particular problem is the Mental Retardation Project. Working in coordination with the Massachusetts Department of Mental Helath, the Division of Continuing Education has set up a clearinghouse to provide interested parties with information on current developments in the field of mental retardation. The Mental Retardation Project also publishes a montly newsletter which keeps subscribers informed on mental retardation activities throughout the Commonwealth.

All of this has come from an organization which did not even exist three years ago. If one were to try to find a single reason for the phenomenal growth of the Division of Continuing Education, it would doubtlessly be: "because the need was there." In the coming years, the Division will continue to devote its efforts to meeting the needs of the "irregular student".

For further information concerning any of the Division's programs, contact the Division of Continuing Education, 920 Campus Center, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Massachusetts 01002 or telephone (413) 545-0905.

FLYING CIRCUS

The paper time machine

STRATEGY & TACTICS is a magazine. It's also a tool: a time machine that enables you to replay the crucial events—past, present, and future—that shape our lives.

Now, instead of merely reading about what's happening, you can explore and experience the alternatives and decision points through the technique of Conflict Simulation.

What is Conflict Simulation?

Conflict Simulation is a way of analyzing a political or military conflict situation. A way that is as intellectually stimulating as a game of chess, and as thorough as a written analysis.

Through the use of the Conflict Simulation (or "game") format, the conflict situation is re-created—so that you are in a position to make the vital decisions and, in the game at least, change the way things were, are, or will be.

What you get

STRATEGY & TACTICS magazine is published bi-monthly. Each issue contains:

★ A ready-to-play conflict-simulation game with a 22 x 28" playing surface, die-cut playing pieces, and complete rules.

★ An analytical article on the same subject as the game in that issue.

★ Other feature articles on historical and military subjects.

★ Game and book reviews, commentary on existing games, and discussions of subscribers' questions.

The magazine is 48+ pages long, and all material is handled in a highly organized (and easily understandable) graphic format.

Games recently published in STRATEGY & TACTICS were: GRUNT (ground combat in Vietnam), LOST BATTLES (tactical combat in Russia, 1941-44), USN (the war in the Pacific, 1941-43), COMBAT COMMAND (tactical combat in Western Europe, 1944).

We also publish a separate line of conflict-simulation games, which you will find listed in the coupon

'Introduction To ESP' Offered By Continuing Ed.

AMHERST, Mass. — Extrasensory perception, an alternative approach to investigating the mental resources inherent in every human being, will be the subject of "Introduction to ESP," a new course offered by the Division of Continuing Education at the University of Massachusetts this fall.

The course is designed to allow the student to study the experiences of others in the area of psychic phenomena and explore his or her own potential psychic ability. It will cover psychical development, spiritual awareness and unfoldment, and self-knowledge. Participants will study the psychical faculty as it operates in their own lives and in their relationships. Through lectures and workshops the instructor will encourage student participation in demonstrations of thought control and concentration techniques.

The instructor, Ms. Claudette L. Kiely, is a lecturer, teacher, writer, and psychic who has experienced ESP since her teens. She is a member of the American Society of Psychical Research (ASPR), ESP Research Associates Foundation, the Holyoke Speakers Club, and president of the Associated Speakers Clubs of Massachusetts and Connecticut. Ms. Kiely has worked with the ASPR in national experiments in astral projection and out-of-body experimentation, and has done psychic counseling in this area.

Explorations into ESP will be held at the Campus Center on the UMass campus. The $75 fee includes text materials and instruction. Classes are from Sept. 12 through Nov. 14, Wednesday from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. Further information is available from the Division of Continuing Education, 920 Campus Center, UMass, Amherst 01002, telephone (413) 545-0905.

Book Sale

The Friends of the Library of the University of Massachusetts (Amherst) are planning a book and record sale in the fall. Donations of any suitable materials will be gratefully accepted, including paperbacks, magazines, children's books, phonograph records, etc.

Contributions should be addressed to F.O.L. Book Sale, UMass Library, Amherst, MA 01002. Materials can also be dropped off at the new Library, or at the loading platform behind South College. All identified donations (name & address of donor) will be acknowledged. For further information about the sale or the Friends organization, telephone 545-0058.

Outing Club

The University of Massachusetts Outing Club was organized several decades ago in 1927. Over the years the club's activities have included caving, mountain climbing, flat and white water canoeing, roller skating, square dancing, rock climbing, ice climbing, snowshoeing, crosscountry skiing and a host of other outdoor activities. If you like to do something in the outdoors, no matter what it is, you will easily find someone in the club with a similar interest to do it with you.

Club trips have gone far and near, from short day hikes on the Holyoke range or even closer a caving trip through the maze of the U of M drain system, to the Grand Canyon in Arizona, Tetons in Wyoming, Three Sisters in Oregon, Disneyland in Florida, Guatemala, Peru, Canada.

Club meetings are held weekly and usually consist of some preliminary business followed by some slides or movies of recent trips or occassionally a feature movie on the outdoors.

The club equipment room has available to members, students and staff at the university a limited amount of equipment for use at a rental fee that's so small it's hard to believe. A brief list of some of the equipment is tents, backpacks, sleeping bags, climbing ropes, caving gear, crampons, snowshoes, crosscountry skijs, ice axes, etc, etc.

To see our equipment and check it out come to the equipment room, room 415 in the student union on the 2nd floor, during the equipment hours posted on the door. To find out more about your university's outing club come to any of our weekly meetings normally held on Monday evenings. Club trips and meetings are almost always announced in advance in the Daily Collegian.

On Being Drunk In The State Of Massachusetts

By RICHARD HOWLAND
Attorney for Students

On July 1, 1973, Massachusetts abolished the ancient crime of being drunk although all the laws having to do with driving under the influence remain unchanged.

As of July 1, the Alcoholism Treatment and Rehabilitation Act (General Laws chapter 111B) will govern drunks and drunkeness. As with any new procedural law, we may expect some confusion in the application of the provisions by police, citizens and courts at the start.

Section 3 of the statute describes a person as "Incapacitated" if he is intoxicated "by reason of the consumption of intoxicating liquor" who "is (1) unconscious, (2) in need of medical attention, (3) likely to suffer or cause physical harm or damage to property, or (4) disorderly."

Section 8 of the statute provides that any person who is incapacitated* in a public place "may be assisted by a police officer with or without his consent to his residence, to a (detoxification) facility, or to a police station." The police officer may request the person to take a test for alcohol, including a breath test, but it is not required nor is it a right of the person to be tested. The results of any such test are not admissable against the person tested for any purpose.

When an incapacitated* person is taken to a police station the nearest detoxification facility is notified. If treatment is available the person shall be transported to the facility where he may be held against his will up to forty-eight hours or until he is no longer incapacitated*, whichever is shorter.

If the facility indicates that treatment is not available, the incapacitated person may be held at the police station in "protective custody" until he is no longer incapacitated or twelve hours, whichever is shorter. The statute is somewhat vague, but as I understand its intent, it provides that no person may be held in "protective custody" against his will unless he is incapacitated* as defined in Section three. A person in "protective custody" is not under arrest nor is he charged with a crime. Consequently, there is no arrest or criminal record although an entry is made in the police log of the date, time and place of custody.

The statute is a progressive change in an area of considerable dilemma. For the most part police have used the arrest for drunkeness as a protective device for inebriated persons. The statute does not end this procedure, it merely ends the criminal connotations of it. It wisely provides that a person who is drunk and disorderly shall not be charged with disorderly conduct but shall instead be subject to the statute. If the officer is acting pursuant to the statute he would seem to be immune from false arrest charges. In summary, that would seem to require the following steps:

1. The officer must conclude that a person is (a) unconscious, (b) in need of medical attention, (c) a danger to himself, others or property or (d) disorderly by reason of consumption of alcohol ("incapacitated").

2. The officer may then employ reasonable force to take such person into "protective custody" (which he should probably advise such person, and then may elect to transport the person to his residence, a facility or the police station. In most cases the officer will have to take the incapacitated person to the police station if he has made the first conclusion, simply for protective purposes.

3. At the police station the officer in charge or the desk officer will be required to telephone the nearest facility and will probably need to report the apparent condition of the person and the circumstances of the situation. If the facility concludes that treatment is available the person will be transported to it. One may anticipate that this will be a relatively rare occurrence, at least in Amherst.

4. At this point the officer in charge should determine that the person is incapaciated* and direct that he be held in "protective custody" until no longer "incapacitated" or for twelve hours, whichever is shorter. The details of the decision, the reasons, the date and time should be entered in the log.

5. The person should be permitted to make a phone call, but others should not be notified against the wishes of the person.

If the procedures are followed by the police and understood by citizens they should work to the benefit of all concerned with a minimum of anguish.

Nursing Review

AMHERST, Mass. — Continuing Education at the University of Massachusetts is offering a review course for nursing home administrators who are planning to take the licensing examination in September.

The course will present a broad review of the field of long-term care, with an emphasis on trends for the future and current updatings since the onset of administrator licensure. Class lectures and discussions will stress practical operational problems in the field.

Thee course will meet for two all-day sessions Friday, Aug. 24 and Wednesday, Aug. 29, from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. at the Yankee Drummer Motor Inn, 624 Southbridge Street, Auburn. There is a fee of $75 which will cover all costs, including instruction, materials, facilities, coffee breaks, and luncheons.

The Massachusetts Board of Registration of Nursing Home Administrators recognizes the Division of Continuing Education at UMass as an accredited institution with the right to offer classroom experience which will satisfy the necessary minimum of fifteen classroom hours required for annual licensure.

Anyone in the health field concerned with professional improvement in all areas of long-term patient care may contact the Division of Continuing Education at 920 Campus Center, UMass-Amherst, 01002, telephone 545-0905.

UMass Students To Work In D.C. This Fall

By MARK VOGLER

AMHERST — University of Massachusetts students will be assuming positions in top government offices of Washington, D.C. this fall.

The personnel "beef-up" comes as no direct result of the recent political tension felt throughout the country.

"Their purpose is not to play political games, but rather to get down to the serious business of helping people," says Richard A. Sokol, assistant director of Outreach — the UMass program responsible for placing nearly 40 student interns in the nation's capital.

"Our students will be busy finding out what's wrong with government and how bureaucratic agencies operate. They will take on the responsibilities of congressional and top governmental agency jobs for one semester without pay while receiving full academic credit."

Some of the politicians UMass interns are slated to serve next month include Massachusetts Sen. Edward Kennedy, Edward W. Brooke, and U.S. Rep. Silvio O. Conte of Pittsfield.

Besides infiltrating these offices, students will also be assigned to work in the Smithsonian Institute, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the State and Labor Departments, the National League of Cities, the Equal Employment Opportunity Council, the New England Regional Commission and the New England Congressional Caucus.

Having interns positioned in Washington is nothing new to Outreach which is beginning its second year. Last fall 11 students worked in the city, followed by 25 this past spring.

Sokol said the Washington internships seems to be "the most popular" aspect of Outreach, and added that its enrollment should "greatly increases" each semester. "We would like to eventually level off the number of people going to 60 or 70," he said.

"The word "Politics" means more to a large segment of the Washington population — it's a way of life," a former intern said of his experiences in Washington.

"Interacting with such a community provides an opportunity to witness the theories students so often study in the class room and test their validity.

"First hand experience has deepened my understanding of politics and undoubtedly opened up more avenues of thought and controversy."

Most of the students working under the Washington program have educational backgrounds in either Political Science, History, Economics, or Journalism.

The internship is one of many opportunities Outreach offers UMass students. "There's nothing beyond our reach," Sokol said.

The program was initiated last fall by several students "to meet the needs of the students community and allow students to get a good education," he said.

Seven language students will go to New York City next month to intern in the Department of Immigration and Naturalization and other social agencies.

Last year, Outreach provided free federal and state income tax assistance to people in the Springfield area who wouldn't ordinarily be able to afford the service. Director William M. Burke said the service saved 2,696 people approximately $29,117.

Many students are involved in hospital and various social programs in Greater Springfield, Worcester and Boston. One intern has been placed at Woods Hole Oceanographic Institute.

Five College Cooperation

By NORTH BURN Five College Coordinator

I usually pick up student hitchhikers as I drive among the colleges. They are a useful source of information on how five college cooperation is working. The other day I picked up a young man in front of Hampshire, heading for Mount Holyoke. He turned out to be an Amherst student who had been admitted on early decision, so he must have been a bright fellow. He told me Amherst had been his first choice for college because of five college cooperation. He said he could have the benefit of a small college and also have access to much wider resources than Amherst alone could offer. Since this was my line, I like my passenger. He was taking two courses at Amherst, one at Hampshire, and one at Mount Holyoke. The next semester he planned to take a course at Smith and another at the University.

I decided to see how he was coping with problems we were all grappling with. First, interchange registration procedures: no problem, said he. A bit more paper work than to register for a course at Amherst. He seemed to be taking courses at the other colleges just for the experience. How about the rule that he must show that a course he wanted elsewhere was "significantly different" from one given on his home campus? That was easy too. He could always find sufficient differences in treatment of the material, books used, or classroom style to argue that they were "significant." Furthermore, he had a tolerant academic advisor.

But, I said, the bus system must be inadequate to his purposes since here he was hitchhiking. Not at all, said he. He usually used the bus. He was hitchhiking that day only because the weather was fine. Didn't he have trouble fitting his travels and his classes into a day? No, he had arranged his schedule so that his Amherst classes were on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday and his Hampshire and Mount Holyoke classes on Tuesday and Thursday. I was growing very fond of that young man. By the time he had described with great enthusiasm the wealth of cultural events in the Valley, I had grown to love him. I wished I could display him as evidence that five college cooperation does work, at least sometimes, at least for some people.

As a matter of face, it is considerably better than that. Perhaps I am so concerned with the problems that I fail sometimes to see the progress. On balance, it is probably safe to say that cooperation today works most of the time for some of the people in the five colleges and some of the time for most of the people. This is one of the oldest cooperative groups in the country. Over the years, the web of entanglements among the institutions has come to touch virtually every facet of their operations. The colleges (for which, please read four private colleges and a large state university) remain proudly- on occasion, fiercely-independent; but each is an integral part of a larger community. Smith remains Smith, but it is also Smith-in-the-five-colleges.

Now cooperation, at least in this Valley, is not an end in itself. Its purpose, in these days of scarce resources, is to preserve and strengthen five independent, distinctive, viable institutions by helping each do what it wishes to do but cannot do-or cannot do so well-within the limits of its own resources. To make this possible the cooperative tail must wiggle the institutional dog a bit, but the tail should not wag the dog. The problem each step of the way is to determine how much institutional autonomy is to be given up to make cooperation work in the interest of each institution without undermining the independence or viability of that institution.

This means, of course, that there is-and must continue to be-duplication of certain resources. For example, each of the five institutions, if it is to be independent and viable, should probably offer courses in English. This leads an occasional amateur efficiency expert to suggest that, to achieve real economy, the five institutions should merge. At a minimum, we could save the salaries of four of the five presidents. (Come to think of it, we would also save mine.) The difficulty is that we would lose far more than we would gain.

Collins Office Hours

State Representative James G. Collins, D-Amherst, will hold regular office hours for University of Massachusetts' students, faculty, and staff every first Friday of the month from 9-11 a.m. in Room 801 at the Campus Center. Representative Collins' first hours will be this Friday, September 7th.

Representative Collins, who is a 1968 graduate of U.Mass. and former Student Senate President, was elected last November to the State House of Representatives after an intensive door to door campaign throughout the seven towns of the Second Hampshire District.

Representative Collins is presently serving on the Legislature's Committee on Education and also the Special Legislative Commission on Belchertown State School and Monson State Hospital. The legislator, in conjunction with other concerned members of the House, was able to increase Belchertown's budget for this fiscal year by $807,000, which will provide better educational, medical, and theraputic services to the residents at Belchertown State School. "While the budget increases for this year will help," Collins contends, "we still have a long way to go in providing quality services to retarded citizens. I look forward to working for increased state support for a well coordinated and administered system of delivering health and educational services to retarded citizens of Massachusetts."

Students, faculty, and staff wishing to contact Representative Collins, may also call him at his home on 67 Butterfield Terrace, Amherst, at 549-6886 or at his office at the State House at (617) 727-8946.

Remember the farmer who fed his horse increasing proportions of sawdust with his oats until he got the horse on a diet of pure sawdust? He achieved great economy in his feed bill; but, unfortunately, the horse died. What would die here if our institutions were to merge is the rich diversity of approaches to higher education. No one knows with cretainty how to educate the young and, therefore, a variety of approaches to the problem should surely be preserved. And, of course, diversity has other values. Hence, in this Valley at least, merger of the five colleges is not an objective of cooperation. We do hope, however, that through cooperation we can achieve an educational whole which is greater than the sum of the parts.

So we will continue to need, say, teachers of English in all five colleges, though, to be sure, they can profitably consult and cooperate on faculty appointments and courses and try to avoid duplication of their more specialized offerings. In other fields much more sharing is possible. Thus, it was decided some time ago that each institution did not need a full-fledged astronomy department and what is now the Five College Astronomy Department was born. The chairman of the department and several members are at the University. Each of the private colleges has at least one astronomer on its faculty but he (or, in two cases, she) is a member of the five college department. All members of the department of a breadth and quality no one of them could have on its own.

Or, consider the possibilities with new fields of study. Black Studies (or Afro-American Studies) is a case in point. Each institution decided that it needed to offer courses in this area, but faculty resources were scarce and expensive and no one institution could provide all the courses required. So we created a Five College Black Studies Executive Committee which considers faculty and course needs for the five college as a whole and advises all institutions accordingly. As a result, although there is more to be done (there always is), the five colleges already have one of the strongest programs in the country.

The benefits of cooperation are felt throughout the five college community, but it is probably the students who feel most keenly the expanded opportunities it affords. A student from any one institution may take a course at any other institution if it is "significantly different" from a course available at home. Provided the student's academic advisor and dean agree that the course fits the student's academic program, full credit is given to the course taken at the other institution. In the last five years student interchange has increased nearly tenfold. During 1972-73 some 6,000 semester-courses will have been taken by students off their home campus. To enable students to move among the institutions, there is a bus system which provides hourly service during the day and several runs in the evenings and on weekends.

In addition to the wide range of courses, students have access to numerous cultural events on all campuses. A Five College Calendar of events is published monthly. It is distributed free to all faculty and staff and placed on bulletin boards in convenient locations for students of all five colleges. It is also sold by subscription to members of the surrounding communities.

A Five College Student Coordinating Board composed of student representatives from each institution sponsors an information telephone which anyone may call to find out what events in the five colleges are scheduled. The board also publishes an annual five college information booklet which is distributed to all students. The booklet contains maps of all campuses, significant telephone numbers, library hours, and the like. The FCSCB was instrumental in beginning and is now helping to support the evening and weekend bus service.

Amherst, Mount Holyoke, and Smith have made extensive studies of the desirability and feasibility of becoming coeducational; all have decided to remain single sex while undertaking to exploit five college cooperation more aggressively. The idea is that these institutions will be able to maintain their traditional role in higher education while obtaining some of the benefits of men and women learning and being together through cooperation with the other institutions.

There is little doubt that the cooperative arrangements in which they participate have assited the four private colleges in student recruitment. The admission offices make extensive use of brochures describing the cooperative arrangement. The argument is persuasive. It is possible for a young woman who, on balance, would prefer a small woman's college but does not wish to give up the advantages of coeducation or the accessibility of a large university, to come to Mount Holyoke or Smith and, in effect, have her cake and eat it, too. Correspondingly, students at the University have open to them the possibility of sampling the quite different atmospheres to be found at the small colleges.

For faculty members the cooperative arrangement affords a wider range of colleagues and intllectual resources than they could have on their own campus. Through a variety of arrangements, it is possible for a faculty member at any one institution to teach a course at another institution. This enriches both the several colleges and the life of the faculty member concerned. Some of these arrangements are designed to enable a given institution to fill a vacancy caused by, say, sabbatical leave for one of its faculty members. "Overtime borrowing" (for which, if you like, read legalized moonlighting) simply involves hiring a faculty member from another institution to teach a semester course in addition to his load at home. Other arrangements may involve two or more institutions sharing the cost of a faculty member in some specialty one could not afford on its own. Faculty members sometimes initiate exchanges for their own purposes. This year, for example, the philosophers in the Valley have arranged a network of exchanges among themselves whereby a faculty member will teach one of his courses on another campus in return for a like service. No money changes hands, but everyone benefits.

There is a wide range of five college faculty seminars or colloquia (15 this year). These bring from 10 to 50 faculty members with common interests together to discuss a problem, criticize one another's scholarly work, or hear a speaker. They also provide a forum in which information is exchanged and curricular plans can be coordinated.

From these seminars more formal cooperative bodies have sometimes emerged. Thus, from the Latin American Studies Seminar, which has been going for some years, there has developed a Latin American Studies Council which meets regularly in formal session to plan five college programs in that field of study. Discussions in the Victorian Studies Seminar resulted in the presentation last year of a highly successful five college conference in Victorian Studies which attracted scholars from a wide area.

Chairmen or representatives of some 25 similar departments or programs meet together once or twice a year to discuss their common problems and to make recommendations for five college actions. From these meetings, too, have come new ventures. The French Departments, for example, sponsored a five college symposium last year on Paul Valery. A variety of new faculty exchange arrangements has also been worked out in these meetings.

These and other opportunities for faculty members to work with a wider range of colleagues than they have at their home institutions have proven to be of considerable assistance in recruiting new faculty to the Valley and in retaining faculty members who might otherwise seek larger institutions or urban settings. Another perhaps incidental, but important, value of five college cooperation is the opportunity it provides for hiring husband and wife teams, neither member of which would come without a job for the other. Sometimes, of course, both parties can be employed on the same campus, but it is not often that vacancies available on one campus fit the offered specialties. The range of possibilities on five campuses is much greater.

At the core of the cooperative enterprise is academic planning. Each institution is kept informed of what is happening at the others and can take course offerings planned at the other institutions into account in considering its own. Thus, Amherst College decided last year that it would no longer offer Italian. This year as many Amherst students are taking Italian at the other colleges as used to take it at Amherst. The College has not lost Italian but is able to use the resources which otherwise would have gone into Italian for other purposes. No central authority tells any institution what to do, but each institution takes increasingly into account resources at the other institutions and cooperative possibilities in making its own decisions.

The chief aim of cooperation is not so much to "save money" as to enable each institution, with its limited resources, to provide the best possible education for its students and wider intellectual opportunities for its faculty. Although money may be saved in one area, it is saved in order to be applied more fruitfully to another. In this context numerous examples of savings can be cited. Cooperative purchasing arrangements among the institutions have permitted significant savings in buying some commodities. Amherst contracts with Smith for its laundry rather than setting up its own facilities. Amherst, Hampshire, and Mount Holyoke cooperate on an administrative computer center. All of the private colleges have terminals into the very large University research computer. Cooperation among the libraries, especially in joint purchases of certain periodicals and serials, enables each college to get more for some library dollars than it could if all funds were spent internally. Hampshire contracts with the University for student health services at less cost than if it set up its own service. This also benefits the University which can, through expanding its service, attract a more experienced medical staff and offer better care. Amherst has an ice skating rink and all the institutions, as well as high schools and other groups, use it rather than building competing facilities. The placement officers exchange information on prospective employers coming to their campuses to conduct interviews and arrange for students from other colleges to be interviewed as well as their own.

Since the principal impact of cooperation is felt within the several institutions, not much is visible to an outside observer. There are, however, a number of cooperatively supported visible ventures which serve all five institutions. The bus system, the Hampshire Inter-Library Center, WFCR (one of the larger and better-known FM radio stations in the country), The Massachusetts

Review (a quarterly review of literature and public affairs), the Coordinator's Office, and other services are supported by joint funds.

All this is not without cost in both time and money. For one thing, it takes a great deal of meeting to plan and decide. The principal governing body is the Board of Directors of Five Colleges, Incorporated. The Board is made up of the Presidents of Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges, the Chancellor of the Amherst campus of the University of Massachusetts, the President of the University, and the Five College Coordinator. Until two years ago the Board of Directors met four times a year. Some evidence of the quickening pace and increasing importance of cooperation can be adduced from the fact that the Directors now meet monthly to set policy and approve budgets. Numerous subordinate groups meet with equal, or greater, frequency. Cooperation also costs money. Budgets approved by the Directors of Five Colleges, Incorporated for 1972-73 totaled some $800,000. Although an occasional foundation grant is obtained, most of the money comes directly from institutional budgets.

There are plenty of problems and there always will be. One of the major problems for years was disjunction among the academic calendars. This year has seen a large step toward solving the problem. All five institutions now end their classes and examinations for the first semester before the Christmas vacation and none begins the second semester until late January or early February. The January period is used variously. At Hampshire and Mount Holyoke there are formal programs offered open, of course, to students from the other institutions. At Amherst, Smith, and the University the January term is less structured; but this year a wide variety of courses and student activities were undertaken at all five institutions. Thus, on the one hand, the calendars are better coordinated; on the other hand, we have a January period which, with development, might become a truly cooperative educational experience making it possible for faculty and students to move freely about the Valley and work together on projects of common interest.

There are frequently stresses between the need for cooperation and the need for institutional autonomy. There remain faculty members who resent any suggestion that what happens at another institution has any relevance to their own. And in some quarters the competitive spirit still prevails. Not long ago, for example, I tried to get the chairmen of four analogous departments together to discuss cooperation. They never seemed to be able to find time to meet. Eventually I learned why. I heard from three of the chairmen that he or she saw no need to meet with colleagues because, in effect, "I have the best department in the Valley."

Sometimes it is not clear whether developments represent forward or backward motion. Consider the history of electronic music. Several years ago the music department chairmen decided that there should be facilities for composing electronic music somewhere in the Valley. (Not all of them were enthusiastic about the resulting music, it should be noted, but they agreed that their students and faculty should at least have access to it.) This was a relatively new field and it did not make sense for everyone to build facilities. The obvious solution was to establish a cooperative studio. Hampshire furnished the space and obtained a grant with which to buy a Moog Synthesizer, the other colleges agreed to pay a yearly sum toward maintenance and operation, and a five college committee was established to set policy and control use of the studio. The five college electronic music studio was soon doing a roaring business, if that is the appropriate sound.

That, however, is not the end of the story. Last year both Smith and Amherst acquired small electronic musicmakers of their own and the University began planning the acquisition of a full-fledged studio. The musicians decided that although everyone would cooperate with everyone else, the five college studio should become simply the Hampshire studio. It is not clear how this development should be interpreted. A pessimist might call it a set-back-cooperation was cumbersome and difficult, so, when enlarged facilities were needed to meet student and faculty demand, it was decided to set up facilities on each campus under unitary control rather than to enlarge the central, presumably more efficient, facility. An optimist would say this was a resounding success. We cooperated on an expensive experiment but found that demand for the facilities was so great that each institution, to be viable, should now offer this new tool for study on its own campus. Deponent saith naught.

One of the great strengths of five college cooperation is that it includes both public and private institutions and involves one very large institution with four small liberal arts colleges. This also creates problems. Prior to World War II the University of Massachuset was not much larger than Amherst College. It was one of the best agricultural colleges in the United States but posed no threat to the liberal arts colleges. Today the University of Massachusetts is rapidly becoming one of the leading universities of the nation. The question is: can the private colleges continue to count upon the University for cooperation without being swallowed up in the process? The answer, at least so far, is clearly in the affirmative.

The leaders of the University of Massachusetts are concerned with the educational complex of the State as a whole and are well aware of the contributions the private institutions make to it. For that reason alone, the University will undoubtedly remain involved with the private colleges and will concerned to see that they do preserve their independence. In be concerned to see that they do public-private cooperative arrangements in Worcester and Boston as well as in the five college area. Beyond this, however, the University will for the foreseeable future have much to gain from association with the private colleges in more concrete terms. The University can offer its faculty a wider range of colleagues and a wider variety of teaching experiences and intellectual climates than are available on its own campus. There will continue to be cases in which the private colleges can provide faculty competences which the University does not have. One finds, in fact, that in some respects University administrators and faculty are more cooperative than their colleagues at the private colleges. Perhaps this is because the University feels less threatened and, with its larger resources, has greater flexibility for operation.

Hampshire College brings a new challenge, and opportunity, to the cooperative effort. A four-college committee had recommended the establishment of a fifth college which would take advantage of the resources of the other four and, in return, would experiment with new ways of education which would be difficult for the other institutions with their investment in long-established programs and activities to undertake. The problem, paradoxically, lies in Hampshire's basic role, namely, to experiment. One of Hampshire's early plans, for instance, was to adopt the four-one-four calendar so as to have a January term for free-wheeling experimentation. The other four institutions were on the conventional semester calendar. Should Hampshire be asked to drop that experiment and bring its calendar into consonance with the others in the interest of five college cooperation? Fortunately, it was not necessary to face that problem head-on since the other four institutions adopted similar calendars for their own reasons.

But such problems are to be expected. After all, whenever any one of the institutions tries something different, it affects cooperation with the others to some extent. Mount Holyoke recently adopted a new grading system which is complicating things in a minor way. Problems of this sort are integral to the game itself, the object of which, it will be recalled, is to preserve and strengthen five distinctive and independent institutions.

From time to time it is useful to sit back and contemplate the future of five college cooperation. In the spring of 1968 the Presidents appointed a sixteen-member Five College Long Range Planning Committee. The committee met for many hours over an eighteen-month period and in October 1969 presented its recommendations in a 228-page paperbound book entitled Five College Cooperation: Directions for the Future. (Forgive the commercial, but the book is still available for $5 from the University of Massachusetts Press, Amherst, Mass. 01002) A number of the recommendations have been adopted, some are still being considered.

Planning is a continuing process. Periodically the Directors of Five Colleges, Inc. suspend normal business to consider wither we should be tending. Other groups do also. The result is not a clearly defined blueprint for the future nor, in fact, is there complete unanimity on general goals. Only one thing is certain: all agree on the necessity for continuing and strengthening cooperation. Beyond this, I speak only for myself in suggesting goals for the future.

It must be assumed that the financial problems now facing all institutions of higher education, public and private alike, will continue and, indeed, will probably become more acute. The demand by governments and the public at large for more efficient and rational use of resource will increase. There is solid evidence of a trend toward more state-wide coordination of institutions of higher education. If voluntary cooperation cannot be made to work effectively, enforced coordination may well be imposed upon us.

Voluntary cooperation depends for its effectiveness upon institutional self-discipline. The primary goal, therefore, is much more rigorous application of the principle that resources at the other institutions, and cooperative possibilities, be examined before institutional decisions on staff, facilities, and course offerings are made. The result would-or should-be a significant increase in the number of jointly controlled and financed services, in the number of joint five college departments, in the number of majors offered on each campus which depend for fulfillment of requirements on courses offered on the other campuses, and in the number of joint faculty appointments.

To some these might appear to be negative goals, but they are not. Consider some of the positive possibilities. Student interchange might be increased so that in the course of four years in the Valley, most, if not all, students could have taken at least one course on another campus in another learning atmosphere. Coordinated planning of the use of the January term could bring together students and faculty from all five institutions for special experiences not available in the regular terms. Among other things, the result would be considerable enhancement of that sense of five college spirit which is developing. Joint faculty appointments might be used to bring to the Valley each year a particularly distinguished professor no one institution could bring on its own.

And, finally, this Valley could become more of a national educational laboratory than it is already. Each of the five institutions in one way or another is in the forefront of American higher education. Working together they could experiment in the use of such new teaching means as closed-circuit television, computer-assisted instruction, and the like; with new organizations of curricula; and with the teaching of non-traditional students.

It is clear that much remains to be done. Sometimes two steps forward are followed by one step backward. All in all, however, the sense that the five colleges together constitute a real intellectual community increases from year to year and the making of this Valley into one of the greatest educational centers of the nation comes closer to reality.

Kirk To Play At Amherst Sept. 16th

Jazz musician Rahsaan Roland Kirk and his Vibration Society will perform in concert at 7:30 p.m. Sunday, Sept. 16 in the Amherst College Gymnasium.

The concert is the first in a Music for a Sunday Evening series being sponsored by the Amherst College Entertainment Committee. Individual and series tickets are available.

Kirk's significance as a major voice in jazz is indisputable. He is a composer, innovator, and reed-player of extraordinary virtuosity.

A Montreal Star reviewer of the concert by the black, blind Kirk said: "When he blows into four instruments at once the music is an entire Duke Ellington horn section. The music is bells and chimes and gongs and crashes and tic-tic-taps. The music is pain and joy and sweat and dance.

"Rahsaan Roland Kirk plays tenor sax, stritch, manzello, B Flat and E Flat clarinets, flute, black puzzle flute, nose flute, black mystery pipes, harmonium, piccolo, English horn, flexaphone, whistle, gong, bass drum, thunder-sheet, sock cymbal, bells, palms, tympani and God knows what else.

"He's got instruments hanging round his neck, hanging from other instruments, he's got a whole chair piled high with musical instruments. Sound is sight for Rahsaan. And us."

As part of the series, Charles Mingus will perform on Sunday, Oct. 14, Keith Jarrett, Sam Rivers and Gato Barberi will perform in cooperation with Impulse! and ABC Records on Sunday, Nov. 11, and Larry Coryell on Sunday, Dec. 2. All performances are at 7:30 p.m. in the Amherst College Gymnasium.

Tickets can be purchased at the door and at the following locations: in Amherst; Faces of Earth, the University of Massachusetts Student Center, Hampshire College's Uroboros Book Shop, The New Record Shop; in Northampton, Del Padre Music.

Intramural Sports Program Starts Next Week

As usual, the Intramural Sports Program for the current year will begin with touch football. A few new wrinkles are in store for the old game this fall, however. First of all, instead of flag football, the women will be playing touch football (get your passing arms warmed up women). Secondly, co-rec football will be offered for the first time in the history of the intramural program. This ought to be "velly intelesting," to say the least! Rules, of course, are available from the Intramural Office, 215 Boyden.

Men's and women's touch football rules are due Monday, September 10, and co-rec football entries are due Monday, September 17. It is imperative, therefore, that all prospective team managers obtain rosters and health clearance forms from the intramural office immediately. Other activities with entries due during September include Men's and Women's badminton singles, track, cross country, handball singles and paddleball singles. For co-rec the list includes tennis and badminton. Check the calendar below for entry due dates.

Welcome back to school

All the folks who serve you at Stop & Shop wish you a happy and rewarding academic year.

We're working hard to lower your cost of eating well . . . to give you your Stop & Shopsworth. We do it by bringing you mini-pricing specials that run a full week . . . extra value through our Stop & Shop Brand . . . and by our great "Quality-Protected" Beef.

We have been able to provide our customers with plenty of beef throughout the current crisis . . . because our buyers went to the cattle ranches and feed lots and bought live steers . . . had them custom slaughtered and shipped to our own meat plant in Marlboro, Mass. where we do the processing. Since we don't have to depend on other processors for our beef, our supply wasn't cut off by the shut-downs you've heard about. We do have fresh beef at Stop & Shop right now.

Football Team Promises More Good Things To Come

By MARTY KELLEY

Amherst - It was rather mild for Atlantic City and the middle of winter. It was odd to see seagulls dancing lazily atop the aged Convention Hall arena. And perhaps it was even a bit stranger to see ABC-TV cameras and UMass football reunited in semi-national television. The Boardwalk Bowl told the saga of '72. And if you think about it, that's a tough act to follow. . .And who needs such an encore. . .

And so the mighty Men of MacPherson, those hearty holdovers from Boardwalk fame, face testimony once again. Now branded a winner under third year MacPherson, last season's 9-2 log and the East Coast Small College Championship (stopped UCal-Davis in the Boardwalk Bowl) has installed Massachusetts as an overwhelming favorite for the Yankee Conference Crown and number one creditor of the Boston College brass.

The loss of Steve Schubert won't phase our number 11 with Peter Trow putting on a receiver's jersey. At the end of the year the pros will be looking for Piel in their Real Draft.

But Boston College and a shot at the New England title is eleven weeks away. Perhaps the toughest date of the fall's sideshow is this weekend. Once by this one, MacPherson can start thinking of his raise. For only Holy Cross and Bucknell managed to turn aside MacPherson a year ago, and both times stellar safety John Healy wasn't there. And when the upset bound Holy Cross Crusaders pull off the pike for Saturday's opener, John Healy won't be around either.

All-American Steve Schubert is gone, Paul Metallo is politicing with Hank Stram and the Kansas City Chiefs, and Healy was found to have one kidney over the summer. And now MacPherson goes hunting.

But already in the fold is perhaps one of the most constructive quarterbacks in the country in All-American Piel Pennington. Tim Berra is back from the Boardwalk Bowl endzone to throw at and so is Eddie Hajdusak. And the surprise for this fall? Watch basketball refugee Peter Trow. He's made noise in track and basketball at Mass Aggie. . .perhaps the best is yet to come on the gridiron. . .

From outside the five you can count on your left hand the number of times UMass will score on the ground. Thank above that 8 of the 11 starters return on defense, for the Minutemen have no offensive line to speak of and a backfield that lacks semester hours. But protection is the name of the game for Pennington and Mac's split backs are going to have to produce. . .or goodbye Boardwalk. . .

Richie Herman and Phil Roland, a couple of good bodies but green pastures, will get the first crack, sophs Bill Wolfe and Jerry Mondalto the second. Jerry may go to the slot with the likes of former defensive back Earl Brown, but the Minutemen will have to be patient on offense, for it's defense that'll get you a plaudit or two in '73.

There's simply not enough carpet space for Mac's furniture up front. Co-captain Johnny Jones will be there for sure along with Tommy Price and Tom Bradshaw and All-New England Eddie McAleney at the ends. Transfer Bill Cook, rescued from UConn, will get time in. But there's more behind that story.

As a sophmore Dennis Kiernan was the Boardwalk Bowl's most valuable player. As a junior he promises to be leaner and a bit meaner. . .if you can imagine it. So will Paul St. Onge who's down to 190 and back to the middle where he belongs after last year's tenure at defensive tackle. And with a side open, the sophs go scurrying for recognition, namely Steve Falvey, and a few vets like seniors Dave Butterfield and Mike McNiff to name a few. . .There's probably more.

A kidney stopped John Healy's pro career. . .and nearly the heart and pulse of the Minutemen of '73. His knowledge and wealth of enthusiasm won't be replaced. Sophs Steve Wood and Steve Levine will try though. Mark Finnerty, also a rook, may get a corner, but you won't find any better ones in New England in veterans Bobby Parrot, a junior, and Paul Hansen, a senior, whose marriage over the summer, only promises to enhance his game. . .if that.

Andy Dutkanciyz will punt, God knows who'll replace Mark Palau with placements, but John Ames is a name. And what else do you want to know that sure as hell isn't new. Harvard is Harvard and it's in Cambridge, a town the Crimson leaves but twice a fall term. And Villanova returns following almost a decade of hiding. The only thing certain about the schedule is that every Saturday she'll change.

They say that you'll know better after that first one's out of your system. UMass can't wait. They have a certain afterstate following a certain bleak day at Fitton Field in Worcester. A certain sting from a loss to Holy Cross bores its way freely. And who needs such an encore. . . .

Tim Berra (42) will be looking to have a better season than his dad. If he doesn't there's always foot powder commercials, right Yogi?

With the loss of Paul Metallo to graduation the key to the Minutemen's success is defense. Thank God for those linebackers.

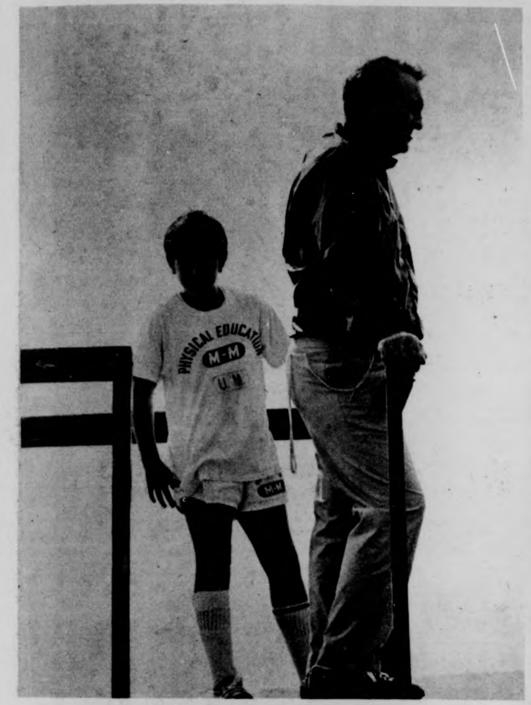
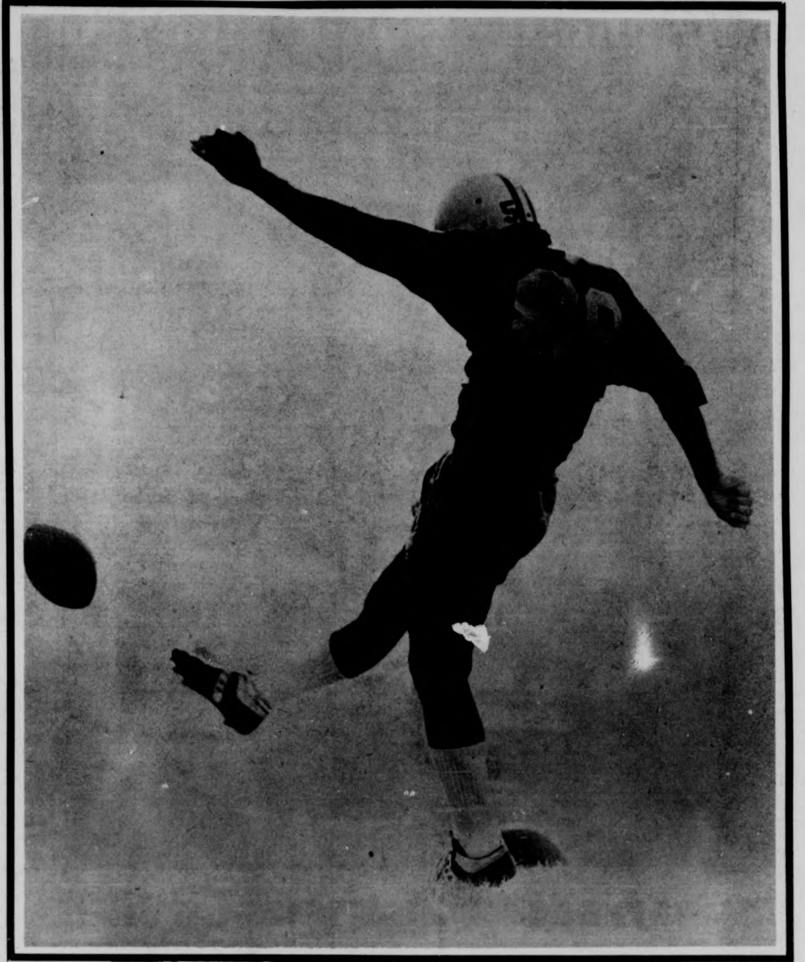
Football Practice

It's All Worth It





September 8 Kickoff

By ALAN CHAPMAN

Ahhhhh FOOTBALL, the gritting of teeth, pounding of bodies, and cheering of the crowd. Nothing like it.

But there is another side. The gasping for breath after endless push-ups, and memorizing umpteen play variations or just getting the energy to peel the socks off your feet. Whew! The guy who comes out a hero after the game has earned his notoriety by putting up with 'practice'. It even sounds bad. But come Saturday, September 8 when the Minutemen face the Crusaders of Holy Cross, no one will be complaining, because the gritting pounding and gasping isn't half as bad as the cheering is good.

Lacrosse Team Has Shot At National Title

By MARTY KELLEY

Amherst - It's nice to be known. . . It's nice to be appreciated. And for 19 years hiding in the obscurity of your own backyard can be kind of a pain in the ass. . . But it's pretty hard to hide a national title. This is one of those obscure problems that UMass Lacrosse coach Dick Garber would like to cope with. . . The thinking process starts now. . .

Yes, lacrosse at the University of Massachusetts has had its problems seeping out of its own lockeroom. Somehow, the game that the Chactaw Indian tribe threw together in the 17th century with leather strappings and cradle, just hasn't been a standard bearer of our times. But if winning is everything, then the game is unmatched in UMass sport circles as far as success goes. Garber has been a bit shy on publicity, but certainly not cheap with titles. . .

Now in his 20th season at Massachusetts, Garber and his Gorillas have rattled off 5 straight Northeast titles and have finished a step behind Brown for New England superiority the last three years. But if Garber was in the business to win, he'd probably be content with slicing his own oranges at the half. . . He's not in it for the pomp and pageantry.

"As you know," said Garber, "there are two options to the sport contest and of course you try to eliminate one and logically 99% of your athletes wish to win. But to me that's not the most important aspect. It's more important to grow as a person than to win as an athlete." Dick Garber stands pretty much alone with his philosophy. . .And he's better off for it.

Lacrosse at Massachusetts is a family affair and the party starts in a couple of weeks. With the commencement of the fall program, more than 100 hopefuls will show. Garber won't cut, you cut yourself. But the thought of playing for a national champ keeps the kindle alive. . .and the aestheticism free flowing.

With the likes of Hobart, Brown, Adelphi, and Cortland State to contend with this spring, Garber has reason for concern. But if the emmigration process is kind to him, Garber could collect all the cabbage.

You might say that UMass is a New York accented team. . .quite literally so. Operating a shuttle system (non-scholarship of course) to New York, Garber has landed some expensive lacrosse stock over the years, and this graduating crop could put some national iron in the lacrosse trophy case. . .or at least a ribbon or two.

From last year's 12-4 national tourney team returns a slew of New Yorkers who came together with a smile and I'll probably leave a little happier. Along with tri-captain Hirsch Seidman, All-American midfielder from Baltimore, Md., return fellow New York Captains John Rutledge in the goal and Richie Lally on defense. Long Islanders Bill Balustein (All-Northeast), John McCarthy (a two year starter), and Russ Incovia give Rutledge the defensive security he needs. . .But Rutledge was an All-American as well. . .But who wants to rest on a laurel like that?

Seidman's midfield is intact. As a matter of fact so are the first six for Garber. But 2 1/2 will do so there's going to be some old fashioned dogfighting in the Garber camp this fall. Competition is supposedly healthy.

Gene Hardiman (all-northeast and back from Europe in time) will buck up with returnee Jackie Moran for Seidman's line. Two year starter John Martin wants in on the second line and he'll get it with holdover Bruce Sibson. With Bob Gormly, Steve Crimin, Larry Knowlton, and new comers Rickie Walsh, Stillman Sprague, and Billy Schartz, the middies are stacked. . .But the real showcase is down the other end of the field. . .

What do you do with three potential All-Americans and a scrapper? Well, record setting attackman Frank Garahan is an All-American so he'll naturally start. But so will newcomers Kevin Patterson, a 6' 7", 260 lbs. Indian who was handed a stick instead of a rattle and Harry McVey, the diminutive transfer from Nassau Community College who is considered by most to be the best small college attackman in the country today. And if he can get his helmet over his hairdo, he may help hand Garber a national title. . .And last year's starting attackman Peter Connolly and reserve Andy Scheffer will get their two cents in for sure.

Championship could be the trump card this academic year at Massachusetts. Following MacPherson and Leaman won't be an easy task. But Dick Garber seems to have the trump card. . .Even if it had to cross the Throgsneck Bridge to get here. . .

A national championship at UMass? This year's Lacrosse team may be the one to do it.

Minutemen Fall At Fenway; Still Have Good Nucleus

By MIKE BROPHY

The 1973 baseball squad marched into Fenway with a respectable 21-7-1 record on the line as they were fighting for a chance to represent New England at the Collegiate World Series in Omaha. Harvard, who had beaten the Minutemen in the season finale by a 5-4 score, had other ideas and handed Mike Flanagan his first, and last defeat as a UMass pitcher.

Providence then got into the action and cut short the second season for UMass as the UMies fell short in the 8-7 defeat. All in all, however, it was a very successful season as the team journeyed out to California for the 7th Annual Riverside Baseball Tournament and defeated nationally ranked teams such as Stanford and Vanderbilt.

Perhaps the greatest accomplishment of the UMass baseball program for 73 was that of putting both Ed McMahon and Mike Flanagan into the major league systems via the pro draft held in June.

Steve Newell was named to the first team All-American outfield thusly making him then first UMass ballplayer ever to receive a first team honors. Newell has been ripping the Cape Cod League apart and at the conclusion of July was hitting over .410. He is expected to be the high round draft pick come next Spring's pro draft and should be a main stay for the diamond nine next year on Earl Lorden Field.

McMahon was drafted by the Minnesota Twins organization in the second round of the draft which makes him the highest pick in the history of UMass baseball, according to coach Dick Bergquist. Now playing Triple A baseball in Tacoma, Washington, McMahon has been hitting a steady .235-.240 against "the toughest pitching I've ever seen." McMahon's fielding has met with the Twins' expectations so far as he has played errorless ball in the field.

Playing on a regular basis, he is one of two shortstops presently with Tacoma as one was sent down to AA ball upon McMahon's arrival.

McMahon was voted to the Sporting News first All-American team at shortstop and is one of three of the ēleven named that signed with the Twins. Of the three, McMahon was the second choice.

Flanagan was signed by the Baltimore Orioles and is now pitching Double A ball in Florida. After amassing a fine 3-1 record, it was learned that Flanagan had been side-lined with a muscle pull in his lower back. Sources close to Flanagan indicate that the problem is being taken care of and that Flanagan is taking it well. According to the source, Flanagan should be back on his feet sometime in August.

The NCAA has adopted the Designated Pinch Hitter rule, making it likely that we'll see more slugging next spring.

It was a season that saw the UMass hitters pull through when a sore arm-riddled pitching staff seemed to be faltering. The club finished with an excellent .301 team average to lead the New England clubs. They had compiled a ten game win streak before meeting with Harvard in the regular season finale which they dropped by a close 5-4 score in bad weather.

Mark Palau, the third baseman, finished with a strong .330 average in his senior year to round out a four year career average of .314 with 90 career hits. Palau handled the hot corner with extreme consistency as he had 43 assists on the year.

Although not drafted in 1973 UMass co-captain Tom White finished off a fine career at UMass with a 12-7 final record including a 3-3 1973 slate with three saves. White has been pitching in the Tri-County League in hopes that some ball team will give him the chance to break into the majors.

John Healy turned out to be quite the surprise player of the year as he came right in to fill in for the injured Jim Black at the catching spot. In addition to his rifle-like arm behind the plate, Healy contributed a good clutch-hitting bat as he wound up with a .239 average. Healy was found to be missing one kidney while in surgery over the summer months and will not return to play football but hopes he will be allowed to pursue his baseball career at UMass.

First baseman Pete Collins has been forced to leave school for personal reasons and will miss the 1974 season. "Pete was a good up and coming first baseman for us and with the NCAA adopting the designated hitter rule, we would have found great use for him. I hope he comes back after he settles his problems," commented Bergquist after learning that Collins had left school.

At the end of the baseball season it is customary that the club have a dinner where the annual awards are given out to the outstanding members of the team. This year saw the Thompson MVP Award go to sophomore pitcher Mike Flanagan while co-captain Tom White was awarded the Della Piana Trophy. Steve Newell was granted the Westman Scholarship. Also announced at the dinner were the 1974 co-captains who will be Steve Newell and John Olson.

For the forthcoming 1974 season the Minutemen look to be strong enough to retain the Yankee Conference Crown and possibly to go on in Tournament play.

Despite the loss of Mike Flanagan and Ed McMahon, both of whom had eligibility left, Bergquist has a host of returning lettermen to form the nucleus of a competitive squad for 1974. Steve Newell will be back with his .400+ stick while pitchers Craig Allegrezza and Chip Baye are also returning.

Mike Koperniak and Ron Beaurivage will be returning to secure the horn although the left side may need some work to replace the lost Palau and McMahon. Coach Bergquist will be looking to the underclassmen to fill in where the holes have been left by graduation and the pro draft, "I am looking for another good season in the coming spring. Right now the thing on my mind, though, is Fall Baseball. This is where I will be able to tell exactly what my strengths and weaknesses are."

In commenting on the adoption of the DPH rule by the NCAA, Bergquist stated, "I think it will give us great opportunity to utilize our good bats that have sat on the bench due to other weaknesses. This is where the loss of Pete Collins could greatly hurt us."

Leaman Will Keep Smiling This Year

By MARTY KELLEY

Amherst - The Blarney Stone on 34th Street is a quiet Metropolitan bar where the Irish bartenders still wear white shortsleeved shirts and green bowties. Once you find yourself getting to know these bartenders personally, you know you're a derelict or you've seen to a lot of NIT tournies. . .If you choose the latter you've really lived the heyday, hysteria of UMass basketball, but you'd better brace yourself. . .This winter you stand a chance of meeting a whole new crop of bartenders. . .

Although the UMass basketball program has taken in three National Invitational Tournament performances in the last four years, the accent won't be on New York City come playoff time. . .The Minutemen may very well look westward and the NCAA tournament. Not since 1962 and the Eastern Regionals has a UMass team had the horses to go NCAA. . .or shall we say the Musketpower. .

And so Jackie Leaman with your pompous smile and careful coaching tactics, you've somehow managed to become more popular than Bobby Wood on this campus. In an age where the Star Spangled Banner just doesn't rate, you've managed to get 5,000 students off their collective asses to rise for the Feurher whenever you enter Curry Hicks Cage. And this winter there may not be enough room for "Jack's Corner". (Jackie's private Booster Club).

Now in your third year without a superstar since the "J" left, you should have just enough dedication and discipline in the ranks to challenge Providence College (we've got at em' at the Civic Center) and stay atop of Boston College around New England circles. You won't get the Pope's blessing.

There are 5 good reasons why Jackie Leaman will stay fat and happy this winter. . .Al Skinner, John Murphy, Jim Burke, Billy Endicott, and Rick Pitino. There's your starting five and Leaman will be the first to agree. All five were on the court (or sort of) when North Carolina and Massachusetts were deadlocked at the half and when the discipline failed late it was the Powder Blue Tar Heels into the Madison Square Garden semis by 10. . .Endicott asked why. . .

Possibly the best way to describe one of the most cohesive fives in New England is to go back to a Jackie quote out of our Collegian archives. . ."Last year we played six teams that were at one time in the top twenty in the nation and we beat three of them (Leaman laugh and the clenched fist)". Thanx Jackie.

With returning lettermen like Skinner, Pitino, Endicotte, and Burke Jumpin' Jack's Jocks should have a capital year. Oh for another shot at Madison Square Garden.

Jackie also once said that Al Skinner will "never play guard for us again". Well, did you know that the Carolina Cougars are putting pressure on Leaman to use Dr. A. there so they can scout his worth at that position. . .That type of pressure won't get you to the NCAA's . . .But a full court press, deafening fan reaction, and some quality bench will.

Yes, you'll see UMass run a lot this winter, probably right out of the pack with the Yankee Conference title and the New England crown. So what. . .Beating Missouri 78-71 in New York when we all got drunk was no fluke. Most of the constituents will be back so the self actualization theory says that you should seek a higher plateau. . .The NCAA perhaps?

The bench should tell the story. And the story of the J.V. team, Greg "I'll take the shot" Duarte and a kid from the Philadelphia ghetto named Mike Stokes can help. Gangly Tom Ryan, unnoticed except for his height, will make the team, so will Glen Cooper. He has good spring, but his knees can be compared to a couple of rope bridges. But he might help. . .So will Peter Trow when on sabbatical from MacPherson. . .

And now you'd like to know about the pride of Albany, young frosh candidate Jim Towne. Don't try it. I'm afraid at his age and orientation, he won't have the mental integrity to work up a good sweat although he may have the talent to.

Talent. . .Jack Leaman can package some of it on the half and still have enough for a trophy year. His circus will be well viewed this winter and don't be surprised if not more than once your athletic fee won't get you into the Cage. . There just won't be the room. . .

So hold onto your ID's and if you can scoff a season ticket make the investment. Getting to see a UMass home game will be as rare as your favorite steak. But once you're there, you won't forget. . .MacPherson has the spotlight now. . .But just remember. . .The circus is just around the corner. . .

Wrestling - Another Championship?

By JOHN BOCK

Repeating a championship in anything is tough to do in collegiate sports nowadays. It is difficult to keep up with the pressures and costs of recruiting and scheduling, for starters. Then there is the fact that a championship is a not necessarily equal combination of skill, luck and hard work.

Last year the University of Massachusetts capped a 10-4 dual match season by winning a championship - the First Annual New England University Wrestling Association Tournament. It was the first time that all the University division teams in New England (Yale and Harvard excepted as they belong to the Eastern Intercollegiate Wrestling Association) got together without the College Division teams and had a tournament. UMass won it hands down by placing all ten wrestlers no lower than third place. Will they be able to do it again? Possibly. The season will be sure to hold some surprises as last season held five of them.

Under Coach Homer Barr the 1972-73 team surprised New England and the East by putting together a season that 1) Saw them at a 6-0 standing at one time, 2) Beat two of the Ivy League's best teams 3) Be ranked tenth in the East - the first New England team to ever be ranked in the Eastern Top 10 4) Lose the Yankee Conference Championship and 5) Come back to dominate the New Englands with two champions, four seconds and four thirds - a whole team of winners.

The Minutemen didn't think about the season as a whole. Certain matches were going to be key and would test what kind of team they were. Army, Springfield, Yale, and Wilkes College would be the toughest matches. To be sure there were veterans that would help out, but four of the weight classes held wrestlers that had yet to don a UMass uniform. Three capable transfers and a freshman proved to be the ones that could be counted on as the season wore on and by semester break the Minutemen were undefeated at 6-0 with wins over two of the better teams in the East, Yale and Cornell. (Yale went on to finish seventh in the East and Cornell edged Princeton for the Ivy League title.)

The second semester started poorly as the UMass unbeaten string has broken by Oswego State out on Lake Ontario. Then it was returned home for the BIG match of the year - Springfield College. The Chiefs had beaten UMass the year before in the New Englands (when it was still the NEIWA) but this year was to be the first and only meeting between the two powers and it proved to be the most thrilling match in New England for the season. Springfield forged ahead to an eleven point lead but the Minutemen came back with two pins in the last three bouts to pull ahead by one point. The heavyweight match was almost won by Massachusetts, but almost only gets points in horseshoes, and the Chiefs had beaten the Minutemen once more, 20-18.

The rest of the dual match season saw only two more losses; one to a touch Army team and the other to the NCAA College Division, fifth ranked Wilkes College Colonels. The First Yankee Conference Tournament held at the University of Rhode Island turned out to be more like a triangular among UMass, URI, and Boston University. In the finals there were seven Minutemen versus either wrestlers from BU or URI. As it was, Rhody nosed out UMass for the title on the basis that UMass was not represented at one weight class and failed to place in another.

Thus the stage was set for another confrontation two weeks later as UMass hosted the First Annual New England University Wrestling Association Championship Tournament. UMass, UConn, UNH, UMaine, BU, BC, Holy Cross, Dartmouth, Brown and Rhode Island made up the new group and the winners of the tournament would be the first representatives of New England to be automatically qualified for the NCAA Championship Tournament to be held in Washington at the U of Washington. UMass won the tourney on the strength of its placers, but only had two individual champions. Senior Co-Captain Dave Amato captured the 118 pound diadem by a last second pin over his Rhode Island opponent, after falling behind in the match. Heavyweight George Ireland won the title by default from his BU opponent, but distinguished himself on the way to the finals by pinning all his opponents.

NEUWA Runnersup wearing the red and white were Larry Reynolds at 126 pounds, Cliff Blom at 159 pounds, Steve Benson at 158, and John Connolly at 177. Third place finishes west to Mike McGlaughlin at 134, Steve Rome at 142, Chris Cadwallader at 167, and Carl Dambman at 190.

Two keys to the success of the 1972-73 season were Senior Co-Captains Dave Amato and Carl Dambman. Amato closed out his collegiate career with a New England Championship after placing second twice. Carl Dambman was twice New England Heavyweight Champ, but dropped to 190 for his last season and consequently lost out in his bid for a third crown. Dambman did set school records for the fastest pin (26 seconds) and the most pins in a career (28).

The 1973-74 season will see if UMass can continue to be one of the prominent teams in the East. Coach Barr enters his seventh season at the helm and figures to count heavily on last years returning NEUWA placers. He will find assistance from Captain Steve Benson, 1973 NEUWA 158 pound Runnerup. Benson is a transfer from New York Maritime Academy and wrestled with some outstanding competition. He is an excellent freestyle wrestler and has many tournament wins to his credit. Last year he was third at both the Colgate and East Stroudsburg Open tourneys. He is a very good wrestler on his feet, but shines when it comes to mat work. Benson will probably move up to 167 this season.

Other wrestlers that could prove helpful, but saw limited varsity action are Steve Ruggeri (1973 NEUWA 118 pound Freshman Champ), Paul Roderiguez, Jim Jordan, Doug Lemire, Bill Rich, Doug Rumpf, John Lastella, Alan Elmont, Dick Muri, and Charlies Klein (1973 NEUWA Freshman Heavyweight Champ).

The recruiting season looked a little brighter as the news of the success of last season spread. New York has contributed a couple of highly rated wrestlers and New England has responded with some heavyweight grapplers. If there is anything that last year's team lacked it was probably brute strength and this season Coach Barr will place more emphasis on strength building.

This season the Minutemen add Hofstra University to the schedule along with C. W. Post College, Brown University, Wesleyan, and possibly another Ivy League school. The Yankee Conference Tournament will be host by UMaine and Dartmouth College will be the site of the 1974 NEUWA Tourney. Winners of this tourney will travel to Iowa State University where the Ghost Cyclones will defend their national title. UMass fans will see more of the Minutemen this year as about half the matches are on the home mats in Boyden Auxiliary Gym.

How Sweet It Was

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

It all started in September with the taming of the Maine Polar Bears at the stadium...then early June rolled along and the nine succumbed to Providence college.

What happened in between is the story in New England Athletic circles. The year that made 72-73 "the Year of the Minutemen"...-The first since 1776.

At best it was a Yankee Conference blitz...at worst a bonanza as UMass squads rolled to more Conference crowns, more in one year than hang from the rafters at Boston Garden representing the Golden 60's of the Boston Celtics.

Those Sunday afternoon strolls to the stadium proved most satisfying (5-0 at home), especially the last jaunt in November which saw 20,000 UMies celebrating the death of the Boston College Eagles 28-7. During that same year, the Boston press' other pet, Harvard, also succumbed to the Minuteman express as UMass trampled the Crimson at Harvard Stadium 28-19.

Atlantic City is not the most exciting place in winter time (there are more pigeons there than people), but UMass and UCal Davis were invited to play indoors (thank god) in the (not good enough for Delaware) Boardwalk Bowl. A national television audience watch Bob Biggs and his UCal Davis teammates succumb to Piel, Paul and company.

The air became chilled and the Cage heated up with the arrival of the hoop season. Two missed free throws against West Virginia started the season on a down beat but 78-71...78-71...climaxed an upbeat which lasted the rest of the campaign. UMass 78, Missouri 71 tells the tale of the visit to "the City that Never sleeps" for 6,000 UMass students who roamed the streets victoriously after the victory.

Pat Keenan was a legend in his own time in UMass hockey circles. The young prolific Keenan continued his assualt and took the UMass record book back home with him to Weston, Ontario. The Rheaultless pucksters season came to an abrupt halt at the hands of The Bowdoin Black Bears in the Division II playoffs at Orr Rink (8-3).

Mike Flannagan and Eddie McMahon, both Sophomores last year, both playing professional this year led the way for the UMass nine...Scouts followed the Yan-Con champs all over New England. Their season ended quietly with losses to Harvard and Providence in the District I playoffs.

The National Champion Women's gymnasts need no description, they did it all...Garber's Nationally ranked lacrosse "Gorilla's...Steve Ferber and the champion netmen....the list goes on.

Such was the scene on sports in 72-73. A tough act to follow you say...perhaps. No, maybe not. This could be the beginning of many exciting years to come. The athletic program will continue to grow as the Minutemen continue their Yankee Conference dynasty and possibly begin a New England sports dynasty.

Pucksters May Improve - Title Possible

By BILL BALLOU

Perhaps the quickest way to get through a review of the 1972-73 hockey season is to go over what didn't happen.

The Minutemen didn't repeat as Division II champions.

Orr Rink didn't burn down.

So much for the high points.

Things really weren't quite that bad, but 72-73 was one of those years when everytime the phone rang in Coach Jack Canniff's office he picked it up with a "What's next" look on his face.

Injuries, the inconsistencies of youth, and individual player problems all contributed to the up and down fortunes of the 72-73 Minutemen. The "ups" came often enough for UMass to rate the second seed in the Division II playoff tournament. The "downs" prevented the Minutemen from ever making a serious run at eventual champs Vermont and finally elimination from the playoffs in the semi-finals.

Injuries, while plentiful, hurt UMass most in goal. By the time March rolled around, Canniff had been forced to use three different goaltenders as starters. Peter Erickson won the job in pre-season only to wreck his already weak knees in practice after about ten games. Chick Rheault took over from Erickson and played sensational goal for another ten or so games until he and his motorcycle fought a losing battle with an icy road in Westhampton. John Kiah finished up, getting a chance as a starter after three years as a backup.

Inexperience, especially in the defensive corps where three of the five backliners were sophomores, was a major contributor to the inconsistency that could see the Minutemen as champs one game and chumps the next.

The defense was anchored by seniors Don Lowe and Bob Shilalie and while neither had a spectacular season, both did steady jobs. Sophs Brian Mulcahy and Mike Ellis had regular jobs too, Mulcahy being probably the best defensemen on the team. Ellis showed signs of brilliance but had his bad games. Robbie Quinlan, the fifth defenseman didn't see enough action to have any accurate judgement passed on him.

The Minutemen scored lots of goals, but most of them came off the stick of Pat Keenan, who graduated. Freshman Billy Harris, who played on Keenan's line, racked up lots of assists and total scoring points, but at times showed a lack of concern over defense. Another freshman, Scott Stuart, earned a regular job in mid-season and while he didn't score many points he played a steady game.

With the departure of Keenan, the top forward on the team figured to be Jim Coleman, a slick center who came on strong toward the end of the season. However, Coleman is reportedly not returning to school, so the UMass offense could find itself out about 40 points.

So much for last year -- now, what figures to be the story in the upcoming season?

A large part of the answer lies in goal. If Rheault can come back from his accident and play as well as he did last season, then UMass is several giant steps closer to regaining the Division II title. Vermont will be gone (they've moved up to Division I), so competition for the championship promises to be somewhat less stiff.

Defensively, Ellis, Mulcahy, and Quinlan could form the nucleus of a solid blueline corps. However, those three "veterans" will still only have about two years combined varsity experience between them so you'll still have to use question marks when talking about defense.

The front lines will have Harris, Stuart, Kevin Conners, Jim Lynch, Steve Nims and John Muse as returnees.

Statistically this group is anything but impressive. However Lynch is the only one who'll be a senior so you really can't make any terribly informed predictions about what to expect. Lynch has a powerful shot and potentially is a high scorer. Harris and Conners both can score, but both have defensive weaknesses. Stuart and Nims are both solid, two-way hockey players. Muse didn't play too much last year but from what he showed it seems that he'll be most valuable in a checking capacity.

For a prediction, I'll say probably third seed in the post-season playoffs, but that's really a shot in the dark. With the question marks facing this team it isn't impossible to forsee a championship, but neither is it impossible to forsee them missing the playoffs altogether.

If the season is as bad injury-wise as it was last year then you can just about forget it. There is no great depth here.

Oh yeah, just for the record I predict Norwich will win the Divisional title.

The Minutemen will be a darkhorse candidate for the Division II Championship, but with Vermont gone to Division I they might have a shot in the dark.

WHY BUY FROM US?

Buying a hi-fi system is certainly a major investment. You should not be just purchasing a product. We at Tripod Audio hope to offer you more than just the simple hardware. We want your system to bring you a lifetime of musical enjoyment (after all isn't that what it's all about.) So we thought it might be a good idea to tell you about the policies we use to assure your satisfaction.

1. TRY BEFORE YOU BUY:

If you're not sure the music system which sounds so good in our shop will sound just as good when you bring it home; than we will let you try it at home before you buy it.

2. ONE YEAR SPEAKER PROTECTION PLAN:

During the first year we will allow your full purchase price towards any speaker we carry provided the speakers you are buying cost at least twice as much as your original speakers, your speakers are in new condition, and you have retained the original packing material. Reductions must be made for cabinet damage.

3. FREE DELIVERY AND INSTALLATION:

We will be happy to deliver and install your system to make sure everything is working properly. If it is not perfect we will replace the defective component for you. We want your music system functioning properly the first time. Cables and speaker wire are included automatically in the price.

4. REASONABLE PAYMENT PLAN:

Tripod Audio accepts BankAmericard and Master Charge. We can probably help you obtain long-term financing from a credit company. If you decide on a system costing slightly more than you had originally budgeted, we'll let you owe us the balance over a period of 90 days - no interest.

5. LIBERAL TRADE-IN POLICY:

Tripod Audio, like Tripod Camera, specializes in trade-ins - we allow you for what we believe we can reasonably resell the equipment. We also offer a warranty on most of our used equipment.

6. THIRTY-DAY OVER THE COUNTER EXCHANGE:

In the first (30) days, if any recommended component fails to operate properly, Tripod Audio will replace it with a new one provided the defective component has not been physically abused and is a current model. (Returned equipment must be in original new condition with all packing material, accessories, warranty cards, instruction books, etc.)

7. SEVEN DAY MONEY BACK GUARANTEE:

If, after purchasing your system from us, you decide it doesn't fit your needs; or if for any reason you want to return the equipment (in perfect condition, with all cartons, paperwork, etc.), do so, and for the first seven days after purchase receive your purchase price back immediately, no hassles.

You can find Tripod Audio in two places — 219 Main St. in Northampton on the second floor above the Tripod Camera Shop, and 98 N. Pleasant St. in Amherst in the back of the Tripod Camera Shop.

"THE BEST TABLE RADIO IN THE WORLD"

THE KLH 21/II FM

The least expensive way we know to fill a room with good music. This is the new model of the famous KLH-FM radio. The new Model 21II has more station-getting ability and cleaner sound than its famous predecessor.

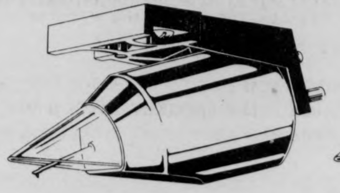
Tripod Audio guarantees the 21II for two years, parts and labor.

The B & O Cartridges

Two ways to make a real improvement in the sound of your fine hi-fi system at a moderate cost.

The quality of the cartridge largely determines the fidelity of reproduced sound. The amplifiers and speakers, regardless of their specifications, cannot correct the faults introduced by the cartridge.

To meet the critical responsibility placed on the cartridge Bang & Olufsen has produced two cartridges which have been acknowledged as being among the world's finest.



The SP-14 Cartridge

$45.00

B & O SP•14

The best sounding cartridge in this price range. It uses a gem quality diamond of low mass for smooth highs and solid bass.

B & O SP•12

The best sounding cartridge there is. These are hand picked and each one comes with a graph of its frequency response. We can hear the difference; we are sure you will too.

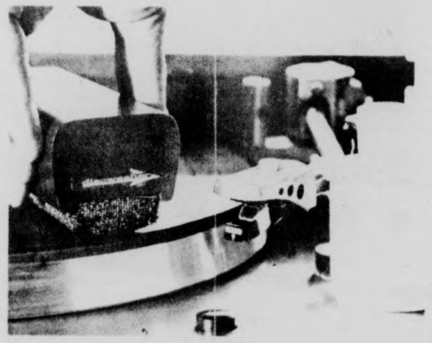
Dusty Records?

THE DISCWASHER HAS THE ANSWER

The Discwasher system is a superior record cleaning kit that consists of two parts which work together: The Discwasher fluid, and a specially designed brush which also serves as a storage unit for the fluid bottle.

Experiments have revealed that humidity plus vinyl records can serve as a total life-support system for microorganisms found in every home. Such microbes, especially fungi, produce enzymes in a micro-environment that are active enough to etch glass. Records may be easily and irreversibly damaged. Discwasher fluid is exclusively formulated to inhibit the growth of microorganisms; to solubilize destructive and groove-blocking fats and lipids (found on all human fingers) and to reduce the effective static potential of the record surface.

You only have to use it once to be convinced that it is the best! For $12.95 you can protect your record collection that is worth hundreds of dollars.



For You Headphone Freaks

We spent a long time looking at and listening to all sorts of headphones this past summer. The ones we all agreed on offered the best sound and durability for the money are the headphones made by Scintrex, a company who makes all sorts of high technology equipment for industry and professional applications. We found that two of their products really stand out.

The Model 88 is a lightweight set (only 9 oz.) but the sound they put out is heavy. They list for 24.95, but our selling price is just $19.95.

The Model 98 knocked us out. They have got to be the best thing around for $28.00. You have to hear them to understand.

HI FIDELITY SYSTEMS

for Everyone

Many stores that sell stereo equipment feature at least one stereo system that consists of a well known standard brand receiver, record changer and cartridge. The speakers bear a name that is less familiar. What you usually pay for the package is equivalent to the list price of the receiver and the changer. You get the speakers essentially for "free"

Does that mean such a package is a good value?

In most cases it's not. The reason you pay so little for the speakers is that usually the store pays so little for the speakers. Not a bad idea, if it were possible to get good speakers for next to nothing. But frankly, in our experience, it is not possible. And if you don't get good speakers it doesn't much matter how good the other components are.

On the other hand the stereo systems pictured on these pages are unquestionably a good value. Tripod Audio does not sell "house brand" or "black box" speakers. Right from the start we have carried only the best in audio equipment. To us "hi-fidelity" means just that; fidelity to the original - and to do that you need good equipment.

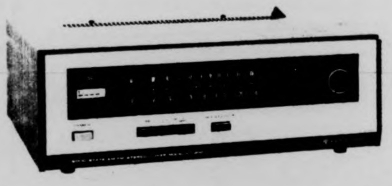
Well here it is our "$200. system"; except it doesn't sell for $200, it sells for $29.00 more. oh, we could have given you a $200.00 system like the other hi-fi shops do. It would consist of an over-grown radio for an amp. a pair of house brand speakers, and quite probably a BSR 310X because it's the least expensive brand name good turntable. But don't be fooled - it's not a hi-fi system for two good reasons: it doesn't sound like one and it will probably fall apart in 2 years.

So faced with the problem of offering a high quality hi-fidelity system in a low price range we did the only thing we could do — leave out the radio. Here we put together the new Kenwood 2002A amplifier (15 watts a channel) a pair of KLH 31 speakers (brand new and they are good) and the old standby the BSR 310 AXE (also new model). This is a hi fidelity system we can stand behind and you will find it a good value. The list price of this system is $296.70, but because we wanted to provide you with a low-priced real hi-fi system we're offering this system for $229.00, amost a 25% discount. Besides we would like to see you buy brand names, high quality components rather than a $200 radio.



A special surprise for FM fans!

If you buy our "System No. 1" we will sell to you at the system discount the matching Kenwood tuner the KT 2001A. You can take advantage of this offer up to 6 months from the date you have bought our System No. 1. This way we don't break your bank and you can still end up with great FM sounds at the system savings.

System No. 2 $299.50

This system is very much like our system No. 1. But instead of just a power amp we include a Sony FM Stereo receiver.

THE RECEIVER: The Sony 6036A AM/FM Stereo receiver provides enough power to satisfy the KLH 31 speakers. It even has enough power to satisfy some of the 31's big sisters. It delivers more than 30 watts of RMS power from 20-20,000 Hz at less than 0.8% distortion. The tuner has solid-state filters, IC's and FET, etc.. etc. What all this means is when it gets a station, it's got it.

THE SPEAKERS: KLH has been making great sounding speakers which cost less for almost 20 yrs. Their new model 31 is a chip off their old block — come in and listen.

THE TABLE: The BSR 310 AXE is equipped with a manual facility for those who care enough... to be kind to their LPs. A damped cueing lever and improved performance. Oh, by the way, all this lists for $376.70 but we're nice people so we will let you have it all for just $299.50.

This is the system where it comes together. For $439.00 you can get all the music - from the low, lows to the high, highs. A system that sounded this good use to cost well over $500. dollars, but this system changes that.

THE LOUDSPEAKER: The KLH17 is a high performance loudspeaker system and probably KLH's best buy. It will let you hear the low notes on a double base or bass guitar with striking realism. Its mid-range is clear and crisp and its highs are what you expect from a KLH speaker.

THE RECEIVER: The receiver we have chosen is the Kenwood KR4200. Having more than 20 watts RMS and its power amp. is directly coupled from input to output for improved low frequency performance and high damping. The Kenwood's cost more to make than there competitors products. Their quality control is high, they use better, longer lasting materials, and, to us, they sound better. The tuner, of the latest technology, uses the DSD circuit for improved stereo separation and low distortion.

THE TABLE: To match the leval of quality which the KLH17's and Kenwood represent, we recommend the BSR 510AX. It has a good heavy platter, a convenient damped cueing control; and minimal (also inaudible) wow, flutter and rumble. We also supply a dust cover and a Shure M75E cartridge - a smooth, light tracking, wide range cartridge with fine high frequency capabilities.

You save $115.65 when you buy the system for $439.00 - it lists for $556.65.

System No. 4 $640.00

This is the audio equivalent of a sports car: no frills, just performance - and lots of it. Able to reproduce the entire musical spectrum, at loud levels in a large listening room, the cymbal's highest overtone and the organ's lowest note.

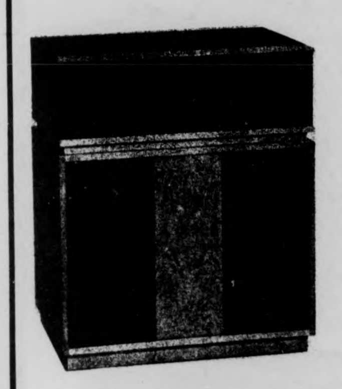
THE RECEIVER: The Kenwood KR 5200 is the power plant of our $640 system. It doesn't have any gimmicks - like remote control automatic tuning - that some receivers have. It doesn't need them. It does have over 60 watts RMS of power, a sensitive, low distortion tuner that will please the most critical FM listener, and all the flexability you will ever need.

THE TABLE: The Dual 1214 has everything: fine design, fine engineering, costly materials, and careful manufacturing. All this plus pitch control and viscuous damped cueing. The only things it doesn't have is wow, flutter and rumble (the bad guys).

It's a complete quality turntable to match the quality and performance of our $640 system - oh yes, it comes with a Shure M93E cartridge which lists for $40.00. (list price of components is $765.95).

THE LOUDSPEAKER: The listening quality of any hi-fi system depends on the loudspeaker. The KLH 6 is one of the finest acoustic suspension speaker systems we've heard, regardless of price. It has earned universal respect for its excellent tonal balance, transient response, frequency range and lack of coloration.

Klipsch Speakers or Why "Horns"



Belle Klipsch
Loudspeaker

Klipschorn®

One product which Tripod Audio is pleased to offer its customers is the loudspeaker systems designed by Paul W. Klipsch. We believe these to be one of the finest loudspeaker systems available. The Klipsch systems use three speakers, one each for the bass, the midrange and high frequencies. All Klipsch speakers use the same high quality horn-loaded drivers for the midrange and highs. The Klipschorn and Belle Klipsch Models also use a horn for the bass frequencies.

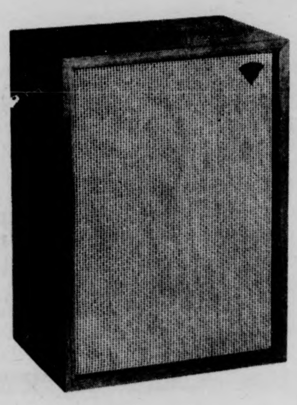
Horns can deliver more sound with less distortion because the sound source - the diaphragm - does not have to work as hard as does a cone speaker, (also known as "direct radiators." The cone faces the load of air in your room directly; the diaphragm in the horn driver faces a tiny load of air at the entrance of the horn. The horn amplifies this energy to move the load of air in the room. Instead of driving a heavy paper structure weighing many grams, the entire output of the amplifier has only to drive a tiny diaphragm weighing milligrams. This small mass can be more easily moved and controlled. When a note starts, the horn can produce more sound faster, when the tone stops, the diaphragm stops at once - whereas the heavy paper cone is going to flop back and forth for a bit before settling down.

What all this means is simply that horn speaker systems sound better. Horns have lower distortion, you get clearer, sharper, fuller sound and you don't have to play them loud to hear what you want.

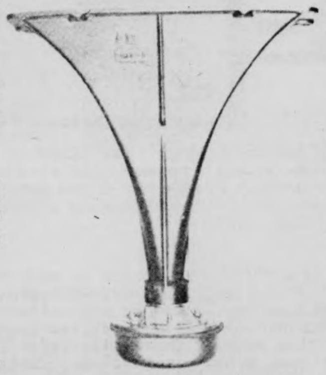
"A properly disigned horn is, without question the best kind of loudspeaker . . . . . the only horns of practical use are the folded corner variety, of which some of the best have been patented by Paul Klipsch."

Norman Crowhurst,
"High Fidelity Magazine"

Klipsch horn systems start at $228.00 with the Model H pictured here. The Model H is the same size as the popular Acoustic Suspension or direct radiators, it takes less power and sounds better. If you haven't heard the difference a good horn system can make, come in to either one of our shops. We think you will be very interested. Tripod Audio warranties you Klipsch speakers for as long as you own them.



Heresy®



The mid-range horn assembly as used on a Klipsch horn system.

Tripod Audio sells turntables and changers ranging in price from $54.95 to $550.00 of all these there is one turntable which stands out as an exceptional value, both in reference to its performance and its price. This is the Beogram 3000, made in Denmark by Bang & Olufsen.

The Beogram 3000 is an integrated, automatic turntable offering utter simplicity of operation and elegant, understated design. All functions are handled by a single master control: the choice of record size automatically selects the correct speed (33 or 45 rpm), a slight touch of the center disk places the stylus tip in the first groove of the record. When the selection is completed, the tone arm automatically returns to its rest position and shuts off the unit.

The tone arm pivots on hardened steel bearings for low horizontal friction. An ingenious system of inclined planes automatically applies the correct amount of anti-skating force as the tone arm travels across the record. A pendulum suspension system isolates the stylus from external vibrations and acoustic feedback.

As a turntable must operate in concert with the cartridge, the Beogram 3000 has been engineered to utilize Bang & Olufsen cartridges. The integration of tone arm and cartridge provides a lower dynamic mass, thus reducing the force required to move the stylus tip, and eliminates unwanted resonances. Bang & Olufsen cartridges have been acknowledged as being among the world's finest.

The Beogram 3000 costs $250.00

with SP12 cartridge rosewood base and hinged dust cover.
We Warranty it for 2 years parts and labor.

Our Least Expensive Horn-Type System Costs About $1,000

This stereo system sounds better than any of the systems shown on pages 2 and 3.

Below $1,000. You are limited to direct radiator speakers. And the difference between these direct radiators and a good horn system is greater than the written word can convey. If you have not heard a good horn system, bring in your favorite record or tape. You will be amazed. We feel, along with the February 15 issue of "Rolling Stone" (p. 66) that the best horns are made by Klipsch. Klipsch horn-type speakers come small, medium and large. The small ones, the Heresies are included in the $1,000 system. You can buy the speaker unfinished and save $110 on the system price. The Kenwood KR 4200 receiver has more than enough power for the Heresies and of course one of the finest tuners in the industry. We also include a dual 1218 table and, to take good care of your records year after year, nothing but a B+O cartridge would do.

Many listeners will start with a good receiver, player and a pair of cheaper, direct radiator speakers, and then take advantage of our speaker trade-in policy to upgrade their speakers as soon as they have recovered from the first purchase. Within a year of purchase, we'll take back your KLH, AR's, whatever, and give you back every cent you had in them towards a pair of Klipsch speakers. Don't worry about your amp; the Klipsch speakers take less power to drive than any direct radiator type.

This is the entry into magnificent sound. Two Klipsch Heresy loudspeakers, a Kenwood 4200 Receiver and a Dual 1218 changer fitted with a B+O Sp14 cartridge. This system will fill any room with clean, natural sound without getting between you and the music. It will exhibit about a fifth the distortion of systems using suspension type speakers.

This ad has dealt with only some of the products we carry. To see the others you must come into one of our shops. You'll find our audio shop different from others in Western Mass. We do not believe we can be all things to all people, - and we do not try. We do not carry every brand there is, but we do have the few which we think offer real performance and value for the money. Some names you will be familiar with, some names you won't.

We really do believe in high-fidelity. We sell expensive looking equipment but don't let that turn you away. We keep our overhead and costs low so we can pass the savings on to you. Like our parent company, Tripod Camera, we stand behind everything we sell and offer superior service to our customers in the way of knowledgeable personnel and in policy. If you do business with us and have a problem please let us know (our complaint department is very responsive).

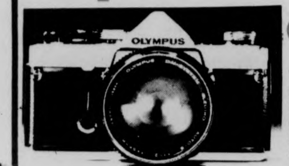
Olympus OM-1



The 35mm SLR camera is one of the finest photographic tools available today. Because of its reflex construction it provides a logical basis for a complete photographic system.

Five years ago, the Olympus Optical Co., a pioneer in the field of small, precise cameras and ultra-sophisticated scientific measurement equipment, decided to create a brand new 35mm SLR system providing high performance, extreme reliability and extensive range of accessories and yet at the same time preserving the compactness, light weight and convenience of handling that was the original "raison d' etre" for the 35mm camera.
The result today is the Olympus OM-System, a complete system for the advanced amateur, professional, and scientist providing an astonishing variety of photographic applications (280 accessories) built around a unique camera that is 35% smaller and lighter and considerably quieter than existing 35mm SLR cameras.

Canon
TLb 35mm SLR Camera

Now there's a camera with both simplicity of operation and the quality features usually found only in the more expensive models. Highlighting the TLb is the unique center-weighted metering system that operates with the FD lens either wide open or stopped down.

Either method gives perfect exposures, every time. With FL lenses, stopped-down metering is used. Shutter speeds range from 1 to 1/500 second, with electronic flash sync at 1/60. There are many other fine features, too, including multislot film loading, breech-lock lens mount, microprism focusing, and more. It's the perfect camera for the beginner — yet advanced enough for the avid photographer.

It's That Time Of Year Again

7,500 Register In Heat

By JEFF LONG

The UMass 1973-74 academic year was ushered in Tuesday as about 7,500 undergraduates converged on Curry Hicks Cage and Boyden Gymnasium for the semester registration of courses. Despite temperatures in the 90's, officials reported few irate students and generally praised the operation's smoothness.

Thomas Chamberlain, Assistant Schedule Officer, was stationed in Curry Hicks and stated that, "input has been ver favorable for OSCAR (the computer scheduling system), as compared with input received in previous years when students stood in long lines for courses". He remarked Tuesday that procedures at the Cage were going "absolutely perfect, very smoothly" and that he had not seen more than about 25 students "who didn't know where to go". He estimated that 3,500 students had gone through the red tape and that 570 had had their schedules 'wiped' for not having showed up nor having paid their semester bill after pre-registering.

Henry Skillings, also from the Calendar and Scheduling Office, oversaw operations at Boyden; there, approximately 4,000 students registered. Among them were those who had either not registered or not paid, or had neither registered nor paid. He ventured that, on the average, a student who had not pre-registered or who had to add courses spent about an hour at registration. He also noted, however, that some students were surprised by the quickness of the procedure. Some 80% of all registered received desired courses, and 60% received the exact schedule requested. Skillings observed that there was a number-15%-20%-who were justifiably dissatisfied with their schedules.

"Our main problem," he said, "was with students who had lost a course because of University departments not being able to accomodate all requests." He explained that the term "restricted", when applied to courses on schedule cards, signifies courses upon which departments have imposed limits as to class and number of students. When unable to assign a student to a "restricted" section, OSCAR attempts to locate an alternative section of the course.

The heat did take its toll at Whitmore, though, as workers at the Bursar's Office at about 4:00 were authorized to issue "clearance cards" to simmering students waiting to pay bills. Wednesday, long lines again stretched from each window.

Another relatively minor problem concerned the clearance cards being presented at the athletic ticket tables, before acquiring a meal ticket. The card would be, as Skillings stated, "no proof of payment" if the student took his card to the athletic ticket table first.

Student volunteers at the registration proceedings were commended by both Skillings and Chamberlain. Helpers usually come back year after year, until graduation, at which time they often suggest names of possible replacements. Chamberlain. estimated that about 50 students would be on hand today at Boyden to assist with graduate registration, at which even larger throngs are expected. Of the total number expected to register this semester (22,055), 17,700 will be undergraduates, including a freshman class of 3900. There will be 670 two-year Stockbridge School students and about 3680 graduate students.

In the educational options area, a Global Survival program has begun for 100 selected freshmen. They will study in a special curriculum keyed to global environmental and political concepts. Fifty new students will enroll in University Without Walls, bringing the total to 150. UWW students include those with full-time jobs and other non-traditional students.

University Year for Action is adding 70 new students this year. UYA students work and live in the community for a year and get classroom credit. The UMass Center for Outreach expects to place over 200 students in off-campus part-time jobs and internships. They will work for public agencies, environmental offices, community organizations and at other jobs in some 15 Massachusetts communities.

CCEBS (Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students), a program of financial aid and tutoring help for minority students, will enroll 133 more students, bringing the total in the program to 572. This year more than 400 students will study abroad, at universities in a half-dozen foreign countries. New this year are study programs at the University of Victoria in Canada, the University of Helsinki in Finland and in the spring semester, at the University of Grenoble in France.

In other special option programs, over 800 students will study off campus under the Five College Program, taking classes at Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke or Smith Colleges; and approximately 100 more will enroll in BDIC (Bachelor's Degree With Individual Concentration) and work out their own program of study.

Nursing students are offered a whole new undergraduate curriculum beginning this fall, a course of study tailored to meet a growing emphasis on health care rather than health restoration. A major shift will be from hospital training to a variety of community settings--clinics, day care centers, schools and health centers. The 120 students will work in four satellite learning centers, one each in Greenfield and Amherst and two in Springfield.

The UMass Fine Arts Center, a $13.8 million project, will be completed early in 1974. It will offer classroom and studio space for the fine arts departments, with auditoriums and theatres for the performing arts. Also to be finished early in 1974 is a new power plant. The change from the old coal-fired plant on campus to the new plant will be gradual and will be made over a long period. Construction will continue

There was plenty of confusion, but plenty of information available to the 7,500 undergraduates who registered in sweltering heat in Curry Hicks Cage yesterday.

Students push themselves and their belongings through the sweltering heat — to settle into sweltering rooms.

Moving In

Loud Music, Heat

By SUSAN GALER

The dorms have opened up again this September at U-Mass to admit the freshmen that are coming in droves to start an altogether new way of life. Freshmen...anyone can spot them; walking in herds of sixes, sevens and eights.

While they act differently, ranging from the super-confident to the crying cringing, their new faces and bewildered look (no matter how over-confident) always prompts that inevitable question. Are you a freshman? A smile and a quick nod straightens everything out. Or does it?

It certainly explains the brand new suitcases and dorm cubicles splattered with fresh florescent orange and green paint. It definitely explains the Alice Cooper record blaring out the window from eight speakers. And of course one doesn't overlook that pungent aroma that fills the air. After all the kid got here twenty minutes ago and can't wait to really get into the swing of things up here. Or so he thinks he's getting into the swing of things.

Gradually the odor drifts away and is replaced by banging, screeching and a crash. Fixing up a room can be tougher than it seems. So can looking for a roll of tape, a wastebasket, and a new desk when one of the legs gets broken or turning the room upside down looking for a pillow only to realize that it was left at home 200 miles away while you were so preoccupied packing the stero carefully for 45 minutes into the trunk of a Volkswagen. Nevertheless, nothing quite matched the feeling when tearing out of the shower and losing your towel and coming face to face with the coed in the next room.

College life is certainly different than expected. But the wise learn fast and the smart ones know that as long as there's still such a thing as laughter and a good sense of humor UMass will always be a great place to live.

100 Students In C.C. Hotel

Dorm Rooms: The Search For Space

By AVIS YUNI

"On paper we're crowded. At the end of the week we'll have vacancies," Associate Dean of Students W. Daniel Fitzpatrick and Director of Housing Bruce Cochran told the Collegian yesterday in regard to the current dormitory housing shortage.

At the moment there is no room to house the 100 Students who are staying temporarily in the Campus Center Hotel. Numerous other students who had decided last year to live off campus but couldn't obtain housing have also been turned away from the Housing Office and told to come back next week when there will be vacancies for them.

Fitzpatrick and Cochran explained that the shortage is partly caused by the students who signed up for rooms last year, decided not to return to UMass, but have failed to notify the Housing Office so that these rooms could be reassigned.

At noon Friday, all rooms which were reserved but remain unoccupied will be handed out to those students awaiting housing.

Space will also be created, Fitzpatrick said, by the numerous Freshman who withdraw from the University in particularly the first three weeks. Most students will be in dorms by the middle of next week.

"It's the human error and procrastination that is our biggest enemy," Cochran stated, citing the other cause of the problem. Fitzpatrick explained that only 10 or 15 of those students staying in the Campus Center Hotel are there because of mechanical errors. The others are there because they were recent admitees, they didn't pay their bills on time, etc.

Others, Cochran explained, fail to requet a room, and it would be fallacious to assign them to dorms when they didn't request them. However, some of these students expected to be assigned a room anyway.

Every year more people are assigned to rooms then the dorms can handle, Cochran explained, because many will fail to return or move off campus without notifying the university. However, Fitzpatrick pointed out that 95% of the students who wish housing on campus have moved in and are happy.

Last year at this time 250 students were being temporarily housed in the Campus Center Hotel. Hamlin House was also being used to house many more students until they could be assigned elsewhere. It was the first year that the OSCAR computer system was used, Cochran and Fitzpatrick explained, and problems were noted and changes made.

"Mechanically we can improve it but the human must be considered," he stated. Fitzpatrick pointed out that as long as there are kids who don't pay their bills on time, notify the office of changes in their housing plans, etc., we'll have the problem.

Fitzpatrick pointed out that about 100 students signed up for three dorms last April during room choosing week. During the summer they were sent letters stating the rooms they signed up for and asking their preference. If no preference was given the computer took the dorm with the highest code number and assigned the student to it.

In regard to Freshmen housing requests, Cochran stated that the Counseling Center which runs Summer Orientation compiled data last year on how many Freshmen received rooms in the areas they requested during their orientation last summer. They determined that 85% of the Freshmen last year were placed in areas of their first or second choice while only 6% received their fourth or fifth choice.

Changes Meet Returning Students

during the year on an addition to the infirmary, to be finished in the spring, and on the second tower for the Graduate Research Center, to be Completed sometime in 1975.

In other academic developments:

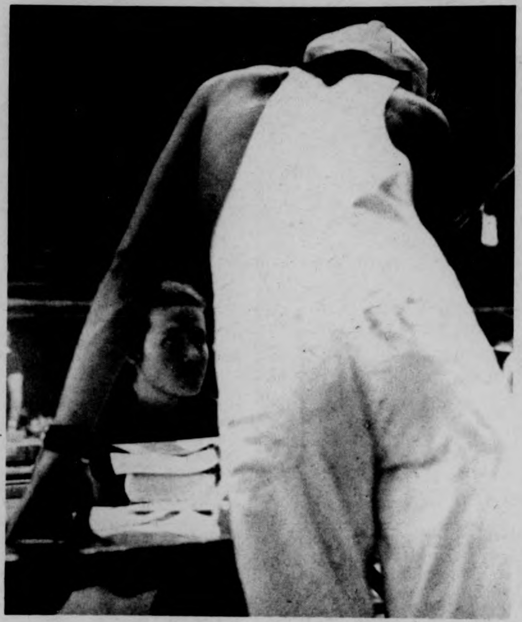
--a school of Health Sciences has been established through the merger of two existing units--the School of Nursing and the Department of Public Health. Also, the department of nutrition and food of the School of Home Economics has been merged with the department of food science and technology, creating a new department of food science and nutrition;

--theatre, formerly a part of the speech department, has been made a separate department with Prof. David M. Knauf as its head;

--new department heads have also been named in mathematics and statistics (Prof. Robert J. Blattner), music (Prof. Robert V. Sutton) electrical and computer engineering (Prof. Jack Keil Wolf) landscape architecture and regional planning (Prof. Ross S. Whaley) military general business and finance (H. Richard EHartzler); and Management (Arthur Elkins).

--freshman enrollment in the School of Engineering has reversed a downward trend and will be up 31 per cent to a total of 257 in September of 1973.

--a grant of approximately $92,000 from the federal government to the UMass Veterans Affairs Office will establish three new staff positions to help veterans solve academic and financial problems.



One of the 7,500 students who attended registration in Curry Hicks Cage Wed., receives information from a registration official.

Auditions Set For Productions

The Theatre Department is scheduling auditions for the 1973-74 season of projects leading to major productions of the following plays:

Eugene O'Neill's "A Moon for the Misbegotten", "Jacques Brel is Alive and Well. . ." (Pianist only), Henrik Ibsen's "Rosmersholm", John Osborne's "The Entertainer", Oscar Wilde's "The Importance of Being Earnest", Children's Theatre project, Studio Theatre one-acts.

Auditions will be held Monday and Tuesday, Sept. 10 and 11, at 3:00 and 7:00 p.m. in Bartlett Auditorium. Applicants should sign up on the 4th floor of Machmer Hall (outside the Theatre Dept. office) for a specific audition appointment. Those auditioning should prepare two contrasting selections not to exceed three minutes combined.

Callbacks for the individual projects will be held on Sept. 12 and 13, at a time and place to be announced.

Roles are available to Five-College students, faculty, and friends; however, students fulfilling requirements in the University's Dept. of Theatre will be given first consideration.

Parking Notice

Parking rules and regulations have been changed in an effort to improve parking services. The intent of the changes has been to assure students, staff, faculty, and visitors of having predictable opportunities for parking on the Amherst campus, consistent with the services options selected. It is our belief that firm, even-handed enforcement of all parking rules and regulations will be in the best interest of everyone.

One important change involves the addition of several towable offenses. Cars now will be towed if:

(1) parked in a lot in which you are not assigned. (Unless at a parking meter or as indicated below.

(2) not registered with the University Parking Office.

(3) more than five (5) unpaid tickets are accrued within a 21 day period.

Unpaid tickets will result in a court summons and could mean the loss of your driver's license.

Since there is a heavy influx of unregistered cars during the month of September, signs have been erected to direct drivers of unregistered cars to the University stadium area. Cars will not be ticketed or towed from this area during the month of September.

In all other areas, all parking regulations will be strictly enforced beginning 7:00 a.m., September 7, 1973

All 1973 University parking registrations expire on Saturday, September 1, 1973.

Reaction Mixed To Parking Reform

By CINDY GONET

(Students at UMass are returning to campus this fall to find a new parking system. In this report, MDC writer Cindy Gonet examines the history of the new parking plan.)

For six years the UMass Board of Trustees have been examining the parking situation at UMass. They have periodically called for reform relying on various committees from various segments of the campus community at various times.

In April 1973 the administration unveiled the parking proposal before the Student Senate, Graduate Senate, Faculty Senate, the local 1776 and the MSEA (Mass. State Employe's Assoc.). Two working days later Vice Chancellors Campion and Gage took the proposal to the Finance Committee of the Board of Trustees.

One week later the Student Senate and the unions arranged an open hearing in the Student Union Ballroom to air opinions on the fees which ranged from $5 to $155.

Due to the large amount of opposition from segments of the campus, consideration of the issue by the Trustees was postponed from May 2 until the 25th.

On May 15, the Finance Committee of the Trustees chaired an open hearing in the Ballroom at which time numerous objections were again raised.

At the May 25 meeting of the Trustees the administration withdrew their current proposal in light of the opposition and pledged that they would consult all interested constituencies before drawing up another proposal.

The administration presented their new proposal to the unions, senates, and professional association on June 13. The administration drew up the proposal and presented it to these bodies without their consultation.

The Trustees delegated authority to Chancellor Bromery in implementing any necessary parking plan at the Trustees meeting in late June.

This plan remained unchanged. It was identical to the June 13 parking proposal.

Members of the various governance units continuously called for revamping of the parking and transportation council into a users council, or a more representative body. To date there has been no action in this matter.

Local 1776 has filed suits against the Trustees individually in Suffolk Superior Court.

Participants in the picketing of Whitmore were members from 1776, undergraduate student body, MSEA, members of the professional association and faculty.

Comm. Wants Troy Off The Bench

BOSTON (AP) - A legislative committee recommended on Wednesday that disbarred Dorchester District Court Judge Jerome P. Troy be removed from the bench.

Sen. John J. Conte, D-Worcester, said the legislature's Judiciary Committee found the evidence for removal "clear and compelling."

Conte is chairman of the committee.

In a related developmeent, the Senate passed and sent to the House a bill suspending Troy's $27,500 annual salary while proceedings against him are pending.

The committee vote to remove Troy-by the rarely used address proceedings-was 20-1. Rep. Paul M. Murphy, D-Brockton, was the sole dissenter.

Both Conte and the House Judiciary Committee chairman, Cornelius F. Kiernan, D-Lowell, said they thought both branches would approve the bill, which asks Gov. Francis W. Sargent to remove Troy if the Executive Council assents.

Sources Indicate Ehrlichman Indicted

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) - John D. Ehrlichman, former top domestic advisor to President Nixon, has been indicted on charges of perjury, burglary and conspiracy in the break-in at the office of Daniel ellsberg's psychiatrist, a source said Wednesday.

Three other former White House aides - Egil Krogh, David Young and convicted Watergate conspirator G. Gordon Liddy - also were indicted for their alleged roles in the 1971 break-in, a reliable source said. Krogh was charged with solicitation of a burglary, conspiracy and burglary. Liddy and Young were charged with burglary and conspiracy to commit a burglary.

Ehrlichman sent word through his attorney that he will surrender here Tuesday. A district attorney's spokesman said Ehrlichman would be arraigned the same day after being booked, fingerprinted and photographed. Tuesday is the deadline set for voluntary surrender of those indicted before arrest warrants would be issued.

The other three men were unavilable for comment. Officials said it was expected they would surrender here although they have the option to do so elsewhere.

Sources close to the county grand jury, which issued the indictment secretly Tuesday, indicated that the perjury charge resulted from centradictions between Ehrlichman's testimony here last June 8 in a secret grand jury session and his later public testimony before the senate Watergate committee in Washington.

Other contradictions were believed to exist in three memorandums presented to the grand jury during its probe.

The White House interoffice memos reportedly involved Ehrlichman, Krogh and Young in plans for the break-in. Krough and Young headed the undercover White House "plumber squad" charged with plugging leaks of secret information.

The indictment was ordered sealed until at least one of these indicted had surrendered, and Dist. Atty. Joseph Busch declined comment on the indentities of those named.

Sirica Silences Magruder, McCord

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Federal Judge John J. Sirica silenced two major figures in the watergate scandal Wednesday, calling it a disgrace that criminals could "profit by their wrongdoing" by traveling the lecture circuit.

The chief U.S. district judge here ordered convicted burglar James W. McCord Jr. and confessed conspirator Jeb Stuart Magruder to refrain from making public addresses or granting interviews if they want to remain free pendiing sentencing.

Magruder, a former White House aide and deputy director of the Committee for the Re-election of the President, told Sirica in a letter the only reason he considered a speaking tour was because "I now find myself in financial difficulty."

McCord's lawyer, Bernard Fensterwald, whose request for permission for his client to make a speaking tour was turned down by Sirica last week, asked the judge at the hearing Wednesday to modify the restriction. Fensterwald said he understood the judge was trying to restrict prejudicial pretrial publicity in the watergate case and proposed that McCord be permitted to make speeches outside a 100-mile radius of Washington with no radio or television coverage permitted.

Nixon Warns Arabs On Oil

WASHINGTON (AP)-Here, at a glance, are items discussed by President Nixon at his news conference Wednesday:

Oil: He said that if oil-producing Arab states expropriate U.S.-owned property without fair compensation and continue to increase oil prices, they will lose their markets as Western nations look to other supply sources.

Watergate Tapes: It would not be appropriate, Nixon said, to specify what kind of Supreme Court decision it would take before he would agree to give up tapes of presidential conversations sought by Watergate probers.

Promises New State of The Union Address

Nixon Asks Inflation Action

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon said Wednesday he will send Congress a new State of the Union message calling for action to stem inflation and to preserve the nation's energy resources.

In his second news conference in two weeks, Nixon also exhorted Congress not to cut his defense budget.

"We are looking forward in the next summit meeting to limiting nuclear arms," the President said of one major impending round of discussions. ". . .This great effort will be destroyed if the Congress reduces the budget for defense in any substantial amount."

Nixon also was drawn into exchanges about Watergate and the investigation of Vice President Spiro T. Agnew by federal prosecutors in Baltimore, although questions about the Watergate scandal did not dominate the session as it had his meeting with newsmen Aug. 22 at San Clemente, Calif.

The President said he was confident that appeals courts would uphold his right to keep from Senate investigators and the Watergate grand jury tape recordings of his conversations with former aides implicated in the cover-up of the June 7, 1972, break-in of Democratic headquarters.

Record Increases Expected In Wholesale Prices

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-The government will hit consumers on Friday with some of the worst price news of the post-World War II era when it releases its wholesale price index for August.

Sources at the Treasury department said Wednesday the index may show that farm prices increased more than 20 per cent during the month, and that the over-all wholesale price index increased by more than a staggering 5 per cent.

In forecasting record increases in the wholesale prices for August, the sources cautioned that the figures they are working with are unofficial and based on projections of Treasury economists.

The Labor department will release the official index Friday.

Officials fear it will have an adverse psychological effect, because it will show what happened to food prices after the government lifted its price freeze from the food industry July 18.

During the freeze, the wholesale index actually declined by 1.3 per cent with farm products leading the way with a 5.1- per cent decline. In projecting at an annual rate, the increase of over 20 per cent in August would represent an annual rate of increase of a phenomenal 240 per cent, although no one expects the 20 per cent rate to be maintained.

An increase of more than 5 per cent in the over-all index would far exceed the post-World War II record increase of 2.8 per cent, set in July of 1950.

Most, if not all, of the increase in wholesale prices eventually works its way through the market system into higher retail prices.

Increases for some items, such as for pork and poultry, already have reached the retail level, and in the case of poultry, prices have even begun to decline again.

But Treasury economists say most of the big increase in retail food prices still lies ahead.

Vermont Gov. Says 'No More Rock Fests'

HOLLAND, Vt. (AP)-Overlooking a rolling pasture littered with garbage, paper and cans, Gov. Thomas Salmon promised the townspeople of Holland there would never be another rock festival in the state of Vermont.

The governor made the trip Wednesday to inspect the site of a festival which drew 35,000 people to the Canadian-border town. The planned three-day event erupted into gate-crashing, fights and a shooting incident. The rock music was cut short a full day early when the promoters could no longer pay the bands to play.

By the time Salmon reached the hillside where throngs had camped, the area had been partially cleaned by promotor Ronald "Mac" Worth and a group of young people who worked all day Tuesday.

The people of Holland told the governor they had suffered no personal injuries and little property damage, but they said the emotional scars were deep.

Salmon said he fully understood their feelings, because his town of Rockingham had been beseiged by "motorcycle scrambles" several years before.

"I know what a mob scene can be like in a rural community," Salmon told the 125 persons gathered on the windy hillside. "The only good news is that the thing has become so visible and such bad news, particularly in terms of those who live here, that we will change our laws and our regulations in our society so we will not have any more rock concerts in Vermont ever."

Hold 13 in Paris Embassy

Terrorists Threaten Hostages

By JOHN VINOCUR
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP) - Three Palestinian terrorists holding persons in the Saudi Arabian Embassy threw one of the hostages out a window Wednesday night and threatened to execute the others "right away" unless their demands for passage to an Arab country were met.

The Saudi diplomat thrown from the window was taken to a hospital and a police commissioner said he was only slightly injured.

Before the hostage crashed out of the window, an Egyptian journalist who was able to approach the embassy said cries and screams could be heard from inside.

"Act quickly, they are going to execute us," a hostage was heard shouting.

The terrorists, who took over the embassy late in the morning, asked for an Arab airliner to fly them to an unnamed Arab capital, with some of the hostages to be held until Jordan released convicted Palestinian terrorist leader Abu Daoud from life imprisonment.

The hostages, one of whom was reported to have minor injuries, included among others, diplomats and four women.

"We don't want this to be another Munich," one of the gunmen in the embassy said.

"We want all this to work out without bloodshed," he told Nawaf Adwan, a reporter for the Baghdad newspaper Al Thawra who was used by the terrorists to pass messages.

The terrorists first told Adway a closed bus must be brought to the embassy at 4 p.m. Paris time -- a.m. EDT to take them to the airport. Then they pushed back the deadline to 6:30 p.m. as the shouted negotiations continued.

Massive French police forces including a special new antiterrorist squad surrounded the embassy in a quiet dead-end street on the western fringes of the city, alongside headquarters of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development.

Kids Get Break From School

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) - Contract disputes with teachers kept schools closed for 40,000 students in three Rhode Island communities Wednesday.

In Providence, the state's largest school district, both the Providence Teachers Union and the city school committee said they filed unfair labor practice charges against each other as 23,000 students get an extra day of vacation.

The school committee accused the union of engaging in an illegal strike and delaying negotiations, while the union accused the committee of refusing to negotiate in good faith.

Elsewhere, 12,000 children remained out of Pawtucket schools and 5,000 were out in North Providence. The disputes involved money issues.

Teachers in the three communities adopted a no contract, no work policy. The school committees in each area ordered classrooms closed because of the disputes.

Administrators in Providence and North Providence asked teachers to report for orientation sessions. Only one of Providence's 1,350 teachers reported.

Getting High, Getting Laid

Vending machines selling rolling papers on the concourse level of the Campus Center. At night, the Hatch Cafeteria transforms itself into a bar that equals the status level of Quicksilver. The Blue Wall boasts the lowest prices in town, and is open at 11:30 a.m. The Ladies room near the Blue Wall now offers prophylactics for sale. The Men's room has had them for months. The Handcrafters who sell their wares on the concourse level offer a variety of pipes, spoons, sifters, roach clips, etc. The infirmary offers free birth control advice and also has the newest methods of birth control at nomial costs.

Now remember that drugs are illegal and so is co-habitation.

So how come you can't walk through the center of this University without getting hit in the face with visions of getting high and laid? Somebody somewhere is capitalizing on the fact that we are going through a sort of Prohibition. I think it is the Campus Center and the people who run it.

But they want to make things easier for the students, so they claim. Easier for what? Easier to get busted? Thanks but, no thanks. Easier to announce your promiscuity? I never realized that it had to be publicized.

I mean its nice to know that if you want to use effective birth control methods, that they are available. But does the University have to make a profit by prostituting itself to selling safes in a vending machine? How low can you go? (No pun intended)

The Campus Center big wheels should think of the University and its impact on the rest of the community before trying to think of get money quick schemes just because the Campus Center is such a total failure. The Boston Globe really loves to throw in a few feature articles about the drug-and-sex crazy students confined to the concrete excuses for living quarters. This sort of let's-get-the-money-while-we-can not only lowers the reputation (which by now is shot to hell) of UMass but more importantly is a rip-off to us.

It is a rip-off to us not in terms of dollars and cents, but just in our status as members of a community. I mean who wants to be known as drug-and-sex starved crazy? I don't think that it's fair for the Campus Center to assume that they can just automatically label us by allowing all this crap.

I don't think that drugs are wrong or that sex is dirty and all that. I don't like the idea of the Campus Center reaping the benefits of two areas in which they should not even be allowed. Let the Campus Center worry about the Campus Center.

It's not our fault that this campus projects an image of irresponsibility and recklessness. After all, all any visitor to the university has to do is walk through the concourse or use one of the rest rooms and they can form their own opinion. An opinion that was presented by the people who run the Campus Center.

Tricky Strikes Out

At yesterday's press conference, our beloved chief executive, Richard (Tricky Dick) Nixon, began by mentioning that he feels that the Congress has been shirking its duties by becoming inactive in its approach to a number of important issues. He continued by stating that he had sent a proposal to Congress and he hoped this proposal would be "acted upon before the end of the year".

Going on to enumerate the chief aspects of this proposal, which he refers to as a "new State of the Union Message", he listed the top priorities as being: (1) inflation, (2) limitation of nuclear arms, (3) the energy crisis, and (4) chief domestic programs.

Under the topic of inflation, Nixon blamed the Congress for proposing a high federal budget and cited that the Congress is wasting money on unimportant bills. He said he does "not look forward to vetoing these bills", but that he would if it was necessary. Of course, this reluctance seems rather strange coming from a man who has vetoed almost every progressive education or welfare bill that's come his way.

Abandoning that topic in the vagueness on which Mr. Nixon has based his career, he then moved on to the problem of limiting the world's supply of nuclear armament. After citing the Nixon administration's previous non-accomplishments (in which he seemed to take a great pride), he stated stubbornly that he does not want to have to submit to being in a "second class position" at the bargaining table and that if the Congress succeeded in cutting the military budget, then this would be his dilemma. This seems to be an obvious move by Nixon to preserve almost regal control of the military. Whatever position he decides to take, however, Mr. Nixon is finally realizing that he will be taking that position with his own funds.

Thirdly, our president stressed the energy crisis, which he feels has been almost totally neglected by Congress. In this statement, he said that if Congressional Action is not taken, "we will be at the mercy of the producers of oil in the Mideast." However, once again, our fearless (or rather foolish) leader refrained from making a concrete suggestion.

Finally, the president briefly mentioned the overwhelming area of domestic programs and skimmed right by with an almost indiscreet mention of a housing proposal that he had drawn up. Then he finished his dramatic preface by stating his honest (ha ha) desire to "move forward on these achievements and dividends towards peace".

Well, without a doubt, this has been the President's most non-descript message to date. He is obviously trying to blame the Congress for some of the most glaring non-accomplishments of his administration. Throughout the press conference, he successfully avoided Watergate and the Maryland-Agnew case, and he appeared almost apologetic on all other points. It is now clear that with his back to the wall, Nixon has no alternative but to strike out vehemently at his opposition and he has chosen the Congress as his first target, but there will certainly be more to come.

The Struggle For Credit

By BILL FOSTER

Let's talk about off-campus programs. The first obvious factor that strikes a golden note on one's ear is that they're OFF CAMPUS. (A plus to be sure) No dining commons, no dormitory, and generally, depending mostly on where you re-locate, no oppressive "you watch me teach" situation. But there's a price to pay for the last point mentioned. For reasons probably too deep-rooted to go into right now, professors feel that they, like Shylock in the "Merchant of Venice," must receive a pound of flesh bond from you. There seems to be some discrepancy between "seeing" someone every other day and "knowing" that they're working hard and having a student come to him trying to arrange independent study and "realizing" he's getting away from campus to fuck-off. (Re-inforcing the belief that so many people put so much faith in visual images.)

Now before anyone storms the MDC office enraged that I would dare seemingly seek to anger the gods, let's be truthful with one another. Two distinct prejudices are obviously present in the minds of student and instructor alike. When you meet a teacher who is available -- face it, it's a pleasant surprise, suggesting that they're an exception to the rule. Teachers seem to have an invisible barrier erected around them called "tradition" to block out student input. But by the same token, they are determined to impart their limitless knowledge to you, even if it kills you. (Try not to keep that last thought in mind; it tends to bum one out.) And you really don't have to be off-campus to be shaken down. Basically, all you have to be is out-of-regular-classes. (Sounds like some sort of disease, doesn't it?

So maybe you should give those ideas of self-initiative and independence a little more thought. You may be better off living with all the benefits on campus. On the other hand, you may wish to go ahead and like Portia in the "Merchant of Venice" declare, "Take your pound of flesh, but not one drop of Christian blood!"

I Refuse To Pay 'Illegal' Parking Fees

Mr. Randolph W. Bromeroy, Chancellor
Whitmore Administration Building
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, Massachusetts 01002

Dear Mr. Bromery,

Please be advised that I, Stephen Kozloski of 11 Parsons Street in Easthampton, Massachusetts, an employee of the University of Massachusetts, hereby refuse to pay the $5.00 registration fee and convenience parking fee assessed against me as an employee of the University of Massachusetts on the grounds that I deem said fees illegal for the following reasons:

1. That the trustees of the University of Massachusetts or their duly authorized representatives do not have the authority under the general laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts to impose registration fees upon motor vehicles in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

2. That the assessment of a registration fee and convenience parking fee against me as a state employee is in violation of Chapter 75, Section 14 of the General Laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts which assures me as a state employee the same privileges and benefits as other employees of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

3. That the collection of said funds for use and purposes of the University of Massachusetts is contrary to the provisions of Chapter 75 of the General Laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

In view of the above, I will resist any attempt to pay said registration fee and convenience parking fee assessed against me on the grounds of the aforementioned alleged illegalities under laws of this Commonwealth.

Very truly yours,
Stephen Kozloski

A Canadian's View Of America

To The Editor:

I am beginning to wonder if Americans are a little bit crazy. I expect any day that Art Buchwald will be indicted for burglarizing the office of Charles Schultz' psychiatrist. Seriously, though, if the Watergate opera does not finish soon, America's prestige will be lost altogether. Wherever one travels, one is shocked by the hatred expressed for this country by people who are alive today only with the help of the United States. It is time to finish the investigations, impeach or exonerate Mr. Nixon, and then get back to America's program for progress at home, and peace in the world.

The whole affair reeks of hypocrisy, from the apologetic boyishness of John Dean, to the sudden biblical self-righteousness of Sam Ervin. Dean a criminal who stole public money to finance his honeymoon, thought it not in the least bit wrong to drag down everyone else with him. And then amazingly enough the irrationalists in this country (and there are many) adopted him as their latest illogical folk hero. However Sam Ervin hypocrite of the hour, whose dislike for racial harmony is well-known, makes for an even more interesting story. How could people who are committed to equality now suddenly idolize a man who in the past had been the enemy of all people who desire equality and freedom for all? The answer is that they couldn't unless they were irrational and illogical. (a subject in one of my next columns) They couldn't unless they were eager to forget the past in the true custom of the hypocrite.

There is no doubt that Richard Nixon, whether he knew about the capers or not is unfortunately a fool. No man with the power of the American President can possibly beg ignorance at what his staff does or doesn't do. It is his duty to himself and to the people he represents to know everything related to his country's interests at home and abroad. IN SHORT, he must know about everything that goes on in the White House and all the groups under it. If he does not, or hides the truth he is directly contravening his solemn duty and oath.

What is needed in America and everywhere is a return to the type of democracy that Henry Thoreau so eloquently described. "Government must only have as much power as the people wish it to have for the people are the governors." This is democracy in its truest sense and not communal socialism. Freedom only exists when the economy is free the two are concomitant and cannot exist without each other. Without property a man is the tool of the state, a situation in which he must sacrifice his life and his ideals for the "good of others." That is communism and socialism reduced to lowest terms, terms which are incompatible with the tenets and ideals of freedom, democracy, and equality.

There's been a few changes while you were gone, the big one being in the food department. Remember when a dime bought you a cup of coffee? Well, now one chocolate chip cookie at the Hatch costs 13 cents. They're especially tasty with ice water.

And of course there's the innovation at the Dining Commons --- now there's only one choice of a main course at each meal. You can't even pick your poison anymore.

Actually, that's not quite true. Last night there was a selection. You could either have spaghetti with sauce, or you could have spaghetti without sauce.

What would happen if everybody boycotted the dining commons?

Boycott Almy's

To The Editor:

Almy's department store cannot survive without your money.

We need the support of the students of Amherst in protesting the discriminatory practices of Almy's department store. During the summer they began hiring women at $1.85 an hour and men at $2.00 an hour. Some of the men are doing exactly the same jobs. Doris Troy, an employee at the time, attempted to convince the manager that this practice is unfair. The manager rationalized by offering her a job as "stockboy" at $2.00/hr. But when more women requested to do the same, the manager refused, saying that there were no openings. Two days later, the manager hired more men for the jobs that the women requested, this time at $1.85/hr.

There are a few issues involved here:

(1) Women are still making 15¢ an hour less than men for doing the same jobs.

(2) The men hired after this unfairness was brought to the attention of the management are making 15¢ an hour less than others doing the same job.

(3) Since women were refused the $2.00/hr. jobs, and Ms. Troy refused to be Almy's "token female stockboy", there are no women at these higher paying jobs.

I have filed a suit with the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission charging Almy's with sex discrimination. The MCAD is now investigating and the EEOC will begin in October. We also picketed the store on their Grand Opening Day with the help of Everywoman's Center, the Valley Women's Center, and other concerned people of the Amherst area. We can make these initial attempts valuable only with the continued support of the students of the area, in an effective boycott.

We hope that the students consider this seriously, keeping in mind the unfair practices already mentioned and others, affecting not only employees, but customers:

(1) Items are marked up to 100% of cost.

(2) Charge account applications ask for the employment history of the husband only, making it impossible for a woman whose husband is a student or unemployed to open a charge whether or not she is employed.

(3) The manager is quoted as saying, "Everybody is a potential thief." Coats are locked to hangers. A policeman was hired to watch employees before the store opened and check our lunch bags as we left.

(4) An employee is eligible for Blue Cross Blue Shield only if he/she is the major source of income for the family. (What person can support a family on $1.85...or $2.00 per hour?)

(5) Employees have been denied raises and jobs that they were promised when hired.

By boycotting Almy's you will show the management that the students of Amherst will not tolerate these unethical business practices and that they will have to change their policies in order to merit your patronage.

Food Service Cuts Menu Choices

The student menu at the University has undergone extensive revision for fall semester in response to rising food costs. Students will be asked to choose from a variety of options designed to cut costs and maintain present board rates.

Until results of a student referendum Sept. 19 are implemented, meals will offer one main course only, and a few meatless lunches, though students will be offered unlimited extra helpings. These changes were made after several meetings this summer between Food Services Director Joel M. Stoneham and the Student Senate Rents and Fees Committee.

According to Stoneham, "We provided for a 10 per cent food cost escalation in the semester food budget of about $1.2 million; even so, our budget cannot accommodate the increase in food costs expected this academic year. To meet present and anticipated food costs and continue our normal level of service, we would have had to provide for a 30 per cent escalation in food costs."

"Normal service" at the UMass Dining Commons has meant giving students three choices of main course for lunch and dinner, as well as a choice of two vegetables, and a multi-selection of salads and desserts. A normal meal might feature cube steak or roast beef as choices for the main course; and occassional special meals would feature sirloin steak or rib roast. Students were offered unlimited extra helpings.

That was last year. This year, Food Services will be guided by the student referendum vote in adjusting menus and service to stay within the food budget, according to Director Stoneham.

The student referendum will offer a choice of at least two major economy measures: a limited choice of menu items, and a limit on extra helpings. The Student Rents and Fees Committee will also receive student alternative suggestions for inclusion in the referendum.

Stoneham cautioned students and parents not to worry about a lack of food to feed the 10,000 students who pay for board. "We do have food to feed our students," said Stoneham, "so regardless of the economy measures we will impliment, students will receive an adequate and sufficient diet."

Comparing the food situation at UMass to that in the average home, Stoneham said the problems are sometimes greater for UMass because of the quantities of food purchased. Also, he said, UMass deals with the wholesale markets which recently have been increasing their prices more rapidly than retail, so costs to UMass are rising more "dramatically" than for the average family.

UMass Food Service figures show an increase of 35.5 per cent in wholesale prices during the last 12 months.

The following is the listing of courses to be offered by Orchard Hill Residential College this semester, Fall '73.

The courses represent part of the work of the Orchard Hill Summer Committee, which compiles course descriptions from both on and off-campus people, and of the Orchard Hill Ad Hoc Advisory Board (composed of campus faculty and students from the Summer Committee appointed by Associate Provost Woodbury) which did the actual course approval and budget allocation.

Although the courses are fewer this semester than the forty-or-so of previous years, they represent a variety of subject areas.

If you have any questions concerning the courses come in to 103 Field House, 9-5 p.m. all this week and next. All courses are open with the possible exception of those cross-listed with departments. (These courses have a quota of openings for Hill students.) Hill courses will only be cancelled if enrollment is less than eight students. Schedule numbers will be available at the office at OH Registration: Thursday, September 6, 9-12 and 2-5 p.m. Students may also register through next week.

Children's Theatre Groups Receive $5000 Grant

Aided by a $5000 grant from the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the U-Mass theatre department will begin a special project in theatre for child audiences and creative drama with children this fall. Auditions for interested students will be held the week of Sept. 10.

The project, under the direction of Carol Korty, director of children's theatre, will involve two coordinating companies of students, both working on techniques of acting improvisation and stage movement. One group will concentrate on using drama with children and will plan and conduct weekly workshops in Amherst and Springfield public schools.

The second group or company will work with Carol Korty to develop a new participation theatre piece for child audiences around the theme of ways we perceive ourselves and how our feeling affect our perceptions. The company will try out the script in performance and revise it during early December in preparation for an extensive school tour during the second semester. The students in the performing company may choose to finish at the end of the semester or to continue through the spring.

Academic credit will be given for participation in either company, in keeping with the department's new curriculum which will cover both course material and practicum experience through project work. The child drama company will meet Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings from 9 to noon, earning six credit hours. Members of the performance company will meet from three to four hours daily (times to be arranged), earning from three to nine credit hours.

The auditions beginning Sept. 10 will be for both companies, with details on time and place available from the theatre department, 401 Machmer, telephone 545-0385. Interviews to discuss details will be scheduled during the first week of September by Carol Korty and Anita Page, who may be reached at 410 Machmer, 545-0998.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

An Aquarian who was America's most famous astrologer: Evangeline Adams. The celebrated Miss Adams (1868-1932) was a direct descendant of President John Quincy Adams. Born in Boston, she eventually practiced astrology in New York, with offices in Carnegie Hall, where trekked the great and the near great, from Caruso to Tallulah Bankhead, to have their horoscopes interpreted by Evangeline Adams. J.P. Morgan consulted her and so did doctors and lawyers and Indian chiefs. And she once said of herself, "There is no more enthusiastic believer in the stars than Evangeline Adams of Carnegie Hall."

ARIES (March 21-April 19): What occurs now is apt to have a lasting effect. Know it and review position. Don't play games with emotions — or security. Accent is on where you stand, where you are going and what you intend to do when you arrive. Libra might figure in important way.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Highlight independent stance. Be creative. Shake off tendency to procrastinate. Relative who sings the blues should not be permitted to restrict you. Experiment. Give full play to intellectual curiosity. Write, read and stimulate learning process.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your ability to perceive, to judge, to know at a glance is emphasized. Some claim you have ESP. This is a time when you can use extrasensory aid. Aquarian could challenge. One who holds money strings acts in puzzling manner. Get answers — fast.

CANCER — (June 21-July 22): Lie low. Forces tend to be scattered. Avoid trying to have a hand in everything. Check signals with Sagittarian. Mate, partner figure prominently. You may not have freedom to invest without first checking — know it and don't forget it.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You must not commit yourself in way that bridges are burned. Some persons who presently disagree with you may eventually become your staunch supporters. Know it and act in mature, compassionate manner. Improve relations with co-workers.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Affair of heart may be on "troubled waters." Means emotional responses could dominate logic. Jealousy gets upper hand if you so permit. Your desires are close to fulfillment. Don't ruin chances by outbursts not becoming one of your intelligence.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Adjustment in home area is indicated. Taurus person could play important role. Accent is on decision involving property purchase or sale. Much also centers around luxury items, products which make life more comfortable, if not more beautiful.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Much appears elusive. You can't seem to pin people down to definite commitment. Key now is to perceive, to be disciplined and patient while waiting. Give yourself room — and time — to revise. First draft of document could be riddled with misconceptions.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Emphasis is on assets, deficits. You will draw line — means you decide what you need now as distinguished from what is desired. Taurus, Libra and Capricorn persons are likely to play roles. Take precautions against loss of valuables.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Past commitment makes "reappearance." Your face responsibilities — could involve partnership, marriage. Aries, Libra might figure prominently. You can work your way toward success goal but there are obstacles. Support comes from unusual source.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): What appears on obstacle could boomerang in your favor. Someone probably is working behind scenes for your benefit. Realize it and keep the faith. Leo might be involved. Secret could come to light. Have alternatives at hand.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Friends may air disputes. Maintain neutral stance. One is authority appears argumentative. This condition is temporary. Know it and don't be too quick to pass judgment. Money situation is at crux of matter.

Edwards Appointed to I-M Staff

Earl W. Edwards, an advisor for the Black Athletic Council, has been appointed as a staff assistant-lecturer of the Intramural office.

Edwards, 23, who received an M.S. in Physical Education at UMass last month, was selected because the department "wanted somebody from the minority community to open up communication channels with the minority community."

In the past, there have been some incidents of misunderstandings between participants and amongst the participants themselves. Two years ago, the intramural basketball tournament was cancelled when fighting broke out between two teams.

Edwards has been active working with the youth of New York City. In the past few years, he has been assistant supervisor of both the Y.M.C.A. in Stroudsburg, Pa., and the Neighborhood Youth Corp of Staten Island, N.Y., and the director of a day camp on Staten Island.

Edwards received his associates degree in liberal arts from Staten Island Community College in 1970, and his B.S. in physical education from East Stroudsburg State College in 1972 before receiving his masters degree last month.

Edwards is married and lives on Main St., in Amherst.

Erving Coming Soon

SPRINGFIELD, Mass.--The New York Nets' Julius Erving will go up against his former teammates, the Virginia Squires, in an American Basketball Association pre-season game at the Springfield Civic Center on Saturday, Sept. 22 at 8 P.M.

Erving, the former UMass standout already acclaimed as one of the top pro basketball players ever after two years with the Squires, went to the Nets in August in a multi-million dollar deal that saw the Nets give up All-Star forward George Carter for Squires reserve center Willie Sojourner.

Known as "Doctor J," Erving will be operating in a New York line-up that also features All-Star center Bill Paultz, Rookie-of-the-Year Brian Taylor, Bill Melchionni and John Roche.

"When we scheduled this game," said Squires coach-General Manager Al Bianchi, "we did so with the intention of giving people in the Western Mass. area a chance to see Julius perform as a pro.

"Fortunately for the fans they will still have that chance to see the incredible things the guy does. But unfortunately for me I have got to come up with a way to keep him from destroying us like he did to so many other teams when he was wearing a Virginia uniform."

Sox Stop Orioles, 7-5

Griffin reached base on an error off Baltimore lefthander Mike Cuellar, 14-13.

The Red Sox later added four more runs in the game-clinching second-inning rally as Carl Yastrzemski doubled home two runs and Danny Cater and Carlton Fisk added run-producing singles.

The uprising broke a 1-1 tie. Cater has singled home a Boston run in the first and the Orioles tied it in the top of the second on Don Baylor's ninth homer of the year.

The Orioles scored single runs in the third on Earl Williams' bouncer, in the fifth on Paul Blair's homer, in the sixth on Andy Etchebarren's double and in the seventh on Baylor's base hit. Meret left in the sixth inning in favor of Bill Lee, who in turn was relieved in the seventh by Bob Bolin.

WHO KNOWS? It may not be the Year of the Minutemen. . .It mav not be the return to the Boardwalk Bowl...There may not be a UMass victory over Holy Cross this Saturday. But, this could very well be the year of Pennington...Peil Pennington, the 6-5, 210 lb. Senior quarterback of the UMass Minutemen should have his best season ever this year.

Injuries Taking Toll On UM Gridders

Injuries to key players are beginning to hamper the UMass football team which is getting ready for their opening game against Holy Cross this Saturday. Peil Pennington and Ed McAleney have both been sufferring from hip pointers (bruises) and Phil Roland has had problems with the muscles in his groin area.

These injuries appear to have mended themselves but their are a few deep scars left from the departures of both running back Rich Herman and linebacker Mike McNiff.

Herman has sufferred three concussions in his past football career and it is known that McNiff has had a personality conflict with the coaching staff.

Their departures still mystify members of the squad and the press as both were leading seniors on the defending Yankee Conference champions.

While undergoing surgery over the summer months John Healy was found to be lacking one kidney and will consequently be forced to hang up his playing shoes and donn coaching shoes to work with the Freshman defensive backfield. The loss of Healy is one of the biggest holes in the defensive unit that the coaching staff will be forced to fill.

Only A Scar Remains From Crusader Raid

By MARTY KELLEY

Out of the Past-It was one of those cloudy days...You could start to see a storm brewing. When it finally came, there wasn't much you could say...Both teams were in the locker room...The field was empty accept for cheerleaders playing on the goalpost. As you sipped your bourbon you asked why...You could see the storm was but a block away.

And when the Minutemen returned to the field, it seemed it all had been decided. The look on the kid's face told the story. John Jones was pretty motionless. One Holy Cross Crusader took away his knee awhile ago. The rest of the Jesuit sons took away the "gut" of the University of Massachusetts football team. It was a day in Worcester not soon to be forgotten.

Back in Amherst there was no ballyhoo that night. Up and down the streets of this ugly city like the early ride of Revere it was told how "State" was denied at Fitton Field that afternoon. The names Metallo, Pennington, and Schubert, those irrepressible talents of Yankee Conference fame (and soon to be Boardwalk gold) were reduced to but table laughter over a "Millers" or two...But their time will come...or will it?

Steve Schubert now gets $65 a game for a circus outfit called the New England Colonials out of Foxboro...Metallo borders Hank Stram's shit list out of Kansas City...And Pennington...Ah! He remains to bear the Holy Cross scar of a year hence...So does the left knee of captain Johnny Jones...Don't think the cannon that put the black captain in a wheelchair won't go unheard...

And so you've done what most normal people have done..You've left the Holy Cross game of a year gone by a statistic. You've put it out of your mind. You went down to the NIT with Coach Jack Leaman (basketball), watched playoff contenders with Jack Caniff (hockey), Dick Garber (lacrosse) and Dick Bergquist (baseball), went along with or without your dope or your spouse, and left the epitaph of Fitton Field in Worcester to the real fool who remembers it well...the sportswriter...And althought he didn't perform...He remembers Worcester rather well...

"Well Marty, this is my fifth year of UMass sports and I was so cobbed I could barely get out of that press box at Holy Cross", said Collegian sportswriter Earle Barroll. "I had to listen to that Sports Information Director up there cheerlead all afternoon long...It made me sick."

Earle, you're not alone...The UMass football teams feels the same way...The UMass-Holy Cross game this Saturday can't be hypothesized...But you don't need a weatherman to forecast this one...

UMass To Wait On Proposed Ice

By STEVE CROWE

So, you were expecting to find a brand new ice facility when you came back to school this fall? Well, there's been a slight delay.

Last spring, Endevor Inc., the private architectural firm from Cambridge planning to build the facility, had said they might possibly start construction as early as this fall. But the problem of purchasing land has slowed production down.

Mr. Gilbert Boro, the chief architect of the firm, said, in July, that they had not been able to come to terms with the owners of the land. He said that "all kinds of offers had been made" to the landowners, but no agreements had been made.

It was not merely the idea of the owners holding out for the most money for their land that stood in the way,, but also, according to Boro, the idea that many of the landowners were not certain whether or not they wanted to break up their estates, which had been in the family for so long.

As it looks now, said Boro, construction of the ice facility will begin in the spring of 1974 and be completed in the fall of the same year.

The facility will consist of two rinks. That is for certain. The number of seats that will be built into the arena is still far from being decided. "It will be somewhere between 1500 and 4500; that's how undecided we are," Boro said.

The problem with the number of seats to build is that the cost of adding 1500 seats is about the same as adding another ice rink. Endevor Inc. is debating whether it would be more beneficial to add the seating for spectators at UMass hockey games or to build another rink and sell more "ice time" to the community.

Boro expressed disappointment with the present way UMass students are admitted to hockey games. Students pay an athletic fee of $15 per semester and are admitted to athletic events free of charge. Boro said that this system of payment "is not advantageous" to his business and "it offers no inducement for building the extra 3,000 seats in the facility."

The University does not have an ice facility of its own and there are presently no plans whatsoever for building one in either the near or distant future. The hockey teams have been using Amherst College's Orr Rink in the past and will continue to use it al least through the coming season.

When (and if) built, the ice facility would not be a UMass facility, but rather, a community facility. Ice time would be leased to the University teams on a contract basis. The facility might also be used for physical education classes, intramurals, besides use for hockey leagues in the community and open skating time for the community. Boro also hinted that the facility might even be used by professional hockey teams during training season.

Notice

There will be a baseball meeting for all candidates on Monday, September 10 at 4:30 P.M. in room 249 Boyden.

UMass Places 5 On Pre-season Yan Con Poll

Peil Pennington, quarterback of the UMass football team was selected as the only unanimous choice to the pre-season Yankee Conference team.

Pennington as to be expected was not the only Minuteman selected to the team. Defensive ends Ed McAleney and Tommy Bradshaw were also cited along with linebacker of the day at the Boardwalk Bowl, Dennis Kiernan. But unfortunately for the UMass football program safety John Healy was given an ambigous honor.

Healy made the team but won't be able to live up to the honor. It was found over the summer that he had but one kidney functionable, a situation that the NCAA frowns upon.

I'm Willing To Bet . . .

Despite the fact that every announcer who broadcasts professional sporting contests of any kind is trained to say, "on any given day, any team can beat any other team," there are many things, especially in UMass sports, that are totally predictable. Before May rolls around, I'm willing to bet: That someone misspells quarterbacks Pennington's name. It's either Peil or Piel or Peel or Peal or Pele Pennington.

That Dick MacPherson introduces some football player, or players, at the Varsity M club, by calling him "a fine young man and a credit to the university" and makes some kind reference to his mother and daddy.

That some sportswriter refers to MacPherson as "the affable mentor."

That all UMass football players keep their biceps covered when Marty Kelley's in the locker room.

That the estimated attendance figures at Alumni Stadium aren't entirely accurate.

That the Boston College newspapers persists in making snide remarks about the "farmers" out in Amherst, not remembering the trip to the woodshed they took last November.

That the UMass hockey team finishes the season playing in Amherst's Orr Rink with no hope for a home of their own in sight.

That more Providence fans than UMass fans show up at the game in the Springfield Civic Center January 17.

That hockey goalie Chick Rheault wins recognition as the best goalie in New England while stopping between 45-50 shots per game.

That wrestling continues its slow, but definite climb into prominence as one of the leading spectator sports at UMass.

That no one remembers, or mentions, that Elbert Caraway coached UMass football from 1936 to 1940.

That the concession stands run out of hot dogs, coffee, and everything except cold water when there's more than 18,000 people in the stadium.

That Jack Canniff is the least quoted major sports coach east of the Mississippi.

That Pat Keenan scores 25 goals for the Boston Braves.

That the Stadium is never sold out.

That John Healy doesn't make the Yankee Conference All-Conference team as predicted in a pre-season poll (if he could play that would have been a pretty lousy bet)

That the football team has a difficult time with Rutgers.

That the Boston Bruins not only don't win the Stanley Cup, but barely make the playoffs. And if they do win the Stanley Cup, someone sends me a copy of this column with a package of salt attached.

That most of these predictions come true.

Office Moves To Student Union

Senate To Hear Exec Proposals

By FRAN BROCK

Submerged in disconnected wires, confused phone connections and misplaced records, furniture, and general paraphernalia, the Student Senate officers are preparing themselves for the new school year.

The Student Senate offices were moved during the summer from the basement of the Campus Center to the second floor of the Student Union.

The first Student Senate meeting of the year will be Wednesday September 12 at 7:00 p.m. No formal agenda has been written yet but there are quite a number of reports to be given. The executive committee has been busy all summer working on new proposals which they hope to have passed by the Senate.

Working on proposals dealing with internal affairs was Treasurer Paul Hamel. Primarily, he figured budgets, finished the Capital Equipment Inventory, and collected money from unpaid loans and bills owed to the Senate.

A major proposal he was involved in dealt with the expansion of the Student Senate Lecture Notes into an entire print shop operation. As of now, the shop is taking the overload from the Print Shop in the Campus Center. They hope to increase their services though. According to Hamel, the Student Senate Print Shop need not make as large a profit as the Campus Center Print Shop. In the long run, it should save the students more money in the Student Activities tax than the Campus Center Print Shop can save in the Campus Center tax.

New additions to UMass include a couple of new buses for the UMass Transit System and a new car for the auto pool. Another proposal deals with the book loan system for students needing financial help to buy text books.

Hamel said that all records of loans for books were previously kept by the Campus Center Store and as a result of confused records, many loans were not paid back. Under the newly proposed system, all loans and records will be on computer controlled by the R.S.O. Office.

Working on more external problems, SGA President Nick Apostola helped develop proposals for Policy Councils. Basically, these would be student boards that would supervise the assorted administrative committees and offices such as housing, food, parking, etc. As it stands right now, according to Apostola, there are no students with any power to legislate such things as room and board. "It is time they (the administration) take us more seriously," said Nick and he feels that with these Policy Councils, the administration will have little choice but to take the students more seriously.

His proposal is being read now by the administration and the Senate and Apostola thinks it will be brought up for a vote sometime in October.

Thought has also been given to new Constitutional models. Some suggestions have included a collective presidency. This means that secretaries would be elected at large, and serve as chairpersons over the diverse service and administrative committees. Another idea was to have the senate elected by the area governments, and to generally reduce the size of the Senate.

One other suggestion was to elect representatives to the Senate from the different academic disciplines. This idea was brought forth because of the desire to decentralize the student government. The hope is that the administration would deal with area governments for all the non-academic policies. This would let the Student Senate deal with more academic issues.

Apostola agreed that none of these policies have any strength without student support. He plans intensive campaigns for senate elections and referendum votes that will be coming up in the near future.

New Oasis Coming To The C.C. Desert

By BRIAN COOK

The Hatch Bar, long considered necessary by the Campus Center Board of Governors to relieve congestion in the Blue Wall, is overdue for completion but is expected to be finished by this weekend. According to Larry Ledoux, a Campus Center maintenance worker, all of the wiring is essentially done and further construction awaits the arrival of operating materials (beer taps, walk-in coolers, etc.). "It's like operating picnic style now," Ledoux says.

According to Jim Lyndsey, Chairperson of the Board of Governors, materials are being held up primarily because the Campus Center is currently seeking out a new purchasing agent for them. In addition, bids did not go out on time and delivery of some materials has been slow. The money for the project is coming out of Campus Center services funds which all students must pay.

"The extra bar is a good idea because it gives students an inexpensive place to drink as part of their Campus Center services," Lyndsey noted. Although there seems to be a great deal of local high schoolers and other persons also using the campus bars, there has been nothing done to prevent this, says Lyndsey "because few complaints have been received." If such a need is called for in the future, a restriction to bar admission on campus (such as a college I.D.) would probably be imposed.

Asked about the cover charge for bands, Lyndsey replied that he feels there should not be one since it discourages those who might want to come in for just one or two drinks and leave.

Video Tapes Test Teaching

By SHARON HUGHES

Despite the bad reputation electronic surveillance has received recently, the University employs it in a novel way-to-improve teaching skills.

Portable video units taped the summer classes of 18 volunteer professors on the premise that watching oneself is the best way to change behavior.

The taping is just one project of the Clinic to Improve University Teaching at UMass. Financed by a $590,000 grant in 1972 from the Kellogg Foundation, the Clinic also trains diagnosticians to help faculty recognize their teaching strengths and weaknesses.

Clinic Director Michael A. Melnick says traditional methods of evaluation provide critiques from students but do not offer suggestions for improvement. The Clinic offers resources for improvement through faculty/staff consultation.

It has a fulltime staff of 28-30 including a full-time computer programmer, grad students, diagnosticians and 4 senior staff members.

Grad students who are usually from the Department of Education perform day to day work directed toward setting a goal for the diagnostician.

The diagnosticians help faculty members identify particular instructional strengths and weaknesses, develop teaching improvement strategies, and implement those strategies. They usually come to the Clinic with experience as teachers or working with teachers, and also undergo training in the use of the "Clinic process".

The Clinic process begins with a faculty/diagnostician consultation to define the instructor's course objectives. Once the objectives are clear, the process of collecting data begins. Data collecting sources include video tapes, classroom observations, interviews with teachers, interviews with students, and a student questionnaire.

Of these sources, the student questionnaire called Student Centered Analysis of Teaching (SCAT) is highly valued. SCAT consists of 31 statements describing teaching behavior taken from research sources and the teaching experience of the staff. Students indicate if their instructor's performance is satisfactory or in need of improvement.

After SCAT is analyzed by computer, a two stage process begins. First the instructor reviews the computer data by himself then both instructor and diagnostician evalute the data. Together they decide which teaching skills the instructor will work toward improving.

Improvement strategies such as portable video units are implemented. In the case of video tapes, the units are placed in the classroom by the graduate students. That afternoon the tape is shown in the Clinic and evaluated by the instructor and the diagnostician. If the instructor consents, students may attend.

The process continus with an evaluation of the instructor's and diagnostician's efforts. During a final interview, the instructor is asked for a written and oral evaluation of the Clinic process.

Dr. Melnick said the Clinic definition of an effective instructor is based on three criterion: opinions of necessary skills, logical goals (setting course objectives) and a great reliance on research.

During the first year, the Clinic concentrated on developing teaching improvement strategies and training diagnosticians. The Clinic now has 10-12 diagnosticians and is expanding its services to the Umass faculty during its second year (1973-1974). In its third year, it will continue to expand service to UMass and disseminate the results to other universities.

The Clinic evolved from Melnick's dissertation at UMass, "The Development and Analysis of a Clinic to Improve University Teaching". Melnick said he saw a need for the Clinic as an undergraduate at UMass.

People-Old And New-Make UMass What It Is

By BILL BALLOU

They straggle in, at one time or another passing through the campus center, and the first day the unfamiliar faces outnumber the familiar ones and you wonder if of all the people you've ever known up here you're the only one left.

But daily more old friends return and by the first day of classes it becomes easy to tell freshmen and upperclassmen apart simply by the way they breathe.

The people are what you look for, because, after all, it's the people who make UMass the haven for insanity and cure-all for same that it is.

Those whose last words in May were full of the most contempt and hatred for UMass are the ones who are happiest to be back. As miserable as a UMie's existence may be, the existence outside the confines of the School of Education and Fearing St. is immeasurably worse.

Since I've been here there's always a new building going up, and the face of the campus has changed considerably thanks to the new library and the Fine Arts Center. They will become landmarks to those who see them for the first time as part of the campus, but for three-quarters of the population the landmarks will be the same as they were the year before and the buildings they spend most of their day in won't have changed.

Two words though, are common to every able throated person on campus. Blue and Wall. And those two words are sure to be included in any sentence uttered by anyone just arriving.

Some will ask "Is it open?" Others, the new arrivals, will ask "Where is it?" It won't take long before they have the route down pat.

All those living in dorms have another thing in common, and though they might wish it was one cross they didn't have to bear, they can't escape from the Dining Commons.

At first he food isn't bad, for, in the excitement of trying to figure out what the deuce is going on, one tends to neglect his stomach.

Unfortunately you're forced to remember all too soon and the grease and the gravy and the stale hot dog rolls become a focal point of dorm humor and criticism.

Breakfasts are bleary-eyed, lunches rushed, and dinner crowded. The music coming from the loudspeakers is usually terrible, but still the DC is the center of area-wide social activity and the best place on campus to do some serious girl-watching.

As bad as the DC food may be, the whole dining commons experience is a pleasant one when compared with the machines. The machines will rip you off as often as you get what you want, and offer you a sore toe as the only satisfaction for your efforts to regain your money. Once in a while one will break and give you anything you want, but the bonanza won't last long.

At first all there were were coke and milk and candy machines. You'd spend 15 cents and satisfy a simple urge. Now the urges are more sophisticated and the machines more varied. Besides confections you can have rolling papers or birth control.

Enjoy the fall. It's the least rainy, cold, muddy, and entirely horrible season of the year. And perhaps it's the only time of the year people like being at UMass.

At least until they've been away for a while.

296 Feet Of New Library Is Ready And Waiting

By ED GORMAN

The world's tallest library opened June 26 and is awaiting the onslaught of the 25,000 students, professors, and administrators whom it will serve. The new library is expected to be used 25 per cent more than Goodell Library.

The library will house the combined libraries of Goodell, SBA, School of Education, and Landscape Architecture; a total of over 800,000 books and periodicals.

Bay State West in Springfield is the only taller building in Western Mass measuring 370 feet. The new library is 296 feet tall. It was designed by Edward Durrell Stone, was build to accomodate 1,600,000 books and cost $16,8000,000 to complete. That figure includes the $850,000 spent on equipment.

The building is air conditioned so no windows can be opened. Pets are not allowed in the building and as a fire precaution, smoking has been restricted to level 5.

Coin operated typewriters and duplicating machines are available, Micro-film can be read and copied.

The lower level is used for consultation and also serves as the home of the Kennedy Memorial Browsing collection. A reference service area, the college catalogue collection and the micro-film reading area are also on the lower level.

The first floor is primarily an information center. There is also a circulation desk but it offers only limited service as there is a circulation department upstairs.

The second floor is the "Hub of Activity" according to Gordon Fretwell, Associate Director of Public Services. This is the main section for circulation and reserve reading.

The subsequent floors are divided into a three category pattern. One floor is a shelving area with individual study tables seating 56 people. The next floor is a study area with two large study sections and four smaller study rooms. This floor also has two rooms geared for the handicapped.

The study floors are able to seat about 84 people. The third floor in this sequence is a shelving floor. The sequence repeats six times throughout the remaining floors except for levels 25 and 26. Level 25 is used for rare books and University Archives and level 26 is used for meetings pertaining to library business.

The elevators do not go to each floor but stop at three floor intervals.

Recruiter Predicts New Draft

By MIKE KNEELAND

Nearly six months have passed since the draft was ended and many military recruiters believe it's simply a matter of time before it's reinstated.

Admiral C.R. Bender, Commandant of the Coast Guard, recently said in an in-service communique that the manpower shortage in his service could soon become critical if the recruiting situation did not improve.

Many Coast Guard commanding officers are already complaining that they have too few men to properly operate their shore stations.

The Coast Guard, which has in the past enjoyed a long waiting list for recruits, has particularly felt the effects of no draft. Men assigned to recruiting stations are hard-pressed to fill their monthly quotas.

"All we're asking you to do is get out there and bust your ass for recruits," a district headquarters procurement officer told a new recruiter reporting to the Worcester office.

Under such pressure, recruiters are accepting men they would have rejected during the draft--and still some stations are only filling half their quotas.

The Coast Guard Personnel Manual states that recruiters must not sacrifice quality for quantity. "But how can we practice selective recruiting when we have little to select from?" a Worcester recruiter asked.

The Coast Guard's advertising budget has increased somewhat, but the service is relying mainly on the salesmanship abilities of its men to attract recruits. One new program offers a 72-hour liberty pass to any Coast Guardsman, other than a recruiter, who is responsible for the enlistment of a man.

"What they're asking us to do," a New York City Coast Guard Petty Officer said, "is to 'sell out' our civilian friends for a lousy three-day pass."

The Coast Guard is not the only service experiencing recruiting

Moratorium On Towing

Unstickered Cars Safe Until Next Week

By MARK B. CITRON

The university Police announced a moratorium on towing unstickered cars until sometime next week.

Dave Johnston, Director of Security for the University, explained that the police cannot begin enforcing the new parking regulations until stickers are issued. He said that beginning early next week the police will check with the parking office to see if decals for lots have been issued.

"Once the assigning of lots is complete," Johnston said, "then we'll begin enforcement - possibly late next week."

Johnston said that alternative parking will be provided at the Stadium for those who have no stickers and will be a "sanctuary" for parking. He felt that this, plus 200 new metered parking places to be added onto the 240 meters already in place would provide parking for unstickered cars.

The easing of parking regulations for the beginning of school confusion is also being followed by the Amherst Police. Towing regulations there will not be enforced until the morning of Sept. 10, with Eastman Lane singled out as a spot to be strictly enforced.

Amherst Towing is under contract to perform all the towing services on a by order only basis. The charges are $15 for daytime towing, $20 for night and $3 a day storage.

Johnston said the registration period this year has been "a little smoother than last year." He said the entire force is out - 37 officers and 38 guards - mostly dealing with traffic related problems.

A T.V. theft from Gorman dorm and a "substantial" loss of money from Hampden dining commons were cited by Johnston as the only major crimes. The stolen T.V. has been recovered and three students arrested and charged with the theft. They have been released on $10 bond. The loss of money from Hampden is undergoing what Johnston calls a "thorough" investigation.

OH Committee Reports Recommendations

By BRIAN COOK

The Committee on Orchard Hill and Residential Colleges has recommended that "an interim director of the OH Residential Program have full responsibility and authority over all aspects of the OH Residential Program. He would work effectively with the Administration, the Faculty senate and Orchard Hill students."

Committee chairman leigh Short stressed the function of an interim director following the controversy of last spring when four Orchard Hill staff members were notified by UMass administration officials that their contracts would be terminated or they would be reassigned off the Hill.

A Residential College Review Committee was designed to provide recommendations concerning the future of residential colleges at UMass and, in particular, recommendations relative to Orchard Hill. Below is the final summary of the committee's recommendations:

-The concept of a residential college has not been sufficiently developed on this campus, therefore a Residential Program should be developed at Orchard Hill within a two year period designed to develop and define the academic goals of the OH program, develop procedures to obtain the necessary faculty and staff to implement such goals, and secure the appropriate University governing bodies' approval of these goals and the means to implement them.

Specific recommendations to accomplish this were also given in the report as follows:

-An Interim Director of the OH Residential Program should be appointed by the Vice Chancellor and the Provost for a term not to exceed two years. He should have full responsibility and authority over all aspects of the OH Residential Program and be assisted by three staff assistants.

-Wherever possible, regular faculty (instead of T.A.'s) should teach courses and develop programs at Orchard Hill.

-A Personnel Committee and a Curriculum Committee should be established at Orchard Hill to report to and and advise the Director on the performance of faculty and professional staff and on the development of academic programs.

-An OH advisory board should be created to advise the Interim Director and the Vice Chancellor on the educational and environmental quality of Orchard Hill, to represent the interests of the OH community, to review and assess OH programs, and to assist in the recruitment of faculty for Orchard Hill.

-The current positions of Preceptor and Head of Residence should be merged into one new position under the title of Resident Advisor.

-Additional classroom space should be made available at OH.

-Further residential-based academic programs should not be attempted in the near future due to lack of well defined goals and scarce funds.

Although there was no systematic personnel performance evaluation by the committee, there was a recommendation to Drs. Gage and Woodbury for restaffing as being "necessary for successful implementation of structural and organizational changes. . ." No specific staff members on Orchard Hill were named however.

Presently, Heads of Residence Steven Stoia of Webster House and Dwight Middleton of Dickinson House still retain their positions despite notices of reassignment from the administration last Spring. Asst. Head of Academic Affairs Allen Davis has had his contract renewed and Area Director Jim West is also getting his renewed despite indications to the contrary last Spring.

A report from this past summer's re-evaluation committee will be available soon and may shed further light on what concrete action, if any, is to be taken concerning the Orchard Hill Residential College.

Records Witheld

BOSTON (AP) - The Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination withheld statistics that showed its poor performance record, says a former public information officer for the agency.

Elizabeth Holden, who was fired from the commission, also has filed a complaint with the Federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission saying she was discriminated against because she is black and a woman.

She said among the reasons she was fired was that she threatened to release some 1972 statistics.

They show, she said Wednesday, that of 1,286 cases closed that year, only 69 were found in favor of the complainants.

The commission said its 1972 annual report still is not printed for distribution.

Commissioner Francis Lynch branded as "nonsense" her statements about the dispute over releasing the statistics. He said those figures were unreliable.

An aide to Gov. Francis W. Sargent said Miss Holden was discharged because she "performed unsatisfactorily and was making unauthorized statements on behalf of the commissioners."

From Three Directions

Rebels Move In On Phnom Penh

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — Communist-led rebels Thursday launched what the Cambodian command described as a general offensive against the country's third largest city, pressing in from three directions.

Khmer Rouge infiltrators were reported to have penetrated to central Kompong Cham.

Col. Am Rong, chief spokesman for the command, said a small number of infiltrators were still lodged in the southwestern residential sector of the city by dusk, but all other attack by rebel troops had been repulsed.

He said the attacks were the heaviest since the siege of Kompong Cham, located 47 miles northeast of Phnom Penh, began some three weeks ago.

Am Rong said drives by the rebels came from the south and west and from an area north of the airport, located about three miles north of the city.

On another front, Communist-led forces cut Phnom Penh's road to rice-rich Battambang Province, thus blocking the second of the capital's two main food supply routes.

Phnom Penh's second vital highway connecting it to the country's only deepwater seaport of Kompong Som, remained closed for the 12th consecutive day.

ANG SNOUL, Cambodia, FAMILY WEEPS — A Cambodian woman and her son weep in Ang Snoul over the body of a government soldier killed last week in fighting to reopen Highway 4 west of Phnom Penh. The 10-day attempt to open the highway was dropped Tuesday but the Cambodian command announced it had a new strategy and said fresh troops would be moved in Wednesday.

Krogh Pleads Innocent In Ellsberg Burglary

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Former White House aide Egil Krogh Jr. pleaded innocent to the burglary of the office of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist Thursday. He said he believes the activities of the undercover White House "plumbers squad" were a mistake and that he regrets them.

Krogh was one of four former White House aides named in the four-count indictment, which was made public at the arraignment. Also named were Krogh's former boss, John D. Ehrlichman, David Young and convicted Watergate conspirator G. Gordon Liddy.

Ehrlichman, who was President Nixon's chief adviser for domestic affairs, has sent word he will surrender next Tuesday, the deadline set by the judge for voluntary appearances.

The indictment named four other men as coconspirators in the California break-in, but those four were not indicted. They were Watergate conspirators E. Howard Hunt and Bernard Barker, and two Cuban nationals, Eugenio Martinez and Felipe DeDiego.

Krogh, who had previously refused to speak out, said he had decided to talk publicly on "my relation, or lack thereof, to the special unit that was formed in 1971 by the President.

"I distinctly feel now that the decision that was made in 1971 to go forward with the covert operation was a mistake," Krogh told reporters outside the courtroom where he entered his plea on charges of burglary, conspiracy and solicitation to commit burglary.

He was the first of four former White House aides to surrender on grand jury indictments issued this week.

"I felt it was a mistake immediately thereafter when details of its execution were presented to me," Krogh said, apparently referring to the Sept. 3, 1971 break-in in Beverly Hills, Calif.

"I have some real regrets over what has taken place in terms of injuring innocent persons."

However, he added, "At the time in 1971 when this job was presented to me as something of extraordinary national importance, I understood it was fully authorized and lawful."

The tall, square-jawed Krogh, once close adviser assistant to John D. Ehrlichman, stood solemnly before Superior Court Judge James G. Kolts as he entered his plea of innocent. He nodded and answered "yes sir" when Kolts asked if he understood his constitutional rights.

Then he walked into a hallway where a throng of reporters awaited. Although declining to answer questions, he delivered his statement and indicated that one of his legal defenses when he came to trial will be that he was told the break-in was for an "urgent security purpose."

Nixon Holds Forth

By FRANK CORMIER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (P) — President Nixon chatted Thursday on the wisdom of back surgery, the economic status of farmers and the possibility that efforts to curb rising food prices may be showing some success.

Nixon turned a routine phototaking session in his office into a wide-ranging discussion with Secretary of the Treasury George P. Shultz, chief economic adviser Herbert Stein and a handful of reporters. Nixon had also held a news conference the day before.

Pointing to a sheet of farm commodity prices Shultz had brought him, Nixon noted that current cash prices for soybeans and corn are below levels that will be reflected in a bleak wholesale price report to be made public Friday.

Speaking of administration efforts to increase farm production, Nixon said, "Our approach in terms of getting supplies up may be beginning to bear some fruit."

In one of several displays of humor, however, Nixon noted that inasmuch as the administration always discounts the significance of one month of bad economic statistics, it perhaps should not make too much of a week of good figures.

And even with the cash price of a bushel of soybeans down to $7 Wednesday, from more than $10.26 less than a month ago, the President urged that no tears be shed for farm operators.

Guards Taken

JOLIET, Ill. (AP) — Six to eight guards were taken hostage today at Stateville Penitentiary by a group of about 150 inmates, the Illinois Department of Corrections said.

A spokesman for the department said the inmates took the hostages as the convicts were returning to their cellhouse from their noon meal.

GOP Leaders Urge Action On Nixon Proposals

By FRANK CORMIER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon believes Congress should remain in session until the end of the year, if necessary, to act on his priority proposals, Republican congressional leaders said today.

Following up on Wednesday's news conference at which he accused the Democratic-controlled Congress of compiling a "very disappointing" record in handling his legislative ideas, Nixon met for more than two hours today with Republican congressional chiefs.

Senate Republican leader Hugh Scott later told reporters that Nixon said Congress should not adjourn before acting on seven energy proposals and bills in the area of natural resources, housing, education, community development and trade.

"We should stay here until the end of this calendar year if necessary" and work a six-day week if needed, said House Republican leader Gerald Ford.

Meanwhile, the Democratic leaders of Congress issued a joint statement rejecting Nixon's claim that Congress has turned in a disappointing performance.

They said Congress has already enacted more than 100 laws this year, including wage-price control extension, Social Security benefit increases, expanded services for the elderly, extension of "12 health care programs the administration wanted to terminate" a big farm bill, a highway bill with a provision for mass transit and a minimum wage bill Nixon has said he will veto.

Nixon is preparing a new State of the Union message in an effort to break loose administration-sponsored legislation.

House OKs Raise In Amtrak Loans

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House voted 357-37 Thursday to hike Amtrak's loan guarantee level to $250 million and set a $107.3 million ceiling on federal funds for government-backed passenger train service during this fiscal year.

The financial aid legislation also authorizes auto-ferry service and grants a restricted power of eminent domain. It restructures Amtrak's board of directors to give consumers more representation, and allows passenger trains preference over freight trains except in emergencies.

In addition, the bill requires Amtrak to start at least one experimental train a year, calls for the Interstate Commerce Commission to consider the quality of service in determining Amtrak compensation to railroads, and provides procedures for Amtrak to operate trains at faster speeds.

A similar measure passed earlier by the Senate would put the loan guarantee level at $500 million — compared to the current figure of $200 million — and would set a $135 million ceiling on federal funds this fiscal year. If the Senate refuses to accept the House-passed version, a congressional conference panel would try to reach a compromise.

Amtrak, formally known as the National Railroad Passenger Corp., was set up under a 1970 law and began operating in May 1971 through a government-backed effort to save intercity passenger services along specific corridors.

In a key action prior to final passage, the House approved an amendment extending, until July 1, 1974 the time Amtrak must provide service over its basic system before it can seek to discontinue a specific run.

UMW Head Boyle Charged With Murder

Arrested In Yablonski Case

By SUSAN J. REIMER
Associated Press Writer

PITTSBURGH, Pa. (AP) — Former United Mine Workers President W.A. "Tony" Boyle was charged with murder and arrested Thursday in the Yablonski family slayings.

Almost simultaneously, the deposed union chieftain and hand-picked heir of the late John L. Lewis also was indicted on federal conspiracy charges stemming from the case.

The developments climaxed 31/2 years of arrests and trials which followed the murders of UMW insurgent Joseph A. "Jock" Yablonski and Habltnski's wife and daughter in nearby Clarksville, Pa., on New Year's Eve, 1969.

The charges were handed up here and in Washington, Pa., on the basis of disclosures from William J. Turnblazer, 52, a middle-level UMW official who was quoted by investigators as saying Boyle instigated the murder plot.

Like Boyle, Turnblazer was charged both with murder at the state level and with conspiracy by a federal grand jury here. He pleaded guilty to the federal conspiracy charge at once, and publicly acknowledged his role in the case.

Boyle was arrested in Washington, D.C., shortly after the conspiracy indictment was returned.

"I don't know what it's all about," Boyle told newsmen as he was escorted by FBI agents to a waiting car. He made no other statement, but previously has denied any knowledge of the killings.

Later, Boyle was taken before U.S. Magistrate Arthur Burnett. The government agreed to set bond at $50,000 and postpone until Sept. 25 a hearing on Boyle's removal to Pennsylvania. Boyle posted bond and was released.

Boyle's attorney, Plato Cacheris, told newsmen Boyle had no idea an arrest would be coming Thursday.

If convicted on either the state or federal charges. Boyle could be sentenced to life in prison.

Joseph Yablonski Jr., the slain Yablonski's son, witnessed the arrest and told newsmen afterward: "We've waited a long time."

The state murder charges were in two warrants filed in Washington County Court, the county in which the Yablonskis resided.

The warrants were accompanied by an affidavit from a Pennsylvania state trooper who said Turnblazer told him Boyle "instigated and initiated" the Yablonski murder plot in mid-1969.

Official Says Oil Cut-Off Would Force Rationing

By STAN BENJAMIN
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The United States would have to start rationing petroleum products if the Arab states cut off oil deliveries to this country, a high-ranking energy official said Thursday.

But the official, Charles J. DiBona, said there was no evidence so far that any such oil cut-off was threatened.

Last weekend Libya nationalized 51 per cent of all the foreign oil companies operating there, and King Feisal of Saudi Arabia is believed to favor using oil as a way of influencing U. S. policy toward Israel.

Libya also announced a stiff price increase of more than $1 per barrel.

In a news conference Wednesday, President Nixon warned that if Arab oil states continued to increase prices and expropriate property "the inevitable result is that they will lose their markets and other sources will be developed."

It was not clear what those other souces might be.

A government oil expert who declined identification told a newsman it would be difficult bo buy substitute oil anywhere in a world market already marked by heavy demand.

"Everybody is running just flat out," he said. "There is very little spare capacity."

But Nixon has already sent in motion a speed-up of federal leasing of offshore petroleum tracts. Also, higher foreign oil prices could stimulate development of domestic oil fields whose exploitation has been unattractive under previous market-price conditions.

Boyle: Lewis Protege

By ROBERT A. DOBKIN
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — William Anthony Boyle labored toughly, some say ruthlessly, from the coal fields of Montana to the presidency of the United Mine Workers of America.

Thursday the one-time protege of the legendary John L. Lewis stood accused of having a hand in the 1969 murder of the first man to make a serious bid to take it all away from him, Joseph A. "Jock" Yablonski.

Boyle's path from the coal mine, to the executive suite and finally to obscure retirement has lately led him to many a courtroom — first in repeated challenges to his leadership of the rich union, and now, in retirement, to appeal of a five-year prison sentence for misusing union funds.

Boyle, 68, has often called for the "whole truth" about the murders of Yablonski, his wife and daughter. "We are confident that the truth alone can clear our union of any taint of guilt," he has said.

His nickname, "Tony," with no other identification, popped up early in the investigation of the murders when one of the defendants, Claude E. Vealey, said a man he knew only as Tony paid him $5,200 for the killings.

Boyle steadfastly has maintained his innocence.

The son of an Irish immigrant father who had traded the mines of Scotland for the soft coal seams of the American West, Boyle was born in a Montana coal camp in 1904.

He quickly found himself adept at the intricacies of union politics and by 1940 was president of the UMW's Montana District, Lewis tapped him as an assistant in 1948 and Boyle's apprenticeship at the top began.

Boyle worked quietly in Lewis' shadow until the late labor leader retired in 1960. Boyle then moved up to the vice presidency under ailing president Thomas Kennedy.

Kennedy's death in January 1963 brought Boyle the presidency.

Yablonski challenged Boyle for the leadership of the rich union in 1969, it was a bitter campaign in which Boyle and his colleagues were accused of plundering the union treasury, of running a dictatorship and colluding with the coal operators.

Jetliner, Hostages Land In Kuwait

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A Syrian jetliner carrying five Palestinian gunmen and six Arab hostages they seized at the Saudi Arabian Embassy in Paris landed in the Persian Gulf sheikdom of Kuwait early today.

The Israeli state radio said the plane was refused permission to land in several other Mideast countries, including Libya, where a Japanese jet was blown up by its Palestinian hijackers July 24.

The Kuwait Foreign Ministry confirmed the landing of the Syrian Arab Airlines Caravelle jet after a flight of nearly 3,500 miles, including a refueling stop in Cairo. The ministry said there were six hostages on board.

The Syrian Arab News Agency said all persons aboard were reported to be safe after the flight from Paris, where the gunmen held the Arabs and other hostages in the embassy for 27 hours, threatening to kill them if they did not receive safe passage out of the country.

The Kuwaiti interior minister, Saad al Abdullah, rushed to the airport to negotiate with the Palestinians. The Kuwait daily Al Siyassah said he boarded the aircraft.

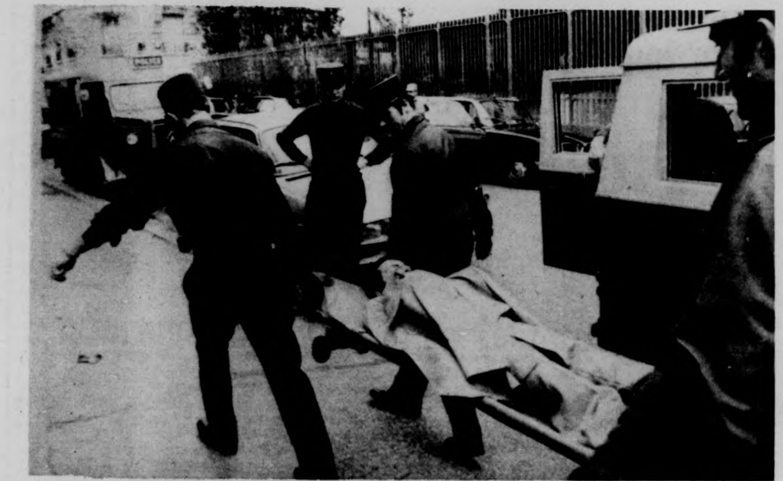
The jet was reported ringed by armored cars and Kuwaiti troops. Other planes on the tarmac were towed out of the area.

The aircraft was provided to the gunmen by President Hafez Assad of Syria, who said he wanted to help end the incident peacefully. On the flight from Cairo to Kuwait, the plane passed over Damascus where Gen. Naji Jamil, the Surian air defense commander, tried to coax the gunmen and the plane down. After a 24-minute conversation that took place while the plane circled overhead, the gunmen broke off and headed the aircraft to Kuwait.

The French government, which backed down on its earlier stand not to let the terrorists go unless they surrendered their weapons, gave them safe passage once they freed two French women who had been threatened with death at the barricaded embassy building.

The terrorists seemed to have realized virtually all their original demands.

The police at Le Bourget airport said there were five gunmen on the Syrian Arab Airlines Caravelle jetliner and five or six hostages. Airport officials gave the number of hostages as four; the French government radio and Paris' afternoon newspapers also had conflicting figures.



PARIS, (AP)-Policemen transporting man who was wounded as he jumped out of window of Saudi Arabian Embassy after three gunmen claiming membership in a Palestinian splinter group took at least 5 hostages in the Embassy today and demanded an aircraft to fly them and their prisoners to an unnamed Arab capital.

Analysis:

By HOLGER JENSEN
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - The Arab gunmen who flew to Cairo with hostages after holding up in the Saudi Arabian Embassy in Paris have again demonstrated the splintering of the Palestine liberation movement and the waning control of its established leadership.

It is the fourth unsanctioned guerrilla operation this year by individuals or groups variously branded by the Palestine Liberation Organization umbrella body as "outlaws," "renegades" and "suspicious elements working to undermine the revolution."

It is the second time this year that Saudi Arabia has become a victim of the movement it helps finance up to the tune of $20 million a year. Palestinian leaders are only too well aware of the budgetary implications in angering the Saudis.

Officially, Saudi Arabia contributes at least $2 ½ million a year to the umbrella organization. Another larger unspecified amount to the Al Fatah guerrilla group, plus all the revenue from a 5 per cent income tax imposed on an estimated 35,000 Palestinians working in Saudi Arabia. The tax alone amounts to $15 million a year.

Nixon Vetoes $2 Minimum Wage

By BILL NEIKIRK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon vetoed a bill Thursday to raise the federal minimum wage to $2 an hour and called on Congress to pass a new, and less extensive, minimum wage bill this year.

In a veto message, Nixon said the measure approved by Congress "would unfortunately do far more harm than good. It would cause unemployment. It is inflationary and it hurts those who can least afford it."

The House scheduled a vote Sept. 19 on a motion to override the veto.

The President said that fairness and decency require that the minimum wage rate, now at $1.60 an hour, be increased this year.

He said the bill supported by the administration would increase the minimum wage for most nonfarm workers to $1.90 immediately and then to $2.30 over the next three years.

The bill approved by Congress would have boosted the minimum wage to $2.20 next July 1 and also bring seven million new workers under the program. About 49.5 million workers are covered now.

The veto is expected to be upheld by the House. The measure passed there by a vote of 253 to 152, less than the required two-thirds margin needed to reject a veto. The margin was 62 to 28 in the Senate.

When Nixon announced his intention to veto, it resulted in immediate sharp criticism from labor leaders.

Nixon said his economic advisers tell him that signing the bill would have caused a significant decline in employment opportunities for those effected. He again called for a provision that would set the minimum wage for teen-agers at a lower level, saying this would help increase job opportunities for the young.

Nixon Appeals Order On Tapes Release

By MARGARET GENTRY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon asked a federal appeals court Thursday to lift a lower court order requiring him to turn over secret White House tape recordings of conversations related to the Watergate investigation.

Nixon's attorneys asked the U.S. Circuit Court to order U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica to vacate his order last week demanding the tapes for his private inspection.

In a related matter, Sirica gave the White House extra time to file an answer to a separate lawsuit in which the Senate Watergate committee is seeking access to the tapes.

Sirica rejected the committee's request that action on that case be speeded up, saying he "is determined not to be rushed into a half-baked job."

There are two separate legal actions centering on the tapes, one brought by special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox an the other by the Senate committee.

Sirica had ruled in the Cox case that Nixon must turn over the tapes to him in order for the judge to determine if portions could be submitted to the Watergate grand jury.

Nixon's lawyers told the appeals court that decision "is clearly erroneous and beyond the power of the judicial branch in that it purports to subject the President of the United States to compulsory process for acts performed in his official capacity."

Nixon has contended throughout the historic debate that the courts have no jurisdiction to force disclosure of private communications between the President and his advisers.

Sirica ruled, however, that the grand jury was entitled to information bearing on criminal investigations.

Senator Hughes Retiring

By VAL GLEN CORLEY

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) - Sen. Harold Hughes, once a contender for president, says that when his term expires he'll become an unsalaried religious lay worker devoted "to the work of God."

The Iowa Democrat said Thursday that when his term ends in January 1975, he will begin working with the Fellowship Foundation of Washington, D.C., and the International Christian Leadership, which he called "associations of brothers working together."

"Rightly or wrongly, I believe I can move people through a spiritual approach more effectively than I have been able to achieve through the policital approach," Hughes, 51, said.

Iowa Democrats and Republicans expected him to seek re-election for a second Senate term. The decision was bound to spark wholesale rethinking of political plans by potential candidates in both political parties.

"I've been working with them on a volunteer basis for several years," the former three-term Iowa governor said of the two foundations.

Hughes was an early candidate for the 1972 Democratic presidential nomination and later Sen. Edmund Muskie's campaign manager. He was instrumental this summer in forcing the disclosure by the Pentagon of secret Cambodia bombings.

The first-term seanator said he had considered his decision and "have prayed about it and talked to my family about it" for two years.

I Think I Love You All

"You won't have Nixon to kick around any more, because, gentlemen, this is my last press conference", the future President said in 1962. The passage of time has demonstrated the folly of trying to be dramatic about oneself, although in the man's defense, he still doesn't like press conferences very much. People who retire from the entertainment field, such as Frank Sinatra, or from elective politics, such as Richard Nixon and Eugene McCarthy, find it harder to have themselves taken seriously upon their return. Often they wish they hadn't been so public, or so positive, in their earlier pronouncements of finality.

One day last spring, while recovering from the hysteria with which Don Glickstein bid adieu to his Collegian podium. I realized that, at that moment, it might be wise for me to follow suit, to burn my bridges, and insure my own exile from these melancholy pages. Undergraduate editorializing is an occupation in which there is danger of complacency. I have never met anyone who does not on occasion enjoy an audience. An audience originally was a hearing; it has come to connote a group of people who all pay some degree of attention to someone else or some thing. If there is one thing that characterizes a writer, it is that he or she could not attract a sufficient audience by means of oral communication alone. The lucky person who is content with speaking to whomever wishes to speak to her or him never involves himself or herself with this business of publication, which is after all simply making one's words public. The public may best be defined as everyone other than the people one knows. I believe much of the trouble on our planet can be traced to the willingness of potentates and public communicants to accept the notion of a public. I once quoted on the pages my former roommate to the effect that no one should be allowed to kill anyone without first sitting down to talk for six hours. Obviously, the relationship of American bombs and Cambodian civilians did not meet this requirement. By this same logic, I am not sure I should lay my trip on anyone else, or that I should be writing these words today after foreswearing this practice with good reason just four months ago, "in public."

At the time that I did so, I did not feel myself to be in possession of any particular truth or truths so important as to require their massive circulation. Perhaps I am wrong now, but I have altered that view somewhat in recent days, as I have prepared myself to leave everything that has ever been familiar.

I am leaving Amherst to explore the world in which I live. I am no less a fool than anyone else, but at present I am under the illusion that I have discovered the way in which I should live. My adoption of this way is not complete as yet, but it seems that now is the time to find out if it is correct.

One week ago I came here to say good-bye to many of the people with whom I share mutual affection. During the often frenetic, sometimes painfully tedious, five years I have spent here, there have been many people I would want to see before going far away. In the process of looking for them, I have stumbled across something which I would like to share with my friends, my readers whom I never met, and with anyone else who is not offended by my presumption.

Without resorting to other people's words, I would explain that I have discovered the wonders of harmony and simplicity. Quiet examination of certain key questions has led me to the conclusion that the only purpose of an individual life is to enjoy the time he or she has. To do this, one needs only to refrain from doing anything one does not wish to do.

Western civilization was founded on the principle that one should delay gratification. Sigmund Freud or Herbert Marcuse, among others, have explained this more thoroughly than I could ever hope to, but savings accounts and football practic demonstrate this quite well. When Western civilization goes, it will probably take all homo sapiens with it. Its effect on people has been dismal; R. O. Laing is respected for pointing out that insanity is only normal. The average American, for example, is unhealthy, mentally and physically, and mentally and physically is all there really is.

The principle problem I see people experiencing is tension. People hurry, people worry, and by doing both we damage our organism. We have learned about psychosomatic and somapsychotic illness, and it is apparent that the mind and the body are partners in all things.

The Athenian philosophers spoke of a sound mind in a sound body. The principle is simple. If either your mind or your body is asked to do too much or too little, it is damaged. If proper care is taken, both will remain healthy longer.

If one learns to live harmoniously with oneself, I believe one can also live in harmony with our world. Tearing apart a Macdonald's hamburger is treating one's stomach as an adversary. Recent attempts in their advertising show the "makers" of Alka-Seltzer equating submarine sandwiches with everything, and Alka-Seltzer, as the yin and yang of your stomach. Such a price to pay in order to get back to where one began!

Many of my acquaintances, myself included, have often shuddered at the thought of a long life. There are many, many people on death trips. I thank the twisted wreck of a 1961 VolksWagon for teaching me the value of life. I thank my hippie friends for teaching me the means to enjoy life. That means, I believe, is to maintain a fairly placid equilibrium as much as possible. When I was suicidal, my joy was mitigated by the knowledge that eventually, again and again and again, I was going to bum out. Only recently did it occur to me that the imaginary middle ground could be peaceful and fertile. I shall be testing this notion as I travel around at whatever pace my mind and body take me.

It is a measure of the chaos in which I have lived that I cannot remember everyone I know I would like to see. This is a disappointment which I hope will be relieved somewhat by writing this goodbye. I have only one other disappointment at this time. Something compels me to confess it here.

There is one thing which I hoped would happen which as I leave has not. In the past year I have offered myself as an instrument of happiness to someone who is desperately unhappy. The persistence and unkindness with which she has rejected my various gestures has hurt me deeply, but her unwillingness to work her way out of herself has hurt me more. I leave without either having succeeded or failed, and it has a bitter taste to it. Perhaps more than I wish it for everyone else, I wish her happiness, and I wish that someday, she may think of me and feel kindly as she does so.

With this admittedly major exception, I leave you as a happy man, and I hope all of you who know me will find peace

Cut The Red China Connection

The date is 1949. Mao Tse-tung's Communist forces overthrow those of Chiang Kai-shek and take over the mainland of China. Chiang sets up a republic on the island Taiwan. Prosperity reigns, even in 1972 but...

The date is 1972. President Nixon travels to China and starts diplomatic relations with Mao's regime. The United Nations then ousts Taiwan and admits the Red Chinese.

These two events are considered atrocious. Chairman Mao is nothing more than an overglorified butcher. These events betray the free people of Taiwan. They are used to it. It has happened before.

These days, Patricia Hurley (daughter of Patrick Hurley, our last ambassador to Mainland China) is making a nationwide tour telling her late father's story. It seems as though Ambassador Hurley was doing all he could to help Chiang's forces. But this was hampered by Secretary of States Dean Acheson and George Marshall in their "negotiations". I put quotes around negotiations because all they did was help Mao. But the thing that hurt Ambassador Hurley the most was that two of his employees, John C. Vincent and John S. Service, were doing all they could to help the Communists. He fired those two and sent them home. But when they returned, they were appointed as Hurley's superiors. The ambassador was so upset that he resigned. Shortly afterward, the Communists took over.

It is well known what kind of a regime Chairman Mao runs. He has run the most opressive dictatorship known to the modern world. And Nixon has the gall to try and establish diplomatic relations with this butcher while ignoring Free China, a nation that wants to be friends with the United States.

Nixon says he can establish world peace by being friendly with Red China. I say he cannot. That is, unless his definition of peace is absolutely no resistance to communism. The only way we can really enjoy peace is to defeat the communist enemy.

You cannot defeat an enemy by negotiating with them. That's suicide, especially with the communists. History has shown that.

What about trade? I'll tell you about trade. Red China has only one crop they can trade-HEROIN! Several refugees have testified about this. But Congress has ignored this.

It is my feeling that Nixon wants to overthrow the Nationalists because of the heavy blow it would have on the anti-Communist cause. Setting up diplomatic relations with the Reds is the first step. If we are to truly have peace in this world, the communists must be defeated. There can be no other way because the commies will not permit it. And yet our government is hell bent on establishing "friendly" relations with the Red Chinese. If you deplore this treachery to the anti-communist cause, I urge you deplore this treachery to the anti-communist cause, I urge you to write your Congressman and senators and tell them how you feel. For if enough pressure is put on the Federal Government, we can stop this treachery and Cut The Red China Connection.

Hang The Fucking Creep

To The Editor:

The People's judiciary committee, made up of 33 people from all social classes in proportion to their per cent of the population, has just handed down its decision of guilty as charged of blatantly deceiving the American public while holding the highest political office in the land.

The committee's rationale was that it is high time that an example is set for all politicans and business leaders to be alarmed that deceitfulness and corruption are no longer high premium moral values in this perverse country. Upon this note and raising with the massive wave of discontent over the president's handling and involvement of Watergate, the chairperson sentenced Nixon, the fucking creep, to be hung until dead in a public performance.

The official statement to the press by the People's Judiciary Committee stated the need to bring the enormous amount of white collar crime in America to a halt saying "the nation's junkies may be beating out some citizens of their wallets and purses or be breaking into their homes and offices and get a few hundred dollars which is not a threat to the basic political-social structure of the country but this ripping off of billions of dollars every year by our nations political and business leaders by allowing political contributions to buy favors, tax loop holes to exist, price fixing by monopoly capitalists, false advertising, trusts and monopolies to continue and all other surreptitious and deceitful activities at high levels is destroying the shakey foundations which this country has been built on."

All members of Congress will be invited as well as all state governors and legislators plus the presidents and board members of the 500 largest corporations. The major T.V. networks will show this necessary performance nationwide on prime time viewing while the radio networks will carry the sounds of this historical event.

George McGovern has been elected by popular mandate to be chief executioner at the ceremonies.

Hillel

To The Editor:

In the Back to School Edition you described Hillel as "The Jewish religious organization on campus promoting and sponsoring activities some having to do with Judaism (Sept. 4th, 5th, 1973, p. 65). There are several errors in this statement which I feel compelled to correct.

Hillel is not a "religious" organization in the common understanding of the term religious. Similarly, Judaism is not a religion in the sense that Christianity is a religion.

The Jews are a people and their civilization is termed Judaism. Hillel is the focus for the Jewish community at UMass. Our program is a function of the interests and concerns of all Jews who see themselves as a part of the Jewish community.

All means all!--religious (in its various expressions), agnostic, culturalist, zionist, yiddishist, activist, radical, socialist, etc. All Jews may find a focus for their lives in Hillel.

I invite the Jewish community to visit our center (S.U.302) to browse in our library, sip coffee, or just talk.

Heated Water; Larger Oysters

By PAT SHERLOCK
Associated Press Writer

WISCASSET, Maine (AP)- Heated water discharged from power generating stations such as atomic energy plants may help solve the world's food problem.

A marine biologist in Wiscasset has nearly doubled the size of oysters in their first year of life by cultivating them in the heated water.

"Using oysters spawned now, we can attain a year's growth by next June, when the growing season normally begins, and get a second year's growth started in that first year," said Walter S. Foster, a biological consultant.

With the same process, Foster, who is working under contract to the Maine Sea & Shore Fisheries Department, has also doubled the length of soft shell clams and has extended by several months the normal summer growing cycle of other shellfish species.

His experiments are conducted at a field laboratory he set up in 1969 at the mouth of the Sheepscot River. The facility is in the shadow of Maine Yankee Atomic Power Co.'s fossil fuel-powered generating station, about three miles upstream from the company's new nuclear plant on Montsweag Bay.

The stat project, financed by a five-year grant from Maine Yankee, is to determine if a commercial oyster industry can be developed in Maine.

"Our goal initially was to see what we could get out of heated water," Foster said. "We've found that heated water, when enriched with algae, can be used to extend growing seasons. And we feel it can be used to the advantage of industry."

Dana E. Wallace, assistant director of research at the Sea & Shore Fisheries Department, said the project has shown satisfying results, but has also shown that a commercial oyster industry off the Maine coast cannot be keyed to a winter operation.

"What we're trying to do is get the best of both worlds: Mother Nature and enriched, heated water," Wallace said.

Foster began the experiments in 1970 by dividing shellfish culture organisms in three tanks of water. One contained heated water from the fossil plant. The second contained unheated ocean water and the third had heated water that was thermostatically controlled to a lower degree than the first tank.

"At the end of the first month, the advantages of heated sea water were readily apparent," Foster wrote in a report. But he added "it is apparent that something other than temperature is a factor in determining good growing conditions."

Two above-ground pools were built to grow algae, which was then added to the cultivating tanks "to feed the shellfish at a level commensurate with the metabolic requirements at the elevated temperatures."

By 1972, Foster was bringing quahogs and soft shell clams from inch-long seeds to market size within 12 months. The clams in the algae-enriched heated water doubled in length, a-ding as much as 44 millimeters to their size, while clams in unheated ocean water average a 13-millimeter growth.

Last August, the end of the growing season in this climate, Foster placed 4,000 oysters weighing a total of three ounces in the heated, enriched water. In less than three months, they grew to an average size of one-and-one-quarter inches, he said.

"Normally, there would have been virtually no growth at all at that time of year," said Wallace, who oversees the project.

The one failure the experiment has met with was an attempt to speed the growth of mussels. The mussel mortality rate was 100 percent in heated water the first year and similar results occurred the following year.

Mussel cultures were eventually dropped.

"We can definitely capitalize on this heated water, which is particularly advantageous over nature during the early spring and late fall, to extend the growing seasons of shellfish," Foster said.

"Biologically, we'v3 got it knocked. Technologically, we've still got a few small problems to work out."

The research might be carried a step further in the final year by attempting to cultivate seed shellfish in the heated water discharged from Maine Yankee's nearby atomic plant.

Seafood Destroyed By Anticholera Team

NAPLES, Italy (AP) Five hundred navy frogmen and coast guard officers destroyed 300 tons of mussels in the Bay of Naples Thursday in an anticholera move which left hundreds jobless.

Mussels have been blamed as the source of Italy's cholera outbreak.

The anticholera teams broke the heavy clusters of mussels off their buoys and sank them. Frogmen dived to cut off cable ends fastened to stones on the sea bottom. The mussels hung like big bunches from the cables stretched between a float and sunken rocks.

Then the teams moved out to rake up other mussel beds on the coast near Naples.

A crowd of mussel growers, their wives and children watched the men destroy their source of income throughout the day. Ninety families made a living from the mussel beds.

"Who else can give me a job at 60?" asked Cirillo De Crescenzio, one of the mussel growers.

Another pointed to four drains letting the city's sewage out into the harbor where the mussel beds were. "The disease came from there," he said. "The sewage has been pouring out for years. Why are we suffering now for the city's failure to keep the sea clean?"

Mussel beds were also being destroyed on the Adriatic coast near Bari, Italy's second-worst-stricken city.

The cholera death toll rose to 19 with the death of a 58-year-old man in a Naples hospital, but health officials said the outbreak was being brought under control.

Cholera has killed 11 in Naples, where Italy's worst outbreak in 50 years was first detected, seven in the Bari-Foggia area, and one in Rome.

Italian medical authorities said 95 per cent of the cholera cases in Naples had been linked to shellfish, particularly mussels. They are especially popular in southern Italy.

Authorities said they were determined to enforce a nationwide ban on the sale of shellfish. The Naples district attorney launched an investigation to determine who was responsible for licensing mussel beds despite warnings from medical exports on possible health hazards.

As a result of the outcry over shellfish, however, consumption of all fish in Italy has dropped sharply.

Religion Courses

A series of one-credit study courses on subjects of religion and personal values are being offered to UMass persons and others in the Amherst area.

Topics for the fall semester series include religion and politics, feminist theology, St. Paul, psychology and religion, new ways of doing theology, and worship as celebration.

Most courses will meet eight times for two hours each. They will begin during the week of September 17-21.

Posters announcing the courses go up on campus today. Brochures attached to the posters give details of time and places for courses, as well as a registration form.

The courses are sponsored by the United Christian Foundation, representing ecumenical Protestant ministries at the university. Courses are accredited through the colloquia program of Southwest Residential College. It is not necessary to take the courses for credit in order to register.

Registration forms should be returned to the United Christian Foundation at 319 Hampshire House by next Friday, September 14. Forms may be mailed or delivered in person. Further information is available by phoning the United Christian Foundation at 545-2661 or 545-2789.

From Mandarin To Mac Datho: Asian And Irish Studies Offered

IRISH STUDIES

For the academic year 1973-74 only, special courses in Irish Studies will be offered at the University. Maria Tymoczko, who received her Ph.D. from Harvard in 1973, will be in residence in the English Department for one year under the new Post-Doctoral Fellowship Program.

In the fall semester Ms. Tymoczko will offer Introductory Old Irish. The aim of the course will be a sufficient mastery of the language for reading simple literary texts. The course will combine lectures on grammar, approached from the comparative Indo-European perspective, with text translation of The Story of MacDatho's Pig and The Cattle Raid of Cooley. This will be a graduate course, English 811, but it may be taken by undergraduates as English 385 or 386, Independent Study.

In the Spring semester Ms. Tymoczko will offer Early Celtic Literature. This will be a survey of pre-Norman Irish and Welsh literature, with emphasis on the major genres of literature, epic, satire, myth, folktale, gnomic literature, and nature poetry, in their delicious Celtic manifestations. This will be an undergraduate course, English 380, but may be taken by graduate students as English 700, Special Problems.

Students who have an interest in or wish to develop expertise in the area of Irish Studies are urged to take advantage of these unique opportunities.

Introductory Old Irish will meet by arrangement during the fall term. The first organizational class meeting is scheduled for Tuesday, September 11, at 2:30 in Bartlett 478. Interested Students should get in touch with Ms. Tymoczko at Bartlett 478 or by calling 586-3908 or should contact the English Department Graduate Office in Bartlett 452, phone 5-0979.

ASIAN STUDIES

The Asian Studies Program announces the appointment of a new faculty member for the fall semester:

Mr. Chiang-mao Cheng, Associate Professor of Chinese, received his Ph.D. in Chinese literature from Princeton University. He has been teaching Chinese at the University of California at Berkeley for the past five years. He will teach courses in Chinese language and literature, and advanced Japanese literature.

The Asian Studies Program now offers majors (B.A.) in Chinese and in Japanese. These majors emphasize the study of language, literature -- and three semesters to the study of various aspects of literature -- and three semestesters of classical Chinese, plus many lecture courses (in English) on various aspects of literature, linguistics, and culture.

The Asian Studies Program also participates in the administration of an interdisciplinary Certificate in Asian Studies. This Certificate is not a major but is designed to supplement established majors (such as Anthropology, History, etc.) and certify that a student has completed a substantial amount of interdisciplinary study in courses pertaining to Asia, in addition to the completion of a B.A. degree. The certificate requiresCertificate requires the completion of 24 credits from among the courses on the ASIAN STUDIES COURSE LIST within at least three different disciplines. Credits applied to the completion of a major may also be applied to the Certificate. The certificate program is open to all students.

For more information on the many UMass and Five-College courses dealing with East, South, and Southeast Asia, please see the ASIAN STUDIES COURSE LIST. AND THE FIVE COLLEGE ASIAN STUDIES COURSE LIST. These lists as well as information about Chinese and Japanese language study, the majors in Chinese and Japanese, and the Certificate in Asian Studies, please contact the Asian Studies program office in 804 Thompson Hall (545-0886)

Rally Monday

There will be a rally Monday at noon on the front steps of the Student Union concerning the parking situation. All interested persons are invited to attend.

difficulties. Marine Corps recruiters in Worcester were ordered to work at least a 72-hour week after failing to meet the monthly quota.

High ranking Pentagon officials are dutifully optimistic about the success of an all-volunteer service. But few recruiters would privately support that position.

Day Care Offered

Continuing Education for Women is sponsoring a community day care service on Saturdays open to children ages three to five years old every Saturday from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. The sessions will begin September 15 at the University Day School at Bowditch Lodge on the UMass campus.

Up to this point there has been no day care service available on the weekend for area residents. The increasing popularity of Saturday classes, and the fact that many area jobs entail working on Saturdays made the lack of weekend day care a serious handicap for a lot of area parents. The new Saturday day care facility should help to alleviate this problem.

The new day care facility will be run by Marcelle Feltman and Tom Weiner, two area residents with experience in early childhood education. Anyone interested in further information and registration may call 549-6596 or 584-2790 after 5:30 p.m.

Pointers From The Attorney For Students

By RICHARD M. HOWLAND
Attorney for Students

This column is a regular feature of the Daily Collegian prepared by the Attorney for Students. Most weeks, the subject will be some law-related issue that seems to me to be important to the general student community. Anyone writing to this column at the Collegian will be answered and questions of general interest will be answered in this space.

In the first few days of a new academic year, there are a number of items that should be taken care of to avoid future problems. I will simply list items that may affect you. Any personal problems should be asked of me at my office, 432 Student Union (545-0341) if your situation is unclear.

LANDLORD-TENANT

1. Inspect all apartments on arrival or within the first week or so; list all defects (anything not perfect); have a copy signed or initialed by the owner or manager and leave them a copy. This will protect against wrongful deductions from security deposits whe you leave. Request specific repairs separately; do not rely on the list as notice to repair defects.

2. Be sure you understand the terms of tenancy, rent, due date, amount, guests, cars, subleasing, pets, rules, and the like.

3. Find out who you see for problems in the tenancy.

MOTOR VEHICLES

1. Be sure that your car is registered and insured ($100 minimum fine) according to Massachusetts limits.

2. Out of state students car must be registered and carry a special sticker at the Campus Police Office in addition to all other registration of the car.

3. It is probably not lawful to operate a car registered out of state if you earn money in Massachusetts or have any children in school; check with the police or me if in doubt.

4. Do not abandon (leave) any car on any property without explicit permission of the owner (including apartment complexes) or risk heavy fines in addition to towing and storage.

5. Carry motorcycle inspection sticker and registration and all riders wear protective helmets.

6. Carry registration, proof of insurance and have all motor vehicles inspected in October and April or you will be towed and may be arrested even if you can later prove you are right!

DRINKING

The age is eighteen. You can be put in jail for over doing it or hospitalized, but this is not an arrest and there is no record or court.

If you drink three conventional servings of wine, beer, or hard liquor in one hour, four in two hours, five in three hours and so on, you will probably fail a breath test if you operate a motor vehicle. A conviction of "drunk driving" will cost you your license for a year and many dollars. Refusal to take the breath test will cost your license for 90 days.

CREDIT

1. Please be alert to the exquisite opportunity to invest all or most of your income in something you neither want, need or have any use for, but get to pay for over the balance of your education.

2. If you fall victim to such an installment payment opportunity, you may rescind and revoke the contract within three business days by letter or telegram and recover your money. If you decide you don't want what the door to door salesman just "sold" you, act promptly.

SHOPLIFTING

1. Massachusetts law provides that the crime of shoplifting has occurred if any merchandise is placed out of sight within the store whether or not any attempt to leave the store or go by the check out counter is made. This means that if you put any goods in a purse or bag or pocket while in the store, you may be guilty of shoplifting.

2. A merchant has the right to reasonably stop suspicious persons to protect the store. A signed confession may not be required nor may overreaching searches be conducted. However, the merchant may summon police and obtain assistance from them depending upon the circumstances.

3. The penalty for shoplifting includes possible jail and high fines. There is an additional problem in that a record of conviction for shoplifting will adversely affect prospective employment. Most of the larger area stores do prosecute shoplifting and early in the year there is the added enthusiasm for "making an example".

ARRESTS

1. If you are arrested, you can only be released by a magistrate or a judge. No police officer can release you. Obviously, then, there is no sense in arguing with the officer. Logically, then, it is better to keep quiet.

2. Every student has the right to call the Attorney for Students and should do so rather than make a bad situation worse.

3. Every student who needs a lawyer for criminal defense will be helped to obtain one at reasonable cost. The Attorney for Students cannot provide full defense for ciminal cases, but should be consulted by any student who needs help getting counsel.

ATTORNEY FOR STUDENTS

My office is open without appointment from 10 to 4 Monday through Thursday at 432 Student Union (it has been moved from its old location in the Campus Center.) The office will not be open Fridays except by appointment in emergencies. I am available in emergencies when the office is closed by calling 256-8448.

When seeking assistance, please bring all papers and documents with you so that you can resolve your problem in one trip.

I have a number of pamphlets and brochures on a variety of legal problems which are available if you need them.

Huntington House Needs Volunteers

Huntington House is a new community halfway house, located in Huntington, Massachusetts, for emotionally disturbed adults, ranging in age from 18 to 65. It provides these people with an atmosphere of openness, understanding, tolerance, and compassion which they need as we all do for our well-being. Huntington House is in great need of personal and financial support. Mrs. Elizabeth Bertasz, Director of Huntington House, has donated her own personal savings to make the house a success. However, since she is not independently wealthy, making ends meet is beginning to create quite a problem. There are so many things that Huntington House needs.

If you would like to become a volunteer in recreation, arts and crafts, or help to provide transportation, please call this number: 413-667-3253, or write to this address: Huntington House, Box 171, Huntington, Massachusetts.

Or, if you would like to help Huntington House financially, please make any and all checks payable to Huntington House.

Please help and support us in our fight for mental health.

Five College Meal Interchange In Effect

A more flexible meal interchange program for students at the five colleges will be in effect this semester on an experimental basis. Meal interchange accommodates students who at mealtimes are at guest institutions for academic reasons and would have difficulty returning to their home institutions in time for meals.

With the new plan, a student who can demonstrate (1) that he or she is in fact a student at one of the five colleges (an identification card is required) and (2) that he or she is entitled to a meal at the home institution (students from institutions with a variety of meal plans must be able to demonstrate that they are entitled to the meal in question) should present that evidence to the food service office at the host institution. That office will then designate a dining area at which the meal may be taken.

The food service representatives on the several campuses are the following:

Amherst College - Valentine Hall Office

Hampshire College - Dining Commons Checker

Mount Holyoke College - Matthew Juart, Commissary Building

Smith College - Food Service Office, 30 Belmont Avenue

University of Massachusetts - Gladys Devino, Main Office, Worcester Dining Commons

The above rules apply only for lunches during the five days of the academic week. If a student finds it necessary to have breakfast and dinner on either an occasional or regular basis at another institution, he or she must present to the food service office the two items mentioned above plus evidence that a legitimate academic activity makes it necessary that the student eat that meal at the other campus. A scheduled class is, of course, the most obvious legitimate academic activity. However, such things as participation in music groups or plays or the need to use the library under exceptional circumstances or to meet a faculty member for an appointment not otherwise possible may also be legitimate.

Belchertown Project In 4th Year

This September, the Boltwood-Belchertown Project will undertake its fourth year of service to Belchertown State School for, the mentally retarded. "Boltwood" is a volunteer project, that is planned and run by students from the 5-College community, and is dedicated to providing the State School residents with on-going volunteer programs that contribute to their training as well as offering them social stimulation, play activity, and contact with members of the Community-at-large. The Boltwood Project also tries to give students the chance to test out their academic, and possibly their career interests by providing the opportunity for contact with real people in need of help.

Last year, UMass students were the primary contributors to the Project, both at the level of volunteers and at the level of the student supervisors who run the Boltwood programs. The UMass Student Senate also provided bus service which enabled us to transport volunteers to and from the State School. It is hoped that University students will continue to play a leading role in the activities of the Project.

Boltwood will be offering 12 different programs in which volunteers can participate this year. The programs were developed in conjunction with the staff of a particular residential area by the student supervisors, who are paid for their part-time organizing and supervising work. The programs will operate Monday through Thursday evenings from approximately 6:30 to 8:45 p.m. Transportation will be provided. Volunteers will have the chance to select the program that most interests them, and will be asked to consistently attend the program they choose one night per week for at least the duration of the semester. Academic credit will be made available, depending on the extent of involvement the volunteer desires.

Options for Boltwood involvement this year include: 4 programs working in the Children's Unit; 3 programs dealing with adolescents; 3 programs helping adults with different degrees of retardation; a program working with the multiply handicapped in the School's Infirmary; a weekly Coffee House-Party for community bound residents; and possibly administrative work on the Project's newsletter and on fund-raising efforts.

Anyone who would be interested in helping the retarded has something to offer, regardless of his or her academic major or background. If you would like to learn more about the Boltwood-Belchertown Project, please plan to attend one of our organizational meetings during the week of September 10 - 14.

They have been tentatively scheduled for 7:30 p.m. at the following locations:

SEPT. 10th - Southwest - 227 Boyden, Sylvan - McNamara Lounge.

SEPT. 11th - Southwest - 227 Boyden, Quad - Blue Room, W.D.C.

SEPT. 12th - Orchard Hill, Central - Dickenson Rec. Rm.

SEPT. 13th - Campus Center - Room 803.

There will be an additional meeting held on Tuesday, Sept. 11, at 3:00 p.m. in Campus Center Room No. 803 for students who cannot make the evening meetings.

Free Concert

On Sunday, September 9, there will be a free concert. CLEAN LIVING will be playing from 2 to 5 p.m. on Memorial Hill at Amherst College. Beer and soda will be sold (25 cents) with proceeds going to Belchertown State School.

Strong Swimmers: Water Polo Is For You

There will be a very brief organizational meeting of the UMass Water Polo Club on Friday at 4 p.m. in Thompson 730. Anyone in the University community who is a moderately strong swimmer is invited to join.

Since Coach Bill Mc Cafferty is currently in switzerland delivering an academic paper on the biochemistry of exercise, practice sessions for the first few weeks will be led by the club's co-captains, Kathy MacDonald, Henry MacLean, Jon Nordby, and Dave Conroy. Practice will entail two or three meetings a week throughout the fall semester.

Last spring the club won the New England Division II championship with a record of 8 wins and 2 losses. The women's team had two victories and one defeat in their first season of competition. This season the club will play the University of Vermont, Boston University, the University of Rhode Island, Northeastern, Trinity, MIT, and host a tournament with teams from Canada, the New York Athletic Club, Brown, and Harvard.

No prior water polo experience is necessary. Most members of last years' club had never played before. The club's primary goal is the personal satisfaction and enjoyment of each of its members. Practice is low-keyed and everyone plays in all the games.

Plans are currently being made for the club's January tour to Mexico and Central America, Interested Members should contact Kathy Ryan and Rick Grunneau, chairpersons of the Aquatic Club's International Tour Committee. Pending Negotiations with the United States Department of State, the club may also visit Cuba and host touring teams from Eastern Europe.

Minutemen Seek Revenge

Crusaders Raid UMass

By BILL BALLOU

You never know how good you are until you play the iron, and in two weeks UMass football fans should have a pretty good idea where their heroes are headed, because the iron's coming in.

The Minutemen open at home tomorrow against Holy Cross, an always tough opponent, and host Villanova the next Saturday, playing the Wildcats for the first time since 1962.

But first, Holy Cross.

Last year, you'll remember, the revamped Crusaders dealt the Boardwalk Bowl bound Minutemen a 28-16 beating in Worcester just two games from the end of the season that at the time appeared to knock UMass out of contention for that bowl bid.

The Minutement bounced back to beat New Hampshire and Boston College and make it to Atlantic City while Holy Cross went nowhere but managed to finish up with one of their best records in recent years.

The Cross lost running back Joe Wilson to graduation, and that's got to hurt, but the UMass defense handled the bruiser pretty well last year.

The man to watch now, it seems, is quarterback Pete Vaas, who looks like he's going to be the first really outstanding Crusader quarterback since Jack Lentz in the mid-sixties.

Vaas is a good passer who, on a good day, can do a job on an unprepared secondary. His primary target, flanker Bob Neary, is going to be tough to contain as well.

The Cross coach, Ed Doherty, is one of New England's best, having done an outstanding job taking a program crippled by constant threats of de-emphasis, a wasted season because of a hepatitis outbreak, and two less than good coaches in Tom Boisture and Bill Whitton, and making it into one of New England's stronger ones.

Daily Collegian
SPORTS

UMass is lead offensively by New England quarterback Most Likely to Succeed Peil Pennington, who as a senior, is expected to have an outstanding year. Gone is Steve Schubert, Pennington's favorite target last season, but the UMass receiving corps promises to be just as strong as before. Flanker Tim Berra should continue the fine form he exhibited in the latter stages of last season, and Peter Trow and Ed Hajdusek provide outstanding depth at split end.

The Minuteman running game is going to have to go a ways to compare with the Dick Cummings-Paul Metallo results of last year.

Senior Phil Roland and Soph Jerry Mondalto figure to handle the bulk of the running chores now that Rich Herman has left the team. Much depends on how well an inexperienced offensive line can come through. About the only lineman with any appreciable experience is center Kevin Moran, who as a junior did a steady job in a position no one seemed to want at the beginning of the season.

The pride and joy of the defense will most likely be the line, anchored by co-captain (with Pennington) Johnny Jones. Tom Bradshaw and Ed McAleney are returning starters and Tom Price also played some as a reserve last year.

The linebacking crew, led by Paul St. Onge and Dennis Kiernan, appears strong, as does the secondary, although the loss of John Healy will hurt. Healy was found over the summer to have just one kidney. Even so, Earl Brown, Bob Parrott, and Paul Hansen are veterans.

The Minutemen are led, of course, by New England's Coach-of-the Year Dick MacPherson. Suffice to say he's one of the best.

This year's team is another potential Yankee Conference champion, and could eventually repeat as Boardwalk Bowl winners. Much depends on how some Sophomores in key positions come through.

Holy Cross should provide an excellent opportunity to evaluate how some of these people can perform.

Senate Bars T.V. Blackouts

By TOM SEPPY
Associated Press Sports Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate Thursday passed by a 76-6 vote and sent to the House a bill to bar hometown blackouts of professional sports if the games are sold out 72 hours in advance.

The legislation ould expire one year after enactment, allowing time to determine whether telecasting some home games would result in reduce attendance, as some team owners contend.

Meanwhile, National Football League Commissioner Pete Rozelle said the league might limit its television agreement with the networks to a single game each week if Congress bans local blackouts of NFL games.

Rozelle told the House communications subcommittee that the NFL would have to reconsider its television policy if Congress passes the blackout ban and the 26 league clubs begin showing an attendance decline.

He said televising a single, national, game-of-the-week is "far and away the most economically productive use of television by professional sports leagues.

"The NFL member clubs would then be left to fend for themselves in an attempt to make individual arrangements for their own telecasts," Rozelle said. "And I can assure you that if that situation should come to pass, most NFL cities would be deprived of the away games of their home teams."

Under the current contract, all NFL games are telecast on at least a regional basis, but the towns where the games are being played are blacked out.

Yes, Dick MacPherson is smiling. But will he be smiling Saturday afternoon, as the Minutemen end practice sessions and begin the real thing, their 11 game schedule, against the Holy Cross Crusaders. We'll know around 4 o'clock. (Photo by Alan Chapman)

"Their Time Has Finally Come"

From the Fairgrounds-The combo music is blaring in the background...It's 2 o'clock, the sun is high, and so are most of the participants. With a deep breath you get sweet corn and for a half a buck you get knockwurst...And when the music starts again and the German beer starts to flow, you know you've got to get to the dancefloor...For your time has finally come...

And they wait all year for that final Sunday, a day when the aging wives can get out on their own and enjoy their oats. It's a grand ol' German beerfest, that $3 eat-all, drink-all marathon where kin and grandchild join in the merriment. It's not uncommon to see a pair of middle age, white-haired mothers of six dance arm-in-arm to the sound of their youth as performed by Heiny and the Heinikens...But their time has finally come....

And so with the chores completed by noon it's off to the German Beerfest, the height of the social calendar...For the old German backliners, the wait is worth it. For the young, there's no nostalgia there...But there is meaning...For their time has finally come...

Events need meaning...they need proximity...they need attention...they need participation...Try revenge...Alumni Stadium...-perhaps a sellout crowd of near 20,000...and a very hungry football team...and I would say that Saturday's hosting of the ever Holy Cross is a definition of an event...and for sure...someone's time will come...

You won't see the combo music, or the white shocked dancers, or smell knockwurst in the air. The variables will be different but the actualization of the event remains pretty much the same...The old ladies waited a year for the event...It seems like an eternity for the Minutemen of Massachusetts...The time has to be now...

You can't begin to capture the importance of this one for a team that has to prove alot to many without much age to do it with. . . .

It's hard to tell a youngster like a Wolfe or a Mondalto or a Wood just what this one means...to the UMass football program. But if you were one of the veterans who was there at Holy Cross' Fitton Field a year ago and watched how a Wilson...a Buchanan..or a Kelly humbled the fortune of the Mighty Men of MacPherson...If you could go deep into the mind of the youthful Minuteman as he ponders in his own space in that lockerroom before that opening kickoff, you would find his thoughts toward this Saturday's opponent somewhat censorable...To say the least...

It's kind of like a TV production. You don't get to see what goes on behind the curtain. You only sit there, talk to your loved one, criticize the cheerleaders new uniforms, and they themselves, but you never play sociologist, do you?..You never take the time consider how an afternoon between the 20's actually changes the life of a Tommy Price or a Paul Hansen or any other starting Minuteman?...You only see the scoreboard...

But take a moment to consider the Minutemen...the anguish of a year ago that comes before they very helmet at Alumni tomorrow...It's one that Mac and his youngsters behind the expertise of Pennington can't afford to throw away...

Massachusetts needs this one damn bad...You see...their time has finally come...

Tim Berra (42) slips as he tries to break awav from a Crusader defender in Saturday's 30-28 loss to Holy Cross. Berra set a school record with 11 receptions in the game. (Staff photo by Barbara Luce) (See sports page for details.)

Parking Woes Continue, Rally Today

By JOAN FASSNACHT
and MIKE KNEELAND

A rally protesting the new parking system being implemented this fall at UMass has been called for twelve noon today in front of the Student Union.

The rally, called for in part by Local 1776 of the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employes, AFL-CIO, will call for a return to the old parking system, under which most students and employes paid lower parking fees.

Also today, representatives of the local, which represents some 1,300 UMass employes, will meet with the state labor relations board on campus over an unfair labor charge the union has filed against the university because of the new parking system.

The new parking system was the subject of several protests on campus during the summer, as well as during the spring semester.

Like traffic jams at UMass, discussions over the new parking proposal are getting hot and heavy.

Although the new Parking Proposal has already gone into effect, audible grumblings of discontent can be heard from students, faculty, and employees on this Campus.

Last April, the administration presented the parking proposal before the Student Senate, Graduate Senate, Faculty Senate, the local 1776 AFL-CIO Union, and the MSEA (Mass. State Employee's Association). Two working days later, the proposal was presented before the Finance Committee of the Board of Trustees.

Due to opposition from various groups on campus, the presentation of the issue by the Trustees was postponed from May 2 to May 25.

On June 13, a new proposal was presented to the employees' unions, Student and Faculty Senates, and professional association (i.e. - librarians, secretaries). Because the administration had drawn up the proposal and presented it to these bodies without their advice, members of the various governance units called for a revamping of the parking and transportation council into what are groups called a more representative body. To date this has not been done.

This past August, members of the 1776 union, the undergraduate student body, MSEA, and members of the professional association and faculty picketed Whitmore, the Physical Plant, and the new steam plant at Tilson Farm to protest the hike in parking fees and their lack of say in the matter.

Due to the continuing controversy, the MDC interviewed, Vice-Chancellor Robert Gage; Speaker for the Student Senate David Booker; Operations Manager for Student Senate Transit Service Bob Godding; MSEA President Bernard Turner; Student Senate President Nick Apostola; and Attorney for the Students Richard Howland commented on some of the major points of contention.

Disagreement centers around three main issues: governance, employee parking and the bus system.

Those concerned with governance are indignant over the secrecy which surrounded the Proposal's presentation, and its untimely unveiling at the end of the semester. Groups within the employees, students, and faculty contend that adequate time was not available for discussion. n.

Employees contend that they should not be required to pay to park to work here.

Those members of the University who live in outlying towns have expressed their disappointment with the curtailment of bus service to such outlying towns as Belchertown. They feel that the increased frequency in campus bus service does not justify this cutback.

Controversy continues over the representation of various campus groups on the Committee.

"The Administration did not consult every group on campus," said Turner. "They've made the policy and now they're going to negotiate afterwards. The University has set a course and is going to follow it irrespective of the people on Campus," he added.

However, it was Godding's opinion that, "all the groups on Campus were represented at the one meeting I attended."

"The Administration," said Nick Apostola, "wouldn't impose a satisfactory parking proposal on themselves. The Administration hasn't done any better. The people should have a part in it. Something like this can't be imposed from on high.

"All the groups on the Committee were represented, but the way the Committee was handled misled everyone. Gage assumed the representatives could speak for their constituencies but there was no time to find out if these reprsentatives were truly speaking for their consituencies," he said.

The timing of the public announcement of the Proposal last Spring has also been attacked.

Booker's major objection is that, "the Committee didn't tell the public until two working days before the Proposal went to the Committee to be

Summer shadows the beginning of Fall as classes start for another semester at UMass. Entering year 110 of operation, students enjoy the valley sunsine and a break before dusting off the skis.

WMUA

WMUA (98.1 FM) will cover today's rally live beginning at 11:55 a.m. Covering the event will be Ken Mosakowski and Steve Tripoli.

100 Years Ago

(Ed. Note: As the 1972-73 academic year commences, it's nice to look back to life of the roaring 1890's when life was simpler. There weren't parking hassles or courses in upper level chemistry, you only had to worry about cow diets and milking them on time. The "Index" of 1867 supplies the story.

In these days of inflation, rising food costs, housing costs, and tuition hikes, it's nice to look back at the golden olden days of sunny skies and whispering breezes.

A century ago at UMass...those were the days when everyone knew his neighbor, people smiled, worked, and wanted to become farmers.

Mass Aggie, as it was known in 1867, had a freshman class of 47. There were 6 faculty members and the only major department of study was agriculture.

As the index of 1892 explains, "Massachusetts Agricultural College is a rare chance for young men to obtain a thorough practical education. The cost is reduced to a minimum." Tuition was $12 a term. Room rent $5 per term. Board was $3-$3.50 per week.

Candidates for admission had to be fifteen years of age or over, and pass satisfactory oral and written examinations in English Grammar, Geography, History of the United States, Arithmetic, Algebra to Quadratic Equations, and the Metric System.

Those were the days when apathy was a sin...everyone had an opinion, voiced it, belonged and interacted.

Participation in class events was almost mandatory. The class yell of '94 was..."Rah-Rix-Rah, Zip-Boom-Bah, '94-94-Rah-Rah-Rah". Every class composed it's own yell; it was symbolic of unity.

AGGIE LIFE, the predecessor of the COLLEGIAN, often related this feeling of kindred spirits. "On September 23, Professor Maynard took the Sophomore class on a botanizing trip to Sugar-Loaf. They ascended the mountain, viewed the beautiful scenery for which the place is noted, and after an hour had been thus occupied, they descended. Some of them finding quite rare botanical gems. About 2 p.m. the boys started on their homeward journey when Professor Maynard showed his usual generosity by giving all the watermelons and mushmelons they were capable of eating, which proved to be a large amount in most cases. About 4 p.m., they arrived at the college and after giving the class yell several times, and extending to Professor Maynard a vote of thanks; they went to their rooms all agreeing that they had spent a most profitable and enjoyable day."

It seems that times have changed. This letter of a Freshman writing to his mother was confiscated by a Sophomore and printed in AGGIE LIFE, October 1890. "We must keep regular hours as we must have our lights out by 9:00. My clock stopped and the next thing I knew I heard the janitor yell "lights out". I blew mine out, then I went to bed in the dark.

"Now I go to bed about half-past-eight. I am too sleepy to sit up and study.

"The Sophomores are very rough. . . I am going to keep in my room nights because the Sophomores say they will throw me in the fountain."

Actually, it sounds like something I wrote as a Freshman to my sympathetic mother.

Perhaps aside from rising and falling standards of living, people will be the same. We still complain about identical things, although a century apart... "Are the walks around college to be as slippery next term as they were this winter. So little labor would be required to remove all the snow and ice from the walks." AGGIE LIFE in the 1800's grumbled and griped about matters with which 1970's UMies are still hasseling.

The college had progressed into a university and as the AGGIE proclaimed 100 years ago "When an alumnus of one of the 1st classes returns to the college, after years of absence, he hardly knows the place."

In the next hundred years, who knows?

He's Here To Help You

By CINDY GONET

There is help out there, believe it or not. . .in the office of the ombudsman. He'll aid anyone with any problem for any length of time. He is S. Jay Savereid.

Savereid became ombudsman for UMass last September as the second man in that position since the job was created in 1971. With it, he inherited all the gripes and problems of 25,000 undergraduate and graduate students, the faculty, administrative staff, visitors to campus, and prospective students.

The office of the ombudsman will be operating this semester as it has for the past two years, offering services and aid especially to incoming freshmen and guests to the Amherst area. "We help the person who doesn't know his way around or is getting the brush off," Severeid explained.

Savereid can help you tackle any problem you can't handle yourself. The problems he usually deals with include difficulties with housing, parking, food services, financial aid and medical services. "These students are usually looking for some relief from a housing or food services requirement or are having trouble getting a deposit returned," Savereid said.

"I think there are lots of highly responsive segments to this University but I also think there are lots of places where a student gets a lot of fun feeling response," said Savereid. Problems usually result from misunderstandings, personality differences and situations where the present system simply can't cope with the demand. "One thing that's pretty characteristic of this place-something different from a Harvard or Holy Cross-is that our growth has been so big and so recent than many things still haven't been worked out yet. We're still experiencing growing pains."

The biggest problem with the position is the lack of publicity it receives. Savereid said that no one really knows what an ombudsman is and the function he performs in the University. Savereid said that his predesessor, Prof. Ellsworth Barnard handled only 250 complaints from September 1971 through May 1972. Savereid estimates that he has attended to only 400 cases this academic year.

Because he has gotten only 400 complaints "its entirely a 'do able' job-it's not overwhelming", he said. "If it does become this office that gets the appropriate number of problems from all 25,000 people, then we'd be overrun." He wouldn't have time to handle a problem while a student or faculty member is still in his office — or deal with the appropriate officials in person.

"One thing guaranteed the holder of this office," said Savereid, "is that he has been promised the cooperation of various offices in the University. We don't have the right to subpoena records of anything like that, but if I call an administrator, I get him. A student often won't."

New Library:

Problems Not Unsolvable

By ED GORMAN

The new University Library has experienced problems since it was officially opened June 26 but none of them are unsolvable. According to George Wright of Public Services, "We have had problems and we still do, but none of them are unsolvable. We don't expect everything to work the way we want for another year."

After the novelty wears off, the new library will serve over 6,000 people per day. Wright said that with so many people to serve each day problems are inevitable.

The air conditioning, which broke down for three weeks early this summer, has been repaired for the time being.

Wright said that more repair work on the system will begin once the cold weather sets in.

One of the major problems facing the library officials is signs. Wright said that they are waiting for signs (no smoking, entrance, exit, etc.) to arrive from a graphic company. Until then, makeshift signs are being used.

All toilets and lights are working except for minor problems. Wright said that the Public Services Dept. is still moving in furniture.

The true test of the library's efficiency will come in the next few weeks, said Wright, when it is invaded by hordes of students. He said that the heating system may cause problems but the Physical Plant will be ready for immediate service if any trouble occurs.

Wright said that he has been told by officials at the Physical Plant that the library has experienced very few problems for a building its size. "But," he concluded, "we will just have to wait and see."

Correction

In the Friday's Collegian story regarding campus bars, the sentence "Although there seems to be a great deal of local high schoolers and other persons also using the campus bars, there has been nothing done to prevent this..." was erroneously attributed to Jim Lindsey, the chairperson of the Campus Center Board of Governors.

Mr. Lindsey did not make this statement. Also according to Mr. Lindsey, anyone from outside the UMass community must present both a proof of age, and be accompanied by a current member of the Top of the Campus Club.

Time Magazine Claims

Aide Delivered Tapes To Nixon

NEW YORK (AP) - Time magazine says a Nixon aide has told Senate investigators that he delivered eight or 10 tapes of Watergate conversations to the President on June 4 and picked them up later "fully unwound."

Time said Stephen B. Bull, a special assistant to the president, told investigators for the Senate Watergate committee that Nixon held the tapes for 12 hours, from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.

The magazine added that according to Bull's statement to the investigators, "when Bull retrieved them, all of the tapes had been fully unwound."

Nixon, asked at a news conference last week about the content of the tapes, replied in part: "As a matter of fact, the only time I listened to the tapes, two certain tapes - I didn't listen to all of them, of course - was on June the fourth." The tapes are being sought by both the Ervin committee and by special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox.

The New York Times said Sunday that Bull had also told the investigators Nixon sought to have one of the tapes flown to California while John W. Dean III, former presidential counsel, was appearing before the Senate Watergate committee.

The Times said the request to Bull came at midnight on June 27, and Bull reported there was no courier flight from Washington at that hour.

Bull then was instructed, the Times said, to make arrangements for the tape to be played at the White House for J. Fred Buzhardt, a presidential counsel, so Buzhardt could brief the president on it by telephone.

The Times said the tape was that of an April 15 conversation between the President and Dean. In his testimony to the committee, Dean said that during that conversation he became suspicious that the talk was being recorded when Nixon stepped away from his desk and said in a low voice he had been "foolish" to discuss with an aide the subject of executive clemency for a Watergate defendant.

Creating Inventors

The Dream Machines

By GINNY PITT
Associated Press Writer

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — The days are long past in which great inventors were born and not made, according to a Massachusetts Institute of Technology professor heading a new program designed to develop new ideas and carry them to their ultimate end-a marketable product.

"It is a common belief that inventors and entrepreneurs are self-made men, born with that talent. Edison, the Wright brothers-none attended college," said Dr. Yao' Tzu Li, MIT professor of aeronautics and astronautics.

"But with limits on natural resources, environmental concern and the shrinking U.S. share of the world market, we simply cannot rely upon the self-breeding process of a few innovators to keep the rest of the educated engineers employed. What we need is an organized training ground for innovators and entrepreneurs," Li said.

The National Science Foundation has provided $1.1 million for a five-year innovation program at MIT directed by Li. The program is divided into two segments socio-technological innovation seminars and the innovation co-o-.

The seminars will allow students to talk with other students, professors and leading scientists and industrialists in an attempt to inspire creative thinking, Li said.

"Ideas generage ideas. We already teach students theories of thermaldynamics and flued mechanics," he said, "but we don't currently address specific problems."

The seminars will encourage development of ideas in all fields, from designing a unique musical instrument to inventing a device to convert solar energy to usable electricity.

"But when an idea is generated, it's not very rewarding unless we can see it carried out," Li said.

The co-op segment of the innovation program will provide professional personnel and facilities to produce and market students' inventions.

MIT's Alfred P. Sloan School of Management will work with the innovation program, providing marketing surveys for suggested products.

A co-op board of directors, comprised of well-known businessmen and inventors in their own right, such as Dr. Edwin Land, inventor of the Polaroid Land carmera, will consider the students' proposals, the survey results and general feasibility of projects. The board will then determine which projects will be activated through the co-op.

Li said the innovation program expects to be self-supporting in five years, when the NSF grant runs out. Inventions emerging from the program will be the property of individual students and of MIT. Royalties will be divided proportionately, Li said.

"The method is simple," Li said. "Give students, in addition to a sophisticated education, the exposure to the need for innovation, a pat on the back when deserved, a hint at the right moment, a possibility for reward, and set them loose to get their hands dirty and fall flat on their faces once in a while."

Beef Prices: Finale Unsure

By F. RICHARD CICCONE
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO (AP) - The end to the ceiling on beef prices is not expected to create any immediate changes in the way growers and packers get their product to supermarket meat counters.

Knowledgeable persons in the industry say the retail price of beef probably will rise somewhat, particularly until growers release cattle they have held back during the two-month price ceilings, The ceilings are to be lifted at midnight Sunday.

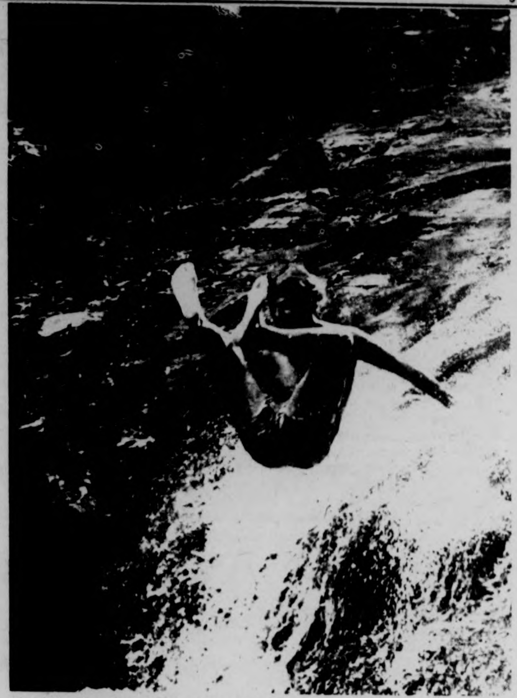
Slaughterhouses, which either closed or had severe curtailments during July and August because of the lack of beef, are expected to return to full operation, but the process will be gradual.

The Agriculture Department reported last week that 103 packing houses remained closed and 375 still were curtailing operations. This compared with Aug. 22 when 139 packers were closed and more than 700 were experiencing cutbacks.

"Most of those who closed or cut back will go back into full swing now that the price freeze has lifted," said Herb Jackson of the Agriculture Department. "Some of the less efficient operations may never be started up again."

Officials at the Chicago and Joliet Stockyards doubted they would have any sharp increases in the cattle market this week.

Chet Bolger, a stockyards spokesman, said cattle receipts have increased the past three weeks and are very near normal of about 10,000 a week.



Registration lines and ninety degree weather sent many UMass students looking for cooler pastimes. Now that the temperature has dropped and classes have started, the party's over.

Parking Fee Spurs Questions

voted on. Because of the way the Proposal was drawn up and implemented, collective bargaining between groups has fallen apart."

Gage, however, disagrees. "The reason the Proposal was announced so late in the semester was because the Committee wanted to be sure. The details of the plan hadn't been worked out yet," he said.

Gage also defended his position over the representation of various Campus groups on the Committee saying, "We presumed the Committee represented the interests of the various constituents. They were not supposed to be experts."

Should employees be required to pay a parking fee?

"Don't state employees in Boston have to pay for their parking at, say, the Saltonstall Building?" stated Gage. "Besides, people aren't forced to work here," he added.

"Employees should not be forced to pay for parking fees," argued Turner, "but the state should. Employees should not be forced to pay to come to work.

"There is no commuter service here like in Boston," he continued. "The bus system here is not available to everyone."

One University employee, Stephen Kozloski, declared that the University can't legally impose a parking fee on the employees. However, Dick Howland disputed his stand.

"Nothing in the Mass. General Laws Annotated prohibits the University from establishing registration and parking fees," Howland said.

Although the frequency of campus buses has increased, service to some outlying towns has been curtailed.

Said Gage, "Bus service to outlying towns was cut off for financial reasons, and also because there were not enough people riding the buses to warrant their use.

"It is more ecologically sound to expand the bus service than to build new lots, but it's more expensive. We must draw the line between ecology and economy," he added.

Godding noted that in the original proposal the parking fees were not marked to go to the support of the bus service. Then Vice Chancellor Campion said some of the fees would be channeled there.

"This is news to me," Godding said.

It was Apostola's opinion that cars should be kept away from the Campus core. "We should build peripheral lots as core lots are closed, and bus the people from them to the Campus," he said.

"I believe it is uneconomical to have full bus service," he added.

Turner agreed. "The Administration," he said, "says they want a green campus but they are extending the asphalt. I would like to see them do away with inner lots and expand the bus service."

Gage concluded that it's difficult to satisfy the interests of the various group, students, faculty, and employees, think they have a special interest in the Proposal. It's impossible to get consensus," he said.

Gage said he would reconsider the proposal if there was strong opposition. He cautioned though, that anyone who opposes the Proposal with vehemence must have a reliable alternative.

Parking: How It's Done At UWisconsin

By BILL DENSMORE

MADISON, Wis.--Since UMass isn't the only large university in the country, it isn't the only one with parking and transportation problems.

Not only does the main University of Wisconsin campus here have to cope with keeping 35,000 students on the move, but campus administrators here have a second headache--their campus sits smack in the middle of this city of 172,000 and the state capital to boot.

Small wonder the central administration decided they needed a parking and transportation coordinator back in 1970, and they hired Tim Phillips, a former grad student, to do the job.

Since Phillips came on the job a few changes have been made. At first the campus had no bus system and no overall policy for vehicle parking. In addition the city was providing little or no municipal bus service--with a fleet of battered decade-old buses that never carried full loads.

According to Phillips, UW "began to grow in leaps and bounds" during the sixties and "we built all our new buildings on parking lots."

"So by 1970 the crunch was really on in parking, and we had nowhere to build new lots because the campus is surrounded by city blocks," Phillips said.

Up to 1970 UW charged everybody a flat rate of $12 per year to park in any campus lot with a sticker. At the time there was one parking space for every five campus users and gigantic traffic jams on the streets surrounding the campus each weekday, Phillips recalls.

Phillips' efforts to control traffic congestion centered on two approaches, a rational and strictly enforced parking system to fairly allocate the woefully inadequate spaces available to UW students and staff, and a greatly expanded bus system operating lengthwise across the rectangular campus.

The University now operates twelve buses through the campus and to and from a peripheral "lot 60" similar in size and relative location to UMass "V lot."

"Our bus system lost $100,000 the first year," Phillips said, "but last year we made $2,000 and we have gained ridership every year."

At the same time UW was revamping its bus system, the city of Madison, with help from the Wisconsin legislature bought the ailing bus company, outfited it with new air-conditioned buses and greatly expanded the previous routes.

City buses cost 25¢ to ride. Those run by the University on campus are 15¢. In addition, a group of city merchants run a 5¢ "shuttle bus" up and down the main commercial street in the center of campus to spur business.

Phillips said that since the buses began operating and parking fees were increased there has been an obvious decrease in traffic, resulting in "a better environment for education."

When asked how he arrived at fair parking fees, Phillips said, "Well, first we looked at the central campus lots and we said, 'How much can we get for them and still have people park?' Then we said, 'What will the administration be willing to accept as reasonable."

What Phillips came up with was a scale with 7 increments varying in price according to the distance of the lots from the center of campus--they're relative "desirability."

UW has 9,000 spaces (compared to UMass' 7,000). Of those, 5,500 are allocated outright as restricted to faculty and staff (unlike UMass). The present fee schedule is:

--$180-yr. for 44 "core" spaces beside UW's Peterson administration building.

--$150-yr. for 200 "center campus" spaces.

--$100-yr. for 1,500 "inner core" spaces.

--$ 65-yr. for 3,000 "peripheral" spaces.

$ 55-yr. for 1,000 "peripheral" spaces.

-- $25-yr. for 700 "edge" spaces not served by bus.

-- $5-yr. for 2,000 spaces in UW's "lot 60" served by bus shuttle every twelve minutes during the day but previously free.

Phillips said dealing with campus transportation "just isn't as simple as it looks," and "there are some problems that people don't understand."

He said when UW's parking fees first went up in 1971 commuters refused to park on campus, but now have decided the cost is worth it.

"The first year we had empty spaces--the second year they came creeping back in again," he said.

He said some employees of the University of Wisconsin have complained that they deserve to park free as a fringe benefit, claiming that employees of a nearby meat-packing plant have free space. Phillips disputes such logic.

" 'Nobody's forcing you to come to work at the Univ. of Wisconsin,' I tell them, 'and at UW we have an enforced parking plan.' " he said.

Even The Experts Can't Tell

Beef Ceiling Lifts; Prices Uncertain

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Consumers prepared for another round of price increases with the lifting of the beef ceiling at midnight Sunday, but even the experts weren't sure what would happen at the supermarket on Monday.

"At the moment," said Forest Barter, meat merchandiser for the A&P in Boston, "it's anybody's guess."

Wade Parker, general manager of the Pacific Meat Co. in Portland, Ore., said, "The retail price of beef could go up as much as 10 cents a pound. The housewife's going to tell us. If she buys, the beef will move right along and the price will go up. If she resists, it's going to stay down..."

Consumer resistance to high prices of pork and poultry, freed from most controls in July, has been credited with bringing down the cost of things like bacon, eggs and chicken. An Associated Press marketbasket survey earlier this month found retail prices declined between the middle of August and the beginning of September, although they averaged seven per cent higher than they were six months ago.

A spokesman for Armour & Co. agreed that a lot depends on the consumer. But he added: "It depends on farmers too. They may try to hold out or may decide they'd better sell...What we're really saying is that we don't know what's going to happen."

Monday marks the first time in more than five months that beef prices will be free of regulations that will allow producers, processors and retailers to pass on to the consumer increases in nonagricultural costs.

Dr. Herbert Stein, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, predicted that beef prices would stay about the same for a while, but might increase with the onset of colder weather which traditionally brings a boost in the demand for red meat.

Richard E. Lyng, a former Agriculture Department official who will take over in November as president of the American Meat Institute, said, "We may see an increase in beef prices, but we don't expect to see anything like the pork situation."

The first ceilings, on beef, lamb and pork, were announced in the beginning of April. In June, a 60-day freeze on all prices was imposed.

On July 18, President Nixon lifted the freeze on all foods except beef to allow prices to rise to reflect increased farm costs.

The beef freeze was to remain in effect until midnight Tuesday, but was lifted two days early, partly to head off possible shortages that could have developed because of last-minute buying by consumers hoping to beat the price rise.

Congress Awaits Nixon Message

By EDMOND Le BRETON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Congress, ruffled by President Nixon's criticism of its record, receives today the chief executive's special message spelling out what he wants Congress to do for the rest of the year.

Nixon is expected to make some conciliatory gestures in his special message. In a radio talk Sunday, he avoided partisan rhetoric in asking the legislative branch to join the executive in passing legislation.

But his statement last week that he was disappointed in Congress' performance touched off an angry reaction by the majority Democrats.

A new measure of the temperature of executive-legislative relations will be taken Wednesday when the House votes on overriding Nixon's veto of an emergency medical services bill that would have blocked administration plans to close eight public service hospitals.

The Senate voted Aug. 2 to override, but it appeared doubtful the necessary two-thirds vote could be mustered in the House.

Both chambers will debate during the week their versions of legislation to help urban mass transit systems.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee resumes Monday its hearings on the confirmation of Henry A. Kissinger to be secretary of state.

The House begins the week by considering whether to cite G. Gordon Liddy, convicted Watergate figure, for contempt because of his refusal to testify before an Armed Forces investigation subcommittee.

On Tuesday it is scheduled to take up compromise State Department spending authorizations.

The bill contains provisions to require nominees for ambassador to disclose contributions they made to presidential campaigns and to cut off funds from the department and related agencies if they refuse to give information requested by Congress.

The Senate considers Monday the nomination of Russell E. Train to be administrator of the Envrionmental Protection Agency.

Nixon had Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield of MOntana as his breakfast guest Friday. Mansfield said afterward Nixon had denied any intention of criticizing Congress' over-all record, but only its handling of some of his specific requests.

Baker, Reagan, Connally Rise

Agnew's Prospects For '76 Drop

By CARL P. LEUBSDORF
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) Republican party leaders meeting for the first time since the Watergate scandal erupted see a sharp drop in Vice President Spiro T. Agnew's presidential prospects and an upsurge of interest in Sen. Howard Baker, Gov. Ronald Reagan and former Treasury Secretary John Connally.

To a lesser extent, according to an Associated Press survey of GOP National Committee members and state chairmen, gains also were registered for Sen. Charles Percy, and New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockerfeller.

The GOP leaders were polled as Republican state chairmen opened a three-day meeting Sunday. The Republican National Committee meets Monday for the first time since President Nixon's inaugural in January. A new party reform group convenes Tuesday.

More than half of the 70 GOP officials from 37 states responding to the AP survey said the disclosure that Agnew faces possible criminal charges in Maryland has hurt his 1976 presidential chances.

Some thought Agnew could come out "smelling like a rose," as Committeeman Creighton Holden of Michigan put it.

But others felt his chances would be hurt, regardless of the outcome.

Committeewoman Orriette Sinclair of Idaho said the investigation will damage Agnew "even if the charges are never proved."

Baker, the 47-year-old Tennessee senator who is the ranking GOP member of the Senate Watergate Committee was clearly the biggest gainer because of Watergate, according to the survey. Twenty members said he had been helped. Only two thought his role had damaged him.

"There's no question that Baker has been helped tremendously," said Lousiana Republican chairman James Royce. "And he's been a popular figure in Republican circles for some time."

Eleven members each said that Reagan and Connally had been helped.

Some tied Reagan's rise directly to Agnew's decline, while two said Connally might be injured by his close association with President Nixon.

However, Kentucky GOP chairman Charles Coy said "I think Connally will be the greatest beneficiary," adding that Nixon's reference to the former Texas governor at last week's news conference "didn't hurt him."

Referring to Connally's conversion from the Democratic party at the height of the Watergate revelations, Montana GOP chairman Kenneth Neill said "it will help Connally because he boarded the ship during a difficult time for the party."

"Reagan might be helped if Agnew is hurt," said Oklahoma Republican Chairman Clarence Warner. Florida Chairman L. E. Tommy Thomas said the California governor has been especially helped because "there has been no taint of political hanky-panky in his administration."

UAW Strike Possible

By DOUG CALDWELL
Associated Press Writer

DETROIT (AP) - The president of the United Auto Workers charged Sunday that Ford and General Motors were presuring Chrysler Corp. in the current contract negotiations on key union demands. He said chances of avoiding an auto industry strike were "less hopeful."

Leonard E. Woodcock, appearing at a news conference Sunday, charged that Chrysler had been "very unresponsive and even regressive in two or three areas."

Woodcock's news conference came less than a week before the UAW's strike deadline against Chrysler and as union negotiators painted a bleak picture of progress being made in the talks.

He spoke after several hours of subcommittee meetings between negotiators in the auto industry contract talks.

Both sides have imposed a news blackout on this weekend's negotiations, but it was believed there was little progress on key union demands. Among them are voluntary overtime, retirement after 30 years' service at $650 a month, revisions in the cost of living formula and a boost in a provision which limits annual wage increases to three per cent.

Attacks Renewed On Kompong Cham

By DENIS GRAY
Associated Press Writer

(AP)-Insurgents renewed their attacks Sunday on Kompong Cham, thrusting at two sections of the government defense perimeter around the northern half of the city, diplomatic sources reported.

The sources said Communist-led rebel gunners pounded government positions with more than 100 pounds of artillery fire to end a day-long lull, but were beaten back when they attempted ground assaults.

Casualty figures were not available. The city, Cambodia's third largest, has been under heavy rebel attack for about three weeks.

The diplomatic sources said house-to-house fighting continued one block from the market place and that it was often difficult for soldiers on both sides to distinguish between the enemy and their own troops.

Latest reports indicate insurgents control the southern half of Kompong Cham, while government troops have thrown a perimeter around the northern half.

Government reinforcements continued to move out of Phnom Penh to strengthen the Kompong Cham garrison. The besieged city is being resupplied by boats going up the Mekong, by helicopters and by air drops.

Field reports and a Cambodian forward artillery observer said an encircled government company on Highway 4 about 17 miles west of Phnom Penh attempted a breakthrough after running out of food but failed. Reports said about 50 of the 120-man unit were missing.

Government advances from the west and east have tried to link up on Highway 4. But they have been stalled for eight days by insurgents in bunkers.

IMF Predicts Hike In World Inflation

By BILL NEIKIRK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The International Monetary Fund drew a grim picture of world inflation Sunday, saying economic conditions in industrial nations point to rapidly rising prices this year and next.

The organization said the Nixon administration faces "an exceptionally difficult task of guiding the U.S. economy back to its potential growth path, avoiding either overheating or recession."

The fund, as it is known in financial circles, said in its annual report the major world economies are booming and will continue to do so in 1974, making it difficult to arrest the inflationary spiral.

It urged its 126 member nations, and especially the industrial economics, "to give this problem a very high priority in the formulation and conduct of economic policies."

"The paramount considerations, of course, are that high rates of inflation impair economic performance and create economic and social inequities, currently affecting populations throughout the world," the fund said.

The report said prices in the United States, Europe, Canada and Japan rose 6 per cent from the second half of 1972 to the first half of this year. Combined, these economies grew by 7 per cent in the same period, it said.

Nations now face the challenge of slowing down economic growth without triggering a recession, the fund said.

Nixon Asks Congress for Cooperation

By FRANK CORMIER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Avoiding partisan rhetoric, President Nixon called Sunday for cooperation between Congress and the White House in "turning the blessings of peace into a better life for all."

In a taped radio address, Nixon said more than 50 major bills backed by the administration still await final congressional action.

While avoiding a repetition of his Wednesday news conference statement that this represented "a very disappointing record" for the Democratic-controlled Congress, Nixon did say:

"It means that Congress should join the executive in making up for the precious time lost this year in failing to act on those measures which vitally affect every American by going into extra session, if necessary, to complete the people's business before the year ends."

Nixon will send the Senate and House a lengthy special State of the Union message Monday expanding on his call for legislative action.

BU May Reinstate ROTC

BOSTON (AP) — Boston University, which phased out Army and Air Force Rotc in 1969 during the height of antiwar sentiment, has begun talking to the military about the possibility of bringing it back.

BU President John R. Silber opened the discussions after a survey showed that 75 per cent of the faculty favored reinstating the military officer training program.

"We do not compromise our responsibilities by proving an opportunity for students to qualify themselves for leadership in defense of their country and its Consitution," Silber said.

Boston University was the site of repeated antiwar demonstrations during the late 1960's.

Turkey's Opium Political Issue

By EMEL ANIL
Associated Press Writer

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — Turkey's ban on opium production is becoming an issue in the campaign for the Oct. 14 general election. All three major parties intend to mention the possibility of lifting it in their platforms, sources said Sunday.

Former Premier Suleyman Demirel, chairman of the conservative Justice party, which has a good chance of returning to power in October, has implied that his party will point out at least the need for a review of Turkey's opium policy.

The Democratic Socialist Republican People's party, the second largest political organization, has already announced it will consider resumption of poppy cultivation providing there are "sufficient controls to eliminate international concern."

The centrist Republican Reliance party is also expected to come out against the ban.

Turkey banned opium cultivation in June 1971 under heavy pressure from the United States, which claimed that 80 per cent of the heroin reaching U.S. addicts originated in Turkish poppy fields.

Woman POW Survives Torture

By DANIELLE FLOOD
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - A German nurse who survived four years of North Vietnamese captivity recalled Sunday how she whiled away her hours in a wooden hut with dreams of building schools and hospitals.

Monica Schwinn, 31 of Lebach, West Germany, was a member of the Maltese Aid Service and went to Vietnam to give medical help to persons on both sides of the conflict. During her imprisonment she watched three of her medical comrades starve to death.

Miss Schwinn, West German and American officials say, is the only woman known to have emerged alive from North Vietnamese imprisonment.

She was interviewed during a stopover here on her way home from rest and rehabilitation in Pennsylvania.

"The most difficult thing was having nothing to do as I lay on a wooden bench in a hut, alone for three years, and being told I had committed crimes against the Vietnamese people."

She dreamed, she said, of building houses - first small ones, then large ones, then schools, then hospitals.

"I dreamt of utilizing space in the best ways," she said, "and I was very happy in these dreams. But when I woke up, it was painful."

Miss Schwinn also said the North Vietnamese resented the fact that she was a woman and struck her while on a forced march to the north.

"During the march, a North Vietnamese officer beat me twice until I was unconscious - because I was a woman.

"An even worse time was when we were in a hospital hut on the Ho Chi Minh trail. I had collapsed from the walking and the officer threw a bamboo broom at me and told me to sweep the hut. I think I made him lose face in front of the two other Vietnamese taking us north because I said no.

"I was angry about his action and I told him he shouldn't pray the big shot, in German. So he came up to me and put a revolver to my head, but I did not show fear, so he just beat me all over my body - wherever he could reach."

Her ordeal began when she and four colleagues were taken prisoner April 27, 1969, while on their way to a village near the Maltese hospital.

She said the five were kept in a Viet Cong prison camp, mostly made up of small huts, where three of her comrades, two of them women, died of starvation within three months.

Inouye: Tapes Not Essential

WASHINGTON (AP)-Sen. Daniel K. Inouye, a member of the Senate Watergate committee, said Sunday the controversial White House tape recordings of President Nixon's conversations are not essential to the committee's investigation.

Inouye said the committee could write its report on the Watergate case and related developments without the material.

The tapes are being sought by both the committee and special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox.

Nixon has refused to turn them over voluntarily. The tapes contain recordings of the President made from taps on his telephone and other electronic equipment installed in his White House office and at Camp David.

U.S. District Court Judge John Sirica has ordered that the tapes be turned over to him to listen to in private. His ruling is being appealed.

Inouye said the committee did not have an absolute need for the tapes because it was not conducting a criminal investigation.

"If this were a criminal matter I would say the tapes were absolutely necessary, essential," he said. "In our case I think we can proceed and file an adequate report without the tapes."

The Hawaii Democrat spoke on the NBC television program "Meet the Press."

Stressing that his view of the tapes was "my personal opinion," he said: "In a criminal case it would be absolutely essential the tapes be made available. The committee report can be made. It is not our job to determine the guilt or innocence of anybody."

Kompong Cham; First-Hand Account

By SO-SAKHAN COSTO

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP)

Kompong Cham had turned into a nightmare of gutted homes, corpses in the streets and parents screaming for their children.

What was left of the city's civilian population streamed into boats that might take them across the Mekong River to safety.

Cambodians were fighting Cambodians hand-to-hand in the market place and in the streets of what used to be a peaceful city with palm-shaded boulevards and fancy villas for French plantation owners.

The streets were marred by craters from the artillery shells. Spent cartridges littered the streets and there were soldiers' helmets left on the pavement.

Rounds of mortar, 105mm and 75mm fire pounded the city almost continuously.

The shells were exploding around me when I jumped off a government military helicopter across the river from Kompong Cham. A few men died near me, one cut in two by an exploding round.

I ran for cover. Two rounds of 105mm hit the place where I had taken shelter. They knocked the roof off the building. I could feel some pieces of brick and cement falling on me.

The rebels started to shell again when I took a boat across the river to the city. The boat had to zig zag through the water. We were so frightened that all of us in the boat were quiet, huddled inside and praying.

The area around the market place in the northeastern sector was a key target of the Khmer Rouge. The fighting there was house-to-house. Troops of both sides and civilians were caught in a spray of rifle and machine gun bullets.

Not many of the houses around the market were burning. But the roofs of many had been blown apart by shelling and broken tiles lay on the streets.

I started to take pictures, first of civilian refugees who tried to escape the fighting. I saw parents looking for their children in the streets.

Several soldiers and residents said some of the rebels threw hand grenades and plastic explosives into still-occupied homes and cut throats of the critically wounded at the city hospital.

There were complaints of food shortages and inadequate medical care. Some soldiers said they were too tired to continue fighting. Many wounded soldiers lay on the river banks waiting for boats to make it through the fire and take them to Phnom Penh.

Bath, Maine Hotel Destroyed

Hotel Fire Kills Four

By DAVE SWEARINGEN
Associated Press Writer

BATH, Maine (AP) — Four persons perished early Sunday when a fast-moving fire swept a once-prestigious hotel that had become a haven for area youngsters.

"I am personally satisfied that there is no one else in there," said Fire Chief Norman C. Kenney. "But we have to look, through the Hotel Sedgwick's charred rubble because of reports that others may have died," he said.

Earlier, Kenney reported there was reason to believe additional bodies might be found in the ruins of the rambling, three-story wooden structure. Firemen said the bodies of three men and a woman were found in the debris of the building located in the center of this famed shipbuilding city.

The remains were taken to a Brunswick hospital where autopsies were to be performed later Sunday.

Seven persons were seriously injured when the 30-room hotel turned into a raging inferno.

The names of the dead, reportedly burned beyond recognition, were not immediately available. The injured were hospitalized locally for burns and broken limbs.

Kenney said he had no preliminary finding as to the origin of the fire, but added "it must have been smoldering for some time" to envelope the building so rapidly.

A mobile contractor's crane was called in to clear away debris where the roof collapsed in the center of the structure. Kenney said he then would begin the search for additional victims, and also launch an investigation into the cause of the fire with the assistance of three state fire inspectors.

A couple who fled the building said they found the fire escape adjoining their room didn't function properly, forcing them to drop the last few feet into the arms of passersby. The inspectors said they would pursue that complaint.

Witnesses told officials the fire seemed to erupt spontaneously and turned the three-story converted mansion into a ball of flames.

Firemen said the blaze was discovered smouldering in the lobby area by a hotel employee and erupted as he went to report it.

Susan Wright, 20, said she and her 18-year-old roommate, Debbie Hughes, were asleep in their first floor room when they heard "somebody hollering fire."

"We got up. I went to the window and Debbie opened the door. When you looked down the hall, all you could see were flames," she said.

The girls fled through a rear door and onto a parking lot where they saw a male roomer on the roof crying for help.

They then spotted a young female hotel patron at a window.

"She didn't dare jump or anything" and was one of those who died, Miss Wright said.

The hotel was built 65 years ago by lumber magnate Albert H. Shaw as his home. In the post-depression era 1936, it became this shipbuilding city's leading hotel, later housing sailors during World War II, the Korean conflict and the cold war years.

More recently it had become a boarding-type facility for many local young people.

200 Observe Attica Anniversary

By BEN DEFOREST
Associated Press Writer

ATTICA, N.Y. (AP)- Nearly 200 persons gathered in front of Attica prison Sunday to mark the second anniversary of the nation's bloodiest prison rebellion.

Many in the crowd were relatives and friends of inmates killed in the four days of violence that began Sept. 9, 1971. The insurrection claimed the lives of 32 prisoners and 11 prison employes.

State Assemblyman Arthur O. Eve, a Buffalo Democrat, toured the prison before the memorial service and afterwards told the meeting that some improvements had been made since the revolt. Eve was a member of the observers' committee, and was inside the prison during the rebellion.

He said inmates told him they like the expansion of prison yard recreation time and new opportunities offered for college-level study.

But Eve said prisoners still objected to low pay, in some cases only 30 to 40 cents per day, and to what they termed inadequate vocational training. Poor medical care, intimidation by guards and censorship of mail also were the subject of inmate complaints, he said.

"I've talked to prisoners who came here from Sing Sing and Greenhaven," Eve said. "Attica is still the worst prison in the state."

The hour-long ceremony was held on a lawn in front of the prison's main entrance. No prison authorities attended the observance.

Among the other speakers besides Eve was Mrs. LaVerne Barkley, mother of Elliott Barkley, one of the inmates slain in the revolt.

Nonaligned Conference Ends

Castro Announces Break With Israel

By MICHAEL GOLDSMITH
Associated Press Writer

ALGIERS (AP) — President Houari Boumedienne of Algeria closed the troubled nonaligned summit conference Sunday with a warning that the big powers can no longer take important decisions without backing from the Third World.

Cuba's Fidel Castro, who held the center of the stage through much of the five-day summit, drew prolonged applause from the final plenary session with an announcement that Cuba has broken diplomatic relations with Israel.

Despite Castro's move, the conference was marred for Arab leaders by the kidnapping of four diplomats from the Saudi Arabian Embassy in Paris. Their attention diverted, the Arabs failed to exert the influence they had hoped for among black African, Asian and Latin American nonaligned governments.

But sources at the conference said intra-Arab discussions had led to agreement for reconciliation between King Hussein of Jordan and President Anwar Sadat of Egypt. Their countries cut diplomatic relations in 1972 over Hussein's proposals for Palestinians and Israel-held Jordanian territory.

There was no agreement on a definition of nonalignment, a notion that began in the 1950's with the idea that smaller countries should avoid following the lead of the United States or the Soviet Union and should instead form a Third World of their own.

But the summit did agree on a series of declarations and resolutions on the nonaligned countries' posture in world affairs.

These included a sweeping condemnaton of Israel, criticism of American policy in Indochina and a consensus favoring Third World economic cooperation to combat "Neo-colonialist exploitation."

Ties Trade To "Martydom"

Mills Opposes Nixon Soviet Policy

By JIM ADAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - House Ways and Means Chairman Wilbur Mills, said Sunday he opposes expanded trade with the Soviet Union if as long as the Soviets mistreat dissidents.

"I cannot see the United States expanding commercial markets with the Soviet Union if the price is to be paid in the martyrdom of men of genius like Aleksandr I. Solzhenitsyn and Andrei D. Sakharov," the Arkansas Democrat said in a statement.

Solzhenitsyn is an author. Sakharov is a physicist.

The committee is considering a foreign trade bill in which President Nixon asked the Soviet Union be granted most-favored-nation status. Mills is co-sponsor of a proposal that would grant it only if the Soviets loosened their immigration policy for Jews and other minorities.

"The same principle must apply to all and particularly to those men whose creativity and courage have brought down upon them the wrath of the police state mentality," Mills said.

Acting Chairman Al Ullman, D-Ore., told newsmen this week the committee might write such a most-favored-nation condition into the trade bill or deny the status to the Soviets and China but grant it to smaller Communist countries.

Most-favored-nation status would, in effect, give Communist countries the same tariff privileges the United States grants to its regular western nation trade partners.

Mills has said he believed his and other congressmen's support for demanding freer Soviet immigration policies contributed to the Soviets' recent announcement that more Jews were being permitted to leave that nation.

But he said in the statement that his and other congressmen's insistence is not limited to Jews but to other minorities and men like Solzhenitsyn and Sakharev.

The two men have been under attack in the Soviet press for criticizing the Soviet Union on civil rights issues.

Dear Freshpeople: Stay Fresh!

Dear Freshpeople:

This is a missive of some importance, I think. . .

It has to do with what some people here at UMass can do to the mentality of a person. . .especially the brand new person that comes to this institute of higher (no pun intended) education. There seems to be an almost instantaneous warping of personalities that occurs here, and this can be caused by several factors; among these are:

1) the general political and cultural mood of the country (i.e., "So what if the government is ripping us off? They've always done it, and if I had the power, I'd do it.") The fact is, that during economically stagnant (or depressive) times, lots of people just don't want to take any chances, and there's the illusion that if you leave things alone, this thing that you're leaving alone will inevitably get better. This is a false assumption, and a deadly one, since, if you leave the bastards alone, they'll do it to you all night long, and there will finally come a time (some of us contend that the TIME IS NOW!) when they will be in control, and we'll be eating --it. Again, the problem here, as in almost anything else, is in the abuse of allocated power. Also, it's easier to talk about this kind of situation than to do something about it, because the scale of the operation is so immense.

2) the general concept of the "I'm Okay, You're Okay" mentality which proclaims (quite heartily) that we should forget about all these other things that are bothering us from day-to-day and let's get stoned and drunk (Did you know, freshperson--not that I mean to alarm you--that alcohol kills brain cells, and that brain cells don't regenerate. Think about that the next time you have your head in the toilet bowl. And lest others think themselves superior because they don't drink alcohol, or take drugs, or the like, that an unstimulated mind is a worse curse than a stoned or drunk one. because it's not aware! --THE MAIN thing IS TO BE AWARE, and as open as the skies). The above is not as strange as one may think, but the main gist of people of some repute up here is not to have the person blossom, or to have that person's conception see the full light of time. Rather, on an almost universal level at this college, a lot of folks would be very happy to see you become the computerized android that you are not.

What it breaks down to is: I'm okay and you're okay, just as long as you don't disrupt any of my thoughts. But mental intercourse (mind f--ks, I believe they're called by the mental virgins) is what it all about kids. The give-and-take of life.

DO NOT GIVE IN, give out. . .

Your duty to others is YOUR DUTY to YOU.

Freshpeople, you don't know me, and I don't know you, but take my word for it -- "AIN'T NOTHIN' IMPOSSIBLE!", and if someone tells you otherwise, it is they, and not you who are stoopid.

I'm really not that weird. Honest. Be AWARE and stay FRESH.

The Educational Trap

Editor's note: This paper has been prepared by a foreign student for the express benefit of incoming foreign students. It is an individual's point of view. The Foreign Student Office does not agree with the article not would it print it, the Office believes Haridasan has presented a bleak picture of the American University to the foreign student.

It is in two parts: the first deals with the educational trap, the second, the societal sufferance. It presents the culminations of the experiences of a few students at this University, whose names have been witheld for reasons of publicity.

By N. HARIDASAN

PART I: The Educational Trap

Although every single student may not face the following situations, and although every course and every instructor or faculty member may not be of the kind described herein, nevertheless, there is a high probability that YOU may find:

1. A superfluity of courses outside your special interest field, and a serious lack of (or nonexistense of) courses within that area.

2. A hign degree of noncorrelation of course title & course description as given in the catalog, with the actual course contents as taught in the class. It seems apparent to let the student suffer (by taking a course that from the abovementioned printed material seemed just right for his interests, and sit through the course to learn that the instructor has ideas of his own that he wishes to propogate, and hang the description as given) rather than run the whole gamut of changing the course or instituting a new course.

3. A high degree of noncorrelation between course contents and the examinations given, especially the finals. It is like attending 16 weeks of classes, and studying 16 weeks' notes, and then find that the exam covers only the last class!

4. A high degree of noncorrelation between readings given in the class, and the extent to which they are included in the finals. Most times, never.

5. Correlation of grades given with student's agreement with instructor's ideas and policies and pet fads; not having any relationship (whatsoever) with one's performance in the course.

6. Grades are important. Don't be fooled by what advisors, departments, and the like tell you, even at the graduate level. If one doesn't make the cum grade required by the (graduate) school, then one should be prepared to get a memo of sorts, telling one that if one doesn't show an improvement by the end of the following term, then one should start packing up for a (hasty) exit.

7. In choosing courses, and in facing the lack of suitable ones, you get all the 'freedom' to select; 'freedom' that is in this case misplaced, and courses that are inappropriate.

8. Choosing advisors and members for guidance and advisory committees, ad infinitum, is a hurdle yet to be tackled skillfully and successfully — especially for the student (from overseas or from other parts of the land) who is not familiar with the fads, foibles, fantasies, and freaknesses of the faculty available.

9. Credits can be transferred from earlier study programs. Check details from each department and from the (graduate) is not a thing of the European past as one may imagine them to be. 'Freedom' is 'defined' in 'reality' here as 'the ability of one to make one's presence known (and felt) at the coffee discussions "You laugh when I crack a joke, and you damn Nixon when I damn him" kind of attitude that one meets and smilingly agrees with (when, of corse, his arm is being twisted behind his back through grades, guidance and greed).

10. Slave trading did not go out with President Lincoln and hobnobbing with royalty (for favors)

11. A great deal of this so-called 'freedom' in being urged to see one's instructors and advisors oftentimes. The question is not whether one has anything to discuss or any thoughts to communicate; but more a "I thought I would let you know that I am alive" peek in the door.

12. Unscrupulous and unprincipled instructors who will crucify students who are honest enough and have the courage to stick to their principles. And it is easier to crucify a foreign student, than a "local-yokel".

13. Compromise (with this evil) is the easiest way out — if you don't mind living with the blot the rest of your life. But one wonders, how many in the present geographical location (or, for that matter, in any location) have consciences that would bother them, anyway, all the way?

14. Many are of two minds, with dual standards. In the final count, your principles will be judged, not that of your neighbor.

15. Almost everybody treats you as a number, especially people in places like the (Graduate) School and departments and the memos and grades that flow from there. But numbers cannot respond, have no feelings, don't change, and can't study with aspirations towards education, degrees and careers.

16. The scientific treatment of a subject should be unbiased, unemotional, and nonsubjective. A double standard is then set, because the grades you get are biased, the treatment meted out to you is emotional, and the education (or whatever it is called) you gain is subjective.

With all this as "the rich gain of experience over a period of two years" the student-reader can now make a choice: take it, or leave it. All the aforementioned is only a part of one's education: the curricular part.

Inflation

By KEVIN MACK

Anyone who has purchased anything from food to a new house within the past few years realizes that the economy is in trouble. The economy is suffering from a period of stagnation and inflation (John Kenneth Galbraith calls it "stagflation), which the Keynesian economists believe will subside with greater controls and by tinkering with the money supply. What the Keynesians refuse to see, however, is that we are not experiencing just high unemployment, stagnation, and inflation, but rather the ebb of capitalism as we know it.

Captitalism is, in the simplest terms, the economic system of selling money to make more money. Whatever its drawbacks are on a humanistic level, it has worked in building the economy of this country. But its days are numbered.

Capitalism is a viable system while there is real economic growth, (that is, an increase in production), not simply an increase in the supply of money. In order for the banks and the financiers to make three dollars out of two, there has to be a corresponding dollar's worth of real economic growth. If there is not, then the bank's profit has to be paid for by higher prices -- hence, inflation. You don't have to be a professor to see that, although many professors will try to bullshit us that this simple equation is not true.

The economy of this country is ruled chiefly by the needs of the financial paper empire -- the banks, stock brokers, insurance companies and the real estate speculators. These are people who make their living by speculating on the increased monetary value of goods and services.

Take for example the real estate speculator who buys an apartment with a $100,000 mortgage. After a short time he refinances the property asking the bank to raise the mortgage to $125,000 which the bank does because the speculator has raised the rents accordingly. The speculator makes a quick $25,000 and the tenants have nothing to show for it. The bank has therefore added $25,000 to the money supply with absolutely no increase in production. And people wonder why there is inflation.

I Know How You Feel

By BRIAN FITZGERALD

I entered Goodell library one night last semester with a black box the size of a multi-band radio, the mechanics of which I will explain.

The device had been given to me in the Blue Wall that afternoon by a friend of mine who had a vast knowledge of electronics. He explained his theory as we both hoisted the Schlitz.

"You know" he said, "for every action there is a motive. For instance, if you say you don't believe me, your disbelief is the motive for your saying it to begin with, nothing more. Now anyone's motive for doing something can be found independantly through careful examination of previous and subsequent action. My machine separates the various brainwaves emitted in a room through the use of a directional aerial. Each of these signals sound like cellophane through the earphones before they are fed into the main part of the whole device, an ordinary computer. The computer listens to this electronic 'noise' and mirrors back 'noise' of it's own. If the subject is doing the same thing for long enough, a pattern will appear. Once the machine learns the pattern, it can echo it back simultaneously."

He downed another Powerhouse.

"So when you put on the earphones and direct the antenna at somebody, just listen to the static until you hear a sharp click and then a long smooth tone. This tone is your key as to how that person is feeling. Listen to it for a long time, eventually you will become aware of external feelings on your skin and muscles. These feelings are that other persons. If you meditate on this tone long enough you'll probably go crazy so watch it."

I picked up the machine and took off. A machine that could read minds and be light to carry should have been thought of before this. Communication by simply thinking - what a crowning accomplishment of man's superior intellect.

I went through the front door and found myself on the fifth floor of the library. I went downstairs behind the reserve desk and took a seat in the main study area.

I'm a stranger to most libraries. The only people I ever knew who went to libraries were people who wrote not because they enjoyed it but because it made them feel as if they could act smarter than they really were.

I sat down at a crowded table and set up camp. Spreading books before me, I assumed the guise of a serious student who happened to be listening to a radio with a stereo headset. I put the machine on the floor and turned it on. At first I could detect many differently toned noises much like an orchestra. I selected the strongest tone which was coming from a man seated across from me and aimed the antenna under the table at him. His crackling tone became louder. I touched the Automatic Fine Tuning control blocking off all other signals but his. The machine went to work deciphering the mental code and echoing it's feedback. There was a sharp click - the machine had figured out the code of his actions; it was now able to simulate that code and make some noise itself. Instantly, my head was filled with a rich, wavering vibrato the volume of which contained much too much treble but the bass was however clear.

I slumped into a state of relaxation and followed the line of communication. The tone seemed to pulse and waver as I followed his every feeling. As our minds hummed up and down together, I became aware that I had the ability to merge myself with someone else and yet remain alone by simply turning the damn thing off. I turned the antenna towards a girl sitting behind me. She had her head propped up on her arm as she chewed on a wad of gum.

I began to feel very uneasy. My body seemed to itch all over. I felt completely out of place. Then I realized that it was because she felt out of place. She's sitting there studying what she doesn't want to learn for an exam she doesn't want to take so she can get a job she'll hate.

I began to move around. On the other side of the room was a table with five people, get this, and out of these five people only one of them knew what they were doing. The other four were stumbling around amidst the thick volumes completely in the dark as to why. Enjoyment? Knowledge? Obviously, here, the only one who is gaining anything is the one who is enjoying it.

I walked upstairs to the study cubicles. Here, minds hummed themselves bored through the accumulation of knowledge, the use of which is wasted talking and discussing rather than creating and enjoying.

But how could I tell that to those people? By simply walking up to them and saying, "Excuse me but I've got this machine that tells me how you're feeling and it's telling me that you're not feeling the way you're supposed to."?

This absurdity reminds me somewhat of the way some humans enjoy spreading their religious philosophy.

How Can A Butcher Rule China?

To The Editor:

I would like to respond to an article that appeared in the Collegian on September 7, 1973. That article was concerned with Red China and was written by Bob Estelle.

It was an article written with an abundance of emotion, self-pity and alarm; hardly something which could be classified as an intelligent, rational and true editorial. A classic example of emotion overruling reason; prejudice overruling truth and intelligence.

Bob Estelle, you call Chairman Mao an "overglorified butcher". How can a "butcher" rule China since 1949: 24 years Estelle; years during which China developed into a world power. How did they do it? Following an incompetent "butcher" like sheep marching towards the slaughterhouse? No Estelle, the Chinese have accomplished what they have through sheer determination, enthusiasm and application of the ancient teachings of Confucius, Mencius, Cheng Tsu and Chu Hsi.

The unwritten laws of politics, humanity and morality would never allow a "butcher" to take over 600,000,000 people, control them for 24 years and achieve an economic, cultural and political status such as the status dominant in China today. Look at it this way Estelle: During the 19th century and continuing into the 20th, China was nothing more than an irresistible challenge to the flourishing imperialism of Europe and the U.S.A. Nationalism, pride and unity (look for these words in a dictionary Bob; I do not think you know what they mean) were nonexistant as long as Europe and the U.S.A. had a decision-making power as to who will rule China.

Puppet governments supported by the above mentioned Western powers long suppressed the Chinese people. In 1949, Mao Tse Tung takes over and Western "cultural-economical" dominance is over. China becomes the "new boy in the neighborhood". She has to take all the abuse and harassement from the Western imperialists and at the same time she has to prove that she is capable of defending her territory and her people.

Western propaganda was and is one of the major foes of Communist China. People like you Estelle, are not intelligent and rational enough to assume a double-sided view of issues. You, and the others like you Estelle, are the enemies of not only the Chinese Republic but also of humanity and peaceful coexistence. You seem to forget Estelle, that we just ended (formally anyway) a disastrous affair with the North Vietnamese; an affair which was caused by ignorants and bigots like you.

You have the insolence to recommend still another war; this time over half of the world. Peace for you Estelle will only be accomplished by destroying communism. I think that you are wrong. Peace will be achieved only if man sheds his racism, imperialism and megalomania. People must be educated to pursue virtue and truth instead of the vices which you and unfortunately many others abide by.

Misinterpreted

To The Editor:

I have received a letter an excerpt of which follows from the Chancellor,:

"It is also your right to refuse to register your vehicle or to select a parking lot if you do not wish to bring your vehicle on the campus. But you will surely appreciate that I cannot authorize an exemption for your vehicle from the regulations that apply to every other member of the campus community."

The same indifference and misinterpretation of the situation and legal rights of employees of the Commonwealth was used in answering my letter to him.

I did not refuse to register my vehicle as implied in his answer but I did state that I would not pay any fees to park on the Campus.

Official Hits N.Y. Drug Law

BOSTON (AP) - A Massachusetts health official says New York state's tough new antidrug law is a "regressive, draconian penalty."

Matthew Dumont, assistant commissioner for drug rehabilitation for the Massachusetts Department of Mental Health, called the law outrageous.

"To talk about a life-long parole system, to talk about thousand dollar rewards for turning in a pusher, to recreate the atmosphere of what has a kind of political hysteria attached to it when everyone is acknowledging that we've turned the corner with heroin is absurd," he said Sunday.

Dumont said the nation's most serious drug problem is alcohol.

To assume that "most of our crime in the streets is the result of addiction is to make a very serious mistake," he said.

"It just isn't true, and there's good data to support that."

Averill Appointed

Barry Averill, director of Health Services at UMass, has been appointed by Gov. Francis W. Sargent to the Health Policy Development Group of the State Department of Public Health. The Group will develop and analyze policy regarding issues of health systems regulation.

Eyeworms Spreading

An eyeworm parasite of cattle and horses has been discovered in Massachusetts and is being studied by University of Massachusetts entomologists.

The parasite can cause eye discharge, watering and even blindness in animals but it is highly doubtful that it would be able to infect man, according to Prof. John G. Stoffolano, Jr., the UMass entomologist who discovered it.

A survey of the eyeworm problem is now being conducted throughout the state, he added, and horse and cattle owners are being asked to cooperate with state and local veterinarians to help solve the problem.

A common farm pest, the face fly, acts as the intermediate host for the eyeworm, according to Dr. Stoffolano. Female face flies pick up eggs from the eyes of infected animals, the eggs hatch and the young eyeworms develop in the fly's body cavity. They migrate to the head and leave the fly through its tongue to infect a new vertebrate host.

The UMass entomologist first discovered the parasite in 1970. The finding was reported in the Journal of Parasitology but there was little further concern since only one infected fly was found. Late this past spring, however, 11 more infected flies were found by Geoffrey Branch, an entomology student working with Dr. Stoffolano.

These findings represent the only known records of eyeworms in North America outside of California, where a variety of eyeworm has been reported in cats, dogs and man. "The eyeworm found in Massachusetts may represent a new species but until proper identification there is no certainty of the species," Dr. Stoffolano said. Mrs. May Belle Chitwood, noted nematologist from the California Primate Research Center, is working on the identification of the Massachusetts eyeworm.

Also being studied are host vertebrates. Eyeworms have been reported in dogs, coyotes, cats, camels, rabbits, deer, sheep, horses, donkeys, cattle, buffalo, goats, black bears and man. Dr. Stoffolano feels that in Massachusetts horses and cattle represent the main vertebrate hosts.

He also points out that the symptoms of the pinkeye disease in animals are similar to those of eyeworm infection and believes that many cases of pinkeye in horses and cattle in the U.S. have been misidentified and really represent eyeworm infection.

WHALEY APPOINTED

The appointment of Ross S. Whaley as head of the department of landscape architecture and regional planning has been announced by Arless A. Spielman, dean and director of the College of Food and Natural Resources at UMass.

Professor Whaley is a native of Utah and received his B.S. from the University of Michigan in 1959, his M.S. from Colorado State University in 1961, and his Ph. D. in natural resource economics from the University of Michigan in 1969.

He comes to Massachusetts from Colorado State University where he was associate dean of the College of Forestry and Natural Resources.

In addition to his teaching, research and academic activities, Dr. Whaley has had considerable experience in the field of environmental planning. He was instrumental in designing the master regional transportation plan for the City of Denver and collaborated with Dean Robert Gedd of Princeton University on the environmental planning of a new town in Colorado being developed by the Johns-Mandville Corporation. His consulting work has been with the Public Land Law Review Commission, as well as with architects and regional planners. He is the author of numerous publications.

State Dept. Hits Reports On Viet. Political Prisoners

By HARRISON HUMPHRIES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-The State Department says reports on the number and abuse of political prisoners in South Vietnam are exaggerated.

The U.S. embassy in Saigon estimates that non-communist civilians detained for political dissent may number 500 to 1,000, the department said in a summary prepared by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

Kennedy released the correspondence Saturday with a renewed appeal that the Nixon administration end American financial support for public safety and police programs in Sough Vietnam.

Kennedy heads the Senate Judiciary subcommittee on refugees.

He said the State Department letter, dated Aug. 2 and signed by Assistant Secretary Marshall Wright, indicates intention to continue funding South Vietnam police and prisons.

The United States spent more than $193 million in the past 10 years on Vietnam police and public safety and has budgeted at least $15 million more this year, Kennedy said.

"This is a shameful waste of our foreign aid funds and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of the ceasefire agreements," Kennedy said.

Responding to an earlier Kennedy inquiry, the State Department said allegations of widespread mistreatment of prisoners by the South Vietnamese government "are unsubstantiated."

New Dance Company Performing In Area

Local dance faculty members and students have come together to form a new dance company, called the Five College Moving Company.

The company will begin its first season with concerts Tuesday and Wednesday, September 11 and 12, at the Laboratory Theatre on the Mount Holyoke College campus in South Hadley. These will be followed by performances at Amherst College's Buckley Recital Hall on Tuesday, September 18, and at the Smith College Theatre in Northampton on Friday and Saturday, September 21 and 22. Performances at Mount Holyoke begin at 8:30 P.M., all others begin at 8:00 P.M. Admission is $2.00 for nonstudents, and $1.00 for students.

The company's aim is to bring a greater appreciation of dance to the schools and communities in Western Massachusetts, according to Susan E. Shattuck, a spokeswoman for the group. Ms. Shattuck also said that the Five College Moving Company aims "to preserve some of America's modern dance heritage by the reconstruction of existence works and to encourage local choreographic endeavors."

The company will be available for concerts, lecture demonstrations and master classes at local colleges and universities, secondary & elementary schools, and community and private organizations. Further information is available through the Five College Moving Company, c-o Department of Theatre and Speech, Smith College, Northampton, Massachusetts, 584-2700, ext. 423.

Skylabors Keep Working

By PAUL RECER
AP Aerospace Writer

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) The Skylab 2 astronauts chose work over rest Sunday, performing hours of experiments.

Alan L. Bean, Dr. Owen K. Garriett and Jack R. Lousma had the option of working or resting in their 44th day in space, and they chose to work, giving up even the chance to sleep late.

Bean was up about 6:30 a.m. EDT, operating a solar telescope, and the other two crewmen went to work about an hour later.

"This is what the crew requested," said a space official.

The astronauts took pictures of Italy, Germany and several islands. As the space station passed over a dot of land in the middle of the Atlantic, Lousma told mission control: "We've got our photos of the Ascension Island. It looks like a rather remote outpost down there in the ocean."

Cloudy weather forced cancellation of one of two earth resources photo passes planned for the crew Sunday, and the astronauts performed other experiments instead.

The highlight of the day was the chance to take showers.

The astronauts reported that radiation from a massive solar flare which occurred Thursday is still causing an aurora to flare about the earth's poles.

Maine's Floating Casinos

Ramblin' an' Gamblin'

By DAVE SWEARINGEN
Associated Press Writer

(AP)-A few miles off the coast of Maine, spinning roulette wheels and blackjack tables aboard floating casinos are giving tourists their first taste of legal gambling.

The casino doors open aboard the Lion Ferry Co.'s two cruise ships as soon as they strike international waters on their 10-hour runs between Portland, Maine, and Yartmouth, N.S.

Despite some threats from big city-types to take over the gambling operation, ferry officials say it's kept strictly small time, just for the entertainment of the passemgers.

"There's no pressure here," said Bruce Freeman, casino manager aboard the Prince of Fundy. "It's a lot more relaxed than in a professional casino-just a bunch of people enjoying themselves without going overboard."

Some passengers assume a Las Vegas air when they enter the casinos on the 6,000-ton Prince and her 12,000-ton sister, Bolero. But others are plain bewildered.

"Where do you put the money in this contraption, and do you get any of it back?" asked one elderly gentleman as he stepped up to a slot machine armed with quarters.

"Hey! These instructions look simple enough. Let's give it a whirl," exclaimed a housewife as she read pocket-sized "how to" cards on blackjack and roulette.

Lion officials say most of their casino patrons are amateurs, the stakes are low and the take represents only five per cent of the line's total revenues.

"It's more entertainment than actual gambling, and we aim to keep it that way," said the Prince's purser, Jeff Starling.

The Prince, sailing under a Swedish flag, has one roulette wheel, three blackjack tables and two-dozen slot machines. The Bolero, a Norwegian ship, has three-dozen one-armed bandits and an automated roulette table.

"Our gambling was intended as more of an added entertainment on the ship, as opposed to affording big-time, professional gamblers a junket opportunity," said Freeman, adding that there's a $20 limit on blacjack and roulette bets.

"It was not meant to provide any alternative to Las Vegas," he said.

Freeman supervises a staff of croupiers drawn from ship's personnel. The patrons, he said, "are for the most part people who know nothing about blackjack, roulette or even slot machines."

The betting limit means "nobody can really get involved one way or the other. We haven't really got a big staff for our operation."

Lion officials "aren't really promoting this heavily," he said. "They had to decide what they wanted to be-ferry operators or casino operators. The experience of gambling ships in the Carribean has shown that type of operation doesn't pay off."

The only steady customers noticed by the croupiers are the many truck drivers.

Freeman and other line officials vow they'll never let the gambling overshadow the line's principal business of transportation.

Jurors Examined For Mitchell Trial

NEW YORK (AP) - A panel of 1,500 prospective jurors, the largest in the memory of officials at the U. S. District Court here, has been summoned for the scheduled opening Tuesday of the conspiracy trial of John N. Mitchell and Maurice H. Stans.

Judge Lee P. Gagliardi requested the large panel because, he said, publicity stemming from the former cabinet officers' indictment here and their subsequent testimony before the Senate Watergate committee in Washington may have prejucidec potential jurors.

The search for 12 jurors is expected to take anywhere from three days to a week, perhaps even longer. Usually a federal court jury is chosen in a matter of hours.

In ordinary cases, the number of potential jurors called to serve varies from 40 in an unpublicized case to perhaps 100 or 150 in a publicized case, court officials say.

Talbot Appointed Director Of Libraries

Richard J. Talbot who has been acting director of libraries at UMass has been named director of libraries. The announcement was made by Dr. Robert L. Gluckstern, Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs, who said the appointment came after a national search for a director.

As director of libraries, Mr. Talbot will administer library policy and direct the operation of all libraries in the campus system, including the new 28-story main building, the physical science library in the Graduate Research Center, and the biological science library in Morrill Science Center.

He came to UMass-Amherst in 1970 as associate director for technical services of the library system and was made acting director of libraries earlier this year when Director Merle Boylan vacated the position.

After receiving a bachelor's degree in philosophy from Manhattan College and a master's degree in library science from Simmons College, he spent nine years in government and metropolitan library service.

From 1961 to 1962 he was librarian in the reference department of the New York City Public Library and for the following three years he was cataloger and deputy chief for domestic acquisitions of the CIA Library in Virginia and Washington, D. C.

New Parking Council Coming

Discussion: On WMUA Tonight

Tonight at 10 P.M., WMUA (UMass radio, 91.1 FM) will air a discussion on the growing controversy over the increased parking fees on the University campus.

The program is being presented as a special feature of "Focus," WMUA's weekly public affairs series moderated by Kenneth Mosakowski.

Mosakowski's guests for the live, 60-minute forum will be members of United University Opposition (UCC), a coalition of students, faculty, and professional and non-professional employees at the University.

Listeners are invited to call in questions during the live broadcast.

A newly constituted Parking and Transportation Council will be appointed soon to review the operation of the parking-transportation system at UMass.

The new Council will include representatives of the student, Graduate, and Faculty Senates; the Professional Association; Local 1776, AFL-CIO; and the Massachusetts State Employees Association.

UMass-Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, in a letter to the representative groups, requested recommendations of individuals to serve on the Council. He asked for the names by the end of September.

The Parking and Transportation Council, according to the Chancellor, will be asked to:

1. Analyze the operation of the new parking-transportation program from the points of view of major campus groups;
2. Make recommendations to the Chancellor to improve the parking-transportation system for the spring 1974 semester or for the 1974-75 academic year to make that system more effective and equitable, consistent with environmental and ecological concerns;
3. Call to the Chancellor's attention any patent inequities that should be redressed immediately.

This year UMass put into effect an integrated transportation and parking system designed to reduce campus traffic while improving conditions of safety and environment, and making parking less of a problem. The system anticipates a pedestrian campus and long-range elimination of vehicles in all parking lots in the academic core of campus.

Library Tours

General tours of the new Library will be offered several times a day during the first week of the semester, and later on a weekly basis. Tours start from the entrance lobby at 9:30 a.m., 10:30 a.m., 11:30 a.m., and 1:30 p.m., 2:30 p.m., and 3:30 p.m. Monday through Friday, September 10th through the 14th. All University employees and students will be welcomed.

Tours for those interested in special subject areas or in particular types of library materials can be arranged by appointment. Please call the office of the Public Services Division, 5-0466.

Sports Round-up

FOREST HILLS, N.Y. (AP)-Australia's big John Newcombe ripped through Jan Kodes' miracle, ball-hawking retrieving with sledgehammer power Sunday and defeated Czechoslovakia's Wimbledon titleholder 6-4, 1-6, 4-6, 6-2, 6-3 for the U.S. Open Tennis Championship.

Newcombe climaxed the two-hour, 20-minute battle with a blazing servie ace-his 14th of the match.

It was one of the most brilliant and pulsating matches ever played on the grass at the West Side Tennis Club.

In winning his second American title and restoring himself to a position of world dominance, the Sydney star collected $25,000 first prize, a $3,500 automobile and a large collection of silverware.

AKRON, Ohio (AP)-Tom Weiskopf pulled away from Jack Nicklaus in the stretch drive and scored a three-stroke victory with a final-round 66 Sunday in the World Series of Golf.

Weiskopf, had a two-round total of 137, three under par on the 7,180-yard Firestone course.

He collected $50,000 for this title that-like his British Open triumph-is considered an unofficial event by the Professional Golfers Association.

Nicklaus had a 69 and was tied at 140 with Johnny Miller, who closed with a 67. Each won $11,250. Tommy Aaron, the Masters champion, was never in it. He closed with a 73-149.

COLUMBUS, Ga. (AP)-Struggling Gary Player held off the late charge of young upstart Forrest Fezler to capture the $100,000 Southern Open Golf tournament by one stroke with a 69 for a 270 total.

Player, capturing his initial 1973 tournament, bogeyed the final two holes after Fezler, one group ahead, birdied his final two, cutting Player's huge five-stroke lead after 16 holes.

Four strokes back was Jerry McGee. McGee had a 69 for his 274.

LOS ANGELES (AP)-Joe Ferguson slugged a three-run homer in the sixth inning, rallying Los Angeles to a 5-3 victory over San Diego Sunday. It ended the Dodgers' nine-game losing streak.

CHICAGO (AP)-Billy Williams ripped his 19th home run of the season in the eighth inning Sunday, lifting the Chicago Cubs to a 5-4 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals.

MONTREAL (AP)-New York capitalized on two Montreal errors to score two runs and George Stone, with relief help from Tug McGraw, pitched the Mets to a 3-0 victory Sunday.

Ali Confident He'll Win

By ED SCHUYLER JR.
Associated Press
Sports Writer

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) Muhammad Ali, his career at the crossroads, fights Monday night against Ken Norton, the man who beat Ali and broke his jaw last March.

Ali is a 12-5 favorite to win the scheduled 12-round bout at the Forum and remain an important fighter.

A second straight victory over the former world heavyweight champion would put Norton into boxing's big money neighborhood after years of fighting for nickles and dimes.

Ali weighed 212 pounds, the lightest he's been in several years at the official weigh-in ceremonies Sunday. He weighed 221 when he lost a split 12-round decision to Norton March 31.

Norton scaled 205 compared to 210 for the first fight.

"I plan on fighting champion George Foreman as soon as I can get him," said the 28-year-old Norton who is guaranteed $200,000 against 30 per cent of all income from the closed circuit televised fight scheduled to begin at 10:30 p.m., EDT.

The quietly-confident Californian, who took up boxing in the Marine Corps and turned pro at the age of 22, got $50,000 for the first Ali fight. Before that his biggest purse in a career of 30 victories and just one less was $8,000.

Ali, who got $2.5 million in his loss to Joe Frazier, is guaranteed $275,000 against 35 per cent for the fight, which he said will be no contest.

"This time I'm 100 per cent right," he said. "Same Norton. No Contest."

But Ali, away from crowds of sports writers and onlookers, has talked of losing and said:

"I'd be convinced I was washed up because this time I'm in shape. I beat myself the first time."

ALI VS. NORTON--Muhammad Ali, former heavyweight champ, will be seeking to avenge the beating he took from opponent Ken Norton tonight at the Forum in Inglewood, Calif. It was Norton who broke Ali's jaw last March en route to winning the 12 round bout. (AP Wirephoto)

Norton and his trainer, Eddie Futch, point out that even if Ali is in condition he also is 31 and that his age will force him to come down off his toes and fight Norton's fight.

"Everybody seems to think Ali is superhuman," said Futch. "I think the man has deteriorated in a natural manner. When you are 31 you act like 31."

This will be Ali's 14th fight since he returned to the ring after being banned and stripped of the championship for his refusal to be drafted. It will be his 44th bout in a career that includes 42 victories, 10 of them in fights for one of sports' biggest prizes-the heavyweight championship.

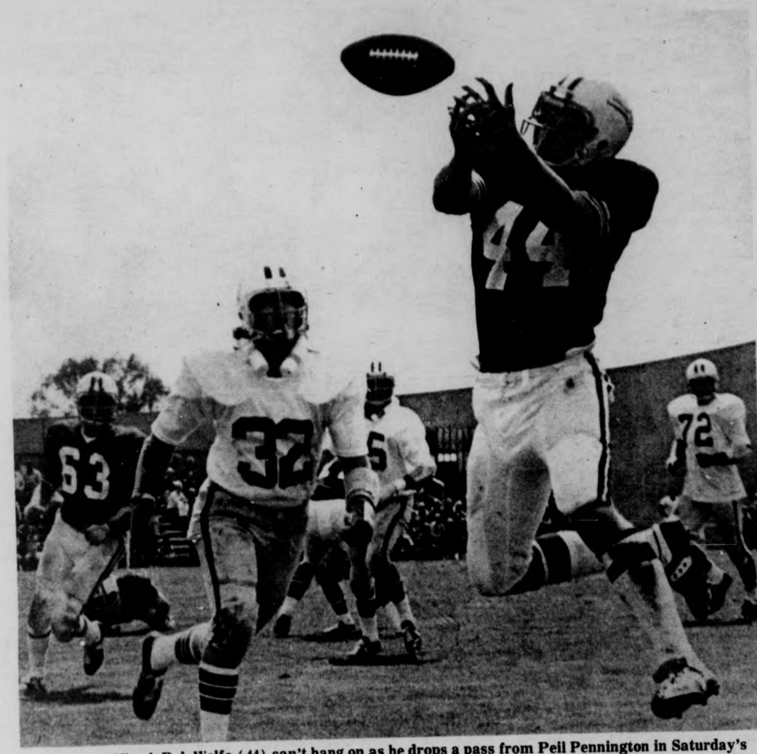
UMass Rally Falls Short; HC Wins



UMass halfback Bob Wolfe (44) can't hang on as he drops a pass from Peil Pennington in Saturday's home-opener against Holy Cross.

By BILL BALLOU

If you went to the game Saturday for a good time, you probably found one.

If you went to see well-played college football, you were probably disappointed.

And if you went to see UMass win, that's too bad.

For the first three minutes and 43 seconds at least, it looked like most of the 18,100 in attendance were going to have a great time watching UMass demolish Holy Cross in fine style, as the Minutemen streaked out to a 13-0 lead.

However, 31 minutes and 58 seconds later the cross had reeled off 30 points, which, despite a miracle fourth quarter comeback by UMass, stood up for the 30-28 win.

The loss overshadowed record-setting performances by flanker Tim Berra, whose 11 receptions broke the previous record of nine held by Milt Morin, Bob Meers, and Steve Schubert, and Peil Pennington, whose 22 completions broke Greg Landry's old record of 20.

If ever there was a day UMass needed record performances from their air attack it was saturday. The non-existent Minuteman running game had only 38 yards to show for their 27 carries and that ineffectiveness, combined with the big Holy Cross lead of most the last three quarters forced Pennington into a must-pass situation on almost every down.

And when he did pass it was with several and varied Holy Cross linemen, linebackers and sometimes safety's on his back or about to board.

The Crusaders really wern't an awful lot better than UMass, although if they hadn't lost the ball on fumbles three times and interceptions twice the score might have been higher.

Quarterback Pete Vaas had himself quite a day with 18-24 and 235 yards and combined his passing with an effective running game to totally confuse the Minuteman defense until the start of the fourth quarter.

Vaas' favorite target was converted defensive end Mark Sheridan, who grabbed nine passes for 129 yards.

For UMass fans used to watching a defense at its best in pressure situations, the way Holy Cross moved at will for most of the game must have been a shock. Although the Crusaders total offense of 365 yards wasn't out of sight of UMass' 307, the Cross at one point converted ten straight third or fourth down situations, and didn't have to punt until about 11 minutes were left in the game.

After UMass had jumped out to a 13-0 lead on touchdown passes from Pennington to Gary Mika and Berra, along with one out of two conversions by Andy Dutkanicz, the Crusaders began their steamroller act.

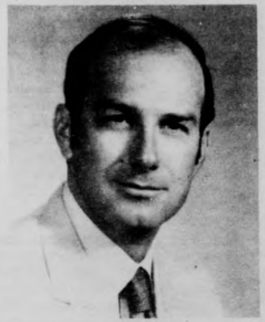
Running back Tom Rock scored on a 6 yard pass from Vaas and on the last play of the first quarter Vaas ran in from the three. Steve Duchanan scored on a 25 yard run and the Holy Cross defense got into the act by dropping Pennington for a safety. Early in the third period Rock caught a nine yard Vaas pass and with Jerry Kelley's four conversions, they had their thirty points.

The fourth quarter UMass comeback that fell short consisted of a four yard pass from Pennington to Berra with a two point conversion and a Pennington bootleg from a yard out.

The Minutemen had a chance to win it with less than two minutes to play, but Dutkanicz missed a 43 yard field goal attempt against the wind and the Cross ran out the clock to end it.

Villanova, next week's opponent at the Stadium, lost to Ole Miss, 24-6, in their opener, while Maine shut out Vermont 14-0 in the first game for both of them.

Al Rufe Named New UMass Soccer Coach



Al Rufe

By STEVE DECOSTA

The UMass soccer team is preparing for its 1973 season under new leadership. Aloysius N. Rufe Jr. has assumed the head coaching position, succeeding Gerry Redmond who has bowed out after one season as head mentor.

The announcement of Rufe's appointment was made on August 10 after it was discovered that Redmond would not be returning to the University this fall. Redmond, a citizen of Great Britain, was working here under a temporary visa and was forced to vacate his position when efforts to obtain a permanent visa or extend the temporary permit proved futile. The former coach has since accepted a position at the University of Alberta.

Rufe is not new to UMass athletics. For the past five years he has been employed here as Financial Manager of Athletics, a position which he will continue to hold.

Rufe's previous coaching experience consists of a one-year stint at the helm of Boston College's first varsity soccer team. As a grad student at BC, Rufe led the rookie Eagles to a respectable 9-4 record.

As an undergraduate at Mount St. Mary's College of Emmitsburg, Md., Rufe was a standout goaltender. In 1964 the new head coach was named to the All Mason-Dixon Converence and Southern All-American soccer teams.

Assisting Rufe with the varsity and acting as JV coach will be another newcomer, Dave Ouellette, who succeeds last year's JV coach and former head mentor Jack Berryman. A former UMass soccer MVP, Ouellette's knowledge with the UMass system and familiarity with returning personnel should prove invaluable in aiding Al Rufe's drive to build a successful soccer program.

Red Sox Lose; Orioles Split

Tigers 5, Red Sox 4

BOSTON (AP) - Tony Taylor knocked in two runs with a homer and sacrifice fly and Ike Brown slugged a two-run homer, leading the Detroit Tigers to a 5-4 victory over the Boston Red Sox Sunday.

Detroit left-hander Mickey Lolich, 14-13, outdueled Boston's John Curtis, 12-13. Lolich needed relief help from John Hiller in the ninth after Bob Montgomery hit a solo home run for the Red Sox' fourth run.

The Tigers took a quick 1-0 lead in the first inning on Taylor's leadoff home run, his fifth of the year.

The Tigers built their lead to 3-0 in the second as Dick Sharon singled, stole second and scored on a single by Aurelio Rodriguez. Taylor got in the second run of the inning with a sacrifice fly.

The Red Sox tallied twice in their half of the second Orlando Cepeda and Danny Cater singled and Montgomery doubled home the lead runner. The second Boston run of the inning scored on Doug Griffin's sacrifice fly.

In the third, the Tigers took a 5-1 advantage when Bill Freehan walked and Brown hit his first home run of the baseball season.

The Red Sox scored their third run on Carl Yastrzemski's double-play bouncer in the eighth.

Hendricks Lost As O's Split

CLEVELAND (AP)- The Baltimore Orioles lost the services of catcher Elred Hendricks for the rest of the season while beating the Cleveland Indians 13-4 for a split of their Sunday doubleheader.

Dave Duncan's three-run homer led the Indians to a 6-4 victory in the opener.

Hendricks suffered a fractured left ankle while sliding home in the fifth inning of the nightcap, when the Orioles broke the game open with six runs.

Boog Powell blasted a three-run homer in the first inning to start Mike Cuellar on the way to his 15th victory.

Bobby Grich knocked in five runs for the Orioles with a triple, double and two singles.

Duncan delivered his 14th homer in the sixth inning of the first game after Walt Williams and rookie Tommy Smith had singled with two out. It wiped out a 4-3 Baltimore margin.

Chris Chambliss also homered for the Indians in the third, and Don Baylor hit his 10th homer for the Orioles in the second.

Aaron Hits No. 709

ATLANTA-Hank Aaron hit his 609th career homerun in Saturday's game vs. Cincinnati. He needs only 6 more to break Babe Ruth's record of 714.

UMass Workers Protest Parking

Work Stoppages Threatened

After waiting for over one hour in front of the Whitmore Administration Building yesterday, a dwindling crowd of several hundred University employees and students hashed over the recent parking controversy with Chancellor Randolph Bromery.

By MDC STAFF

(MDC reporters Joan Fassnacht, Cindy Gonet, Sharon Hughes, Bob Scheier, Steve Tripoli, and David Sparling contributed to coverage of Monday's parking situation.)

UMass is faced this morning with the threat of work stoppages by members of two employee unions protesting the new parking system being implemented this fall.

Individual members of the unions yesterday predicted both work stoppages and picket lines set up around campus if the new parking system was not abolished.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said last night that he has "no intention" of abolishing the new parking system with the old one.

The threats of work stoppages, by members of local 1776 of the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employes, AFL*CIO, and the Mass. State Employes Assoc. came despite a no strike clause in the employes' contracts.

The unions represent dining commons, physical plant, ground, and other workers. Members of the two unions said they also had commitments from the Teamsters Union, and unions representing construction workers on campus to honor the picket lines.

The stoppages were not authorized by the union, the members said.

Bromery said last night he would not comment on action he might take regarding a work stoppage. "I don't respond to rumors," he said, "and all I've heard so far is rumors."

He also said the union should try to correct alleged inequities in the parking plan through a new Parking and Transportation Council in the process of being formed

Opponents to the plan, under which most students and employes pay higher parking fees, claim the university did not consult adequately with the university community before implementing the plan, and that employes should not have to pay to park on campus.

After the noon rally held yesterday on the steps of the Student Union, the protesters marched to Whitmore Administration Building. The doors to the main entrance were then locked by guards as the marchers arrived.

A Collegian reporter entered the building and spoke to the Campus Security Guard, Saul Chafin. He offered no comment on who locked the doors or who ordered the doors to be locked

The crowd waited patiently in the hot afternoon sun from one o'clock until just after two, when Chancellor Bromery appeared at the locked doors. As chants of "We want Bromery" filled the air, Bromery came out and fielded questions from the hostile crowd.

The questions centered around the inequities in the new parking proposal. Some members of the crowd contended that they should not be required to pay to park to work here. In response, Bromery said, "I suggest that you pay the $5.00, park in peripheral lots and be bussed to campus."

It was argued back that due to long waits for the buses, and irregular schedules, many workers were late for their jobs and were docked in pay.

One member of the local union 1776 asked Bromery who authorized him to take employee's money and put it into an experimental project.

Said Bromery, "The State authorized the Board of Trustees who in turn authorized me."

Bromery also said he and the University's lawyers would be willing to go to court with the Union to test the legality of their action.

Members of the crowd next contended that there were plenty of parking spaces on campus and demanded that the new parking fees be dropped.

Bromery replied that there were plenty of parking spaces because of the new parking proposal. "Already this semester we have Cornography: Is It Legal?

By MIKE KNEELAND

University researchers are preparing to launch a device in a balloon which will take readings of the sun's coronograph.

Dr. John D. Strong, a recognized infra-red research scholar, designed the Infra Red Coronograph, as it is called, with William Dalton and Tachun Li. All three men are associated with the University's Physics-Astronomy Dept.

Valued at more than 1/2 million dollars, the coronograph is the only one of its kind in the world. It was designed to "make observations of the solar corona at the infra-red wavelength," said graduate student Raymond Smartt, who is working towards his doctorate.

Smartt said the balloon will carry the coronograph to an altitude of 20 miles. Once outside the earth's atmosphere, the coronograph creates an artificial eclipse and is able to observe the corona's infra-red wavelengths, which do not normally penetrate the earth's atmosphere.

The coronograph project is being completely funded by NASA's Solar Physics Division.

Debutante In Bluejeans

SIS! BOOM!BA!

By MICHAEL UGOLINI

Author and cult hero Tom Wolfe spoke last night to a full house in the Student Union Ballroom on the subject of "Class Warfare Among American Youth".

Wolfe's visit was presented as a part of the Distinguished Visitors Program.

He started his lecture by calling the seventies "the age of the debutante in bluejeans". He spoke of how in the older days debutantes of any small town could be seen and read about in the fashion section of the local paper and how now they are spending time as part-time social workers who insist that there is a common bond between them and the disadvantaged classes.

Remember the days when people were either "hip" or were called "greasers"? Wolfe made the point that the parents of the greasers were usually from the so-called working class of manual laborers while the parents of the "hip crowd" were usually associated with the Great Middle Class.

So within the complexities of these relationships lies the great struggle and subtle resentment between the "greasers" and the "surfers" (or in some circles those that are "collegiate" vs. those that are not).

Although the manifestations of the class struggle are not so apparent at a first glance, Wolfe says that one only need examine the make-up of the so-called Silent Majority to see where all those greasers of the fifties and sixties have wound up.

Tom Wolfe spoke last night before a full capacity audience in the S.U.B. in the first of the DVP lecture series.

Wolfe pointed out that after the hardhats beat on the hippies several years back, they later went to city hall and burned John Lindsay in effigy. The figure they burned was made with a mop as the hair and resembled the haircut of a normal dissident college youth. Somehow the hardhats, whether consciously or not, associated Lindsay with the "hippies".

Wolfe says that the hardhats were actually rebelling against a kind of person; one that is educated; one that is called an "intellectual". This then, is the main crux of blue collar conservatism.

Wolfe submitted that given this situation that were one of three ways you could go:

1) You could keep telling yourself that your no different from the other class and insist on devoting your time to helping them.

2) You could join a commune and completely disappear from the class scene.

3) You could take what you have under your arm and "run for cover".

When asked what path he had taken he replied that he hadn't taken any of them but that one day he would be forced to make a choice.

Tom Wolfe received a Ph.D. in American Studies at Yale University. He has worked as a reporter for the Springfield Union, Washington Post, and the New York Herald Tribune. He has also written extensively for Esquire, New York, Harper's Bazaar, and Rolling Stone. His works include The Electric Kool-Aid Acid Test, The Pump House Gang, The Kandy Kolored Tangerine Flake Streamline Baby, Radical Chic and Mau Mauing the Flake Catchers, and The New Journalism.

Goodell—Home To Many

By GREG VONER

The once-upon-a-time host of the UMass library will in the future be used as office and class space. The University Planning Office has requested several million dollars from the state for the renovation of various campus buildings, of which Goodell is included.

Until then, the old building will be tenanted by an assortment of occupants for the next 18-20 months. The 6th level has been given up for classroom space while the 5th will house Communications Disorders, the Speech Department, Audio-Visual Aids, and Everywoman's Center.

Purchasing and Accounting of the Bursar's office has taken charge of the 4th level and BDIC (bachelor's degree with individual concentration) will also be moving in by early October. The 3rd level will be taken up by maintenance and storage, along with the 1st and 2nd floors. These occupants are only temporarily quartered in the building, and with the advent of the renovation, will have to pack their bags and leave for other spaces on campus.

What Evil Lurks At WMUA?

By MARY BETH SANTARELLI

Starting in late September, WMUA will be presenting the popular midnight mystery serial, "Fourth Tower Inverness", again this year. Unlike radio shows of the thirties, such as "The Shadow", "Fourth Tower" deals with the experiences of a man who explores the universe throuh another dimension of the mind.

The eight minute broadcasts will be aired Monday through Friday at midnight. A summary of the week's action will be presented on Sundays at ten o'clock. A sequel, "Moon Over Morrocco", is scheduled for the second semester.

Plans have also been made to run the record "Bab Ram Das" in a series. Bab Ram Das, (formerly Richard Alpert), was one of the first to participate in experiments with Timothy Leary using LSD. Alpert grew disillusioned with Leary and drugs, so journeyed to India. The record contains his basic philosophy of life now as well as some Indian chantings and readings.

WMUA's regular presentations are a change of pace since they contain no commercials.

In a recent interview, Station Manager Laredo Horton explained that WMUA was trying to offer as "wide a spectrum as we possibly can". One of the station's main goals was to "turn people on to music", as well as "educate people to different types of music". Therefore, WMUA does not play strictly rock, but tries to achieve a balance between jazz, classical, folk, rock, country, and blues.

Horton wished to emphasize that "any student interested in radio at all" is welcome to drop by the station. WMUA will announce a meeting within the week for members and officers.

WMUA

WMUA will be holding its September Station Meeting on Thursday, Sept. 13 at 8:00 p.m. in CC Rm. 804-808. All WMUA personel should attend, and all students interested in working with WMUA are cordially invited to be present.

WMPIRG

A Summer Well Spent

By JOHN F. WARREN

W.M.P.I.R.G. (Western Mass. Public Interest Research Group), the local representative of the Nader-inspired, professionally staffed P.I.R.G.s which have grown in 19 states over the past two years, has had an active summer of involvement in areas of environmental and social concern.

A W.M.P.I.R.G. study last June documented the need for the establishment of a United States District Court to serve the residents of Western Massachusetts. The study pointed out that all six Massachusetts Federal judges currently sit in Boston. W.M.P.I.R.G. researchers found that residents of the state's four western counties facing court action, must choose between a wait of several years in overcrowded State Superior courts, or suffer the considerable additional expense of taking a case to the federal court in Boston. The latter often meant paying from two to six times what the cost would be to a Boston resident.

In July, the group charged that the Bureau of Air Quality Control of the State Department of Public Health agreed privately with the Federal Environmental Protection Agency to use and enforce only the federal plan to reduce carbon monoxide emissions from cars in Springfield. This plan does not meet the stricter state requirements. The state regulation would call for a reduction of the carbon monoxide level to a 7% rate lower than the federal limit. The level of pollution from carbon monoxide in downtown Springfield occasionally has been more than two times highter than federal limit.

The group was involved in a legal fight against the granting of exemptions to a ban on sewer connections in Amherst. These connections could have lead to further pollution of the Connecticut River.

W.M.P.I.R.G. considers its successful pursuit of a lawsuit concerning the construction of Route 7 in Vermont to be an especially significant victory. In this case, the group was part of the "Coalition on Route 7", composed of three national and eight regional conservation groups. Early in the year, the group sparked controversy by charging that federal and state highway authorities had engaged in a "conspiracy" to construct a new four-lane Route 7 through Vermont, Massachusetts, and Connecticut. They then joined a suit which had been launched by the Conservation Society of Southern Vermont and other plaintiffs against state and federal officials.

In July, the Federal District Court in Brattleboro, Vt. handed down a landmark decision that indefinitely delayed construction plans for a $500 million 20-mile extension of the highway in Vermont. Barring successful appeal by the Federal Department of Transportation and the Vermont Highway Department, the decision will require the filing of an adequate Environmental Impact Statement (E.I.S.), a statement called for by the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969. Appeals Court Judge James L. Oakes, who issued the 27-page opinion, also questioned the objectivity of the EIS in general, since it is prepared by the Federal Highway Administration, an agency which derives its funds from highway tax money and which is committed to the development of highway plans and programs.

Workers Protest Parking System

7,000 fewer cars on campus."

Bromery also announced his intention to close down core parking lots as soon as he gets the funds to do so.

Another person asked Bromery if he could guarantee to University members that the fees will not increase next semester.

Said Bromery, "I cannot guarantee that."

This statement was met with booed and hissed from the protesters.

At three o'clock, representatives from the State Labor Relations Commission from Boston arrived for a hearing which was to take place between one commission and members from the local 1776.

However, it was announced by Ms. Carol Drew, president of local 1776, that the meeting scheduled between her union and the Labor Relations Commission had been cancelled by the Board of Trustees because they did not feel that they had been properly informed.

Said a spokesman of the Labor Relations Commission, "I am disappointed that the hearing has been called off today. I do not believe that what the University is doing is legal (requiring employees to pay a fee to park here)."

He then added, "We are available to enter into discussions with Chancellor Bromery and his people. We will meet with him in his office this afternoon, if he will."

Chancellor Bromery agreed, and at that time, members from the Labor Relations Committee, the local 1776 union, and Dr. Bromery and his assistants met for closed talks in his office.

During the first recess, Michael Botelho, Administrative Assistant to the President, said, "We're hoping to obviate any misunderstandings. At this point there is no strike."

Carol Drew, president of local union 1776, had no comment.

During the second recess, approximately 2 hours later there were no comments from any of the representatives of the groups involved. At this time, Chancellor Bromery left for the day.

Tim Borenstein, an assistant to the Chancellor, described the meetings. "Thoughout the meeting, the union and the Chancellor presented each other with proposals. The last proposal was presented by Bromery to the union just before the last break and the union discussed it, came back to the Chancellor's office, and rejected it immediately.

As far as Borenstein is concerned, the parking fees remain as they were before the rally was held yesterday afternoon.

While the rally was continuing at Whitmore, an employe at the Worcester Dining Commons Kitchen said, "Some workers are planning to go to the rally", but they didn't know anything about Whitmore being closed up. There's talk about "something" going on tomorrow.

In Southwest, an employe of Hampshire Dining Commons said, "Everything seems to be running quite smoothly." They were then serving lunches without any interruptions.

Mr. Burke, an official of the Physical Plant said that about "95 per cent of the union members are with the 1776." Although he didn't know exactly what per cent of employees were over at Whitmore, he said, "We're missing some of our employees, some of the supervisors. . ."

That Personal Touch Will Limit "Hot Bikes"

By AVIS YUNI

A free bicycle registration for students will be started in October, Diana White of the UMass Security (Police) Department told the Collegian yesterday.

On specific days in October, tables will be set up around campus, Ms. White said. Students will be able to bring their bicycles to the table, have them engraved with their social security number, registered with the department, and will receive a bicycle decal.

Ms. White pointed out that this decal is essential for the department since it acts as a license plate. She said this free bicycle registration will not be compulsory but the police will encourage people to register their bicycles with them.

"There is no ready means of identifying a bicycle," Ms. White said. "However it will be easier to retrieve stolen ones with this decal."

The police department puts out a hot sheet each week of stolen bicycles. If they have the decals it will be easier to identify them since the decal numbers could be seen by cruising patrol cars easily.

Last year an engraving program was made available to students. They were able to put their social security number on valuable items so that when stolen, identification would be easier.

In the future Heads of Residence will be contacted to run the engraving program in the dorms, stated Ms. White. In addition, students can come down now to the station and borrow an engraver for 24 hours.

When bicycles were just engraved, they had to be turned upside down for the number to be seen. This made it very difficult to check for stolen bicycles, Ms. White said.

She also mentioned that the police department will put out a booklet on bicycle locks and how to keep bicycles from getting stolen.

The registration will start when the department receives the decals, which are expected to arrive in several weeks.

If the college community consents, police officers may begin to spot check the public areas of dorms in an attempt to remove those people living in the lounges who do not know anyone in the dorm.

People's Market Back Again

By DENNY MATTEAU

The People's Market, a non profit student food co-op, is presently preparing to open for its second semester in the Student Union. Cal Ferrino and Mark Treanor, co-ordinators of the market, said yesterday that they should have the market open by next Tuesday, September 17.

The market deals in fresh garden produce, grains or cereals, dairy products, and some health foods.

"We'll try to expand our health and organics department because so many people around here are into that. Basically, though, we try to keep everything as cheap as possible. If something goes up 2 cents, that will show in our prices, but when the cost is too high we don't buy," said Ms. Ferrino.

Mark Treanor explained that the co-op is able to keep going "because the University buys in huge quantities and they allow us to order with them.

The People's Market started last year with a loan of $4,000 from the Commuters' Assembly. According to Ms. Ferrino, "The loan has been indefinitely extended so that it is, in effect, a grant. We won't have to pay it back unless we go bankrupt, in which case the Commuters' Assembly would get our equipment, such as the refrigerators, cash registers and calculators."

Beef Controls Lifted, Price Rise Small

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Beef prices were freed from controls Monday for the first time in nearly half a year, but shoppers found there was little if any change at the supermarket counter.

Consumers and cattlemen alike seemed to be playing a waiting game, each trying to figure out what the other would do.

"Everybody in the beef industry is...playing it cool to see what's going to happen," said Gilbert Fourmigue, president of Econo-Meats, a New Orleans La., wholesaler. "It's all up to the housewife. If they keep buying like they have been, the price will stay the same or go higher. There's plenty of beef available. The cattle have to come to market.. but I don't think the feedlot boys are going to flood the market."

Gary Rush, the meat manager for a Big Star grocery in Memphis, Tenn., said, "People haven't been buying much beef for a long time now. And I think they'll buy even less when the prices go up. If that happens, it's just natural that the law of supply and demand will take over and prices will go down."

"We don't expect a price hike on beef for at least a week," said a spokesman for Wrigley's supermarkets in Detroit.

Many cattlemen withheld livestock from market during the freeze, wating for higher prices later. This created temporary shortages.

At the same time, consumers rebelled at the high prices of other items-particularly pork and poultry-and refused to buy. The prices came down again.

Supermarket managers said they were waiting to see what their suppliers would charge, not only for beef, but also for other foods which, started Monday, will be allowed to increase in price to reflect costs increases.

Beef prices have been under a ceiling since the beginning of April. Controls on other foods were lifted July 18 to allow prices increases in agricultural costs, but the beef limit was scheduled to remain until Wednesday in accordance with the Phase 4 economic program. The government lifted the ceiling at midnight Sunday, however, partly to avoid shortages caused by last-minute buying.

An Associated Press spot check of beef prices on Monday compared with prices on Sept. 1 showed virtually no change. Only a few items went up and they generally remained at or below previous ceiling prices.

At the National Stockyeards in Illinois, trading in slaughter steers was reported "only fairly active" and trading in slaughter heifers was slow. Prices for steers and heifers were down slightly.

Texas meat men said the situation would remain confused until Wednesday or Thursday at the earliest.

L.R. Robertson, owner of a meat market in Amarillo, Tex., said he was dropping the price of all his beef by 10 cents a pound for the next two weeks. After that, he said, he doesn't know what he'll do.

Steel Price Rise Granted

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Cost of Living Council announced approval Monday of an approximately $4.50-per-ton increase in the price of flat rolled steel products used in a broad range of consumer items from household appliances to automobiles.

Under Phase 4 rules, the increase can be passed on to consumers on a dollar-for-dollar basis. The council action, effective Oct. 1, thus could have an eventual effect in prices at the retail level.

The increase is about one-half of the raise 10 major steel companies had asked the council to approve under the administration's new Phase 4 anti-inflation program.

Council director John T. Dunlop said the companies would be allowed to increase prices by about another $4.50 next Jan. 1.

He said the prices increases on rolled sheet steel, which is used in production of such consumer items as househole appliances and automobiles, were justified under the Phase 4 rules.

But he said: "The proposed price increases are being modified because they are of such magnitude and would have such an impact on the economy as to be unreasonably inconsistent with the goals of the economic stabilization program."

X-rays Said More Dangerous Than Atomic Plants

By FRANK CAREY
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Excessive use of diagnostic X-rays and increasing jet travel pose much greater risks of death from cancer than do nuclear power plants, barring major mishap, a nuclear physicist said Monday.

The physicist, Ralph E. Lapp, told an international scientific conference on radiation protection that he estimates:

—Unless it is sharply curbed, "the excessive use of X-rays will mean 50,000 cancer deaths in the United States in the rest of this country."

—Radiation exposure from domestic high-altitude jet travel could mean about 7,200 more cancer-deaths in the same period, and could cause 400 deaths annually by the turn of the century.

These figures compare, he said, with only 90 cancer-deaths he said can be expected in the same period associated with radio-activity released in routine activities of nuclear power plants-unless there are any major accidents.

Lapp urged establishment of national restrictive standards on the diagnostic use of X-rays to cut the diagnostic dose in half by the end of the century.

Lapp, an industrial and congressional consultant on nuclear affairs, offered no estimates of the number of deaths and injuries from a major accident involving a nuclear power plant.

But the Atomic Energy Commission, while asserting the likelihood of such accidents is extremely remote, has said that hundreds of deaths and thousands of injuries could result from a single major mishap.

Lapp also said his estimates on cancer-deaths from X-rays and jet travel compare with 6,800 to be expected from radioactive fallout from past nuclear tests and current French and Communist Chinese tests.

Laird: Action On Issues Vital

By DON McLEOD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - White House counselor Melvin Laird said Monday the survival of the country depends on moving beyond Watergate to pressing domestic and world issues.

"We're going to have to move beyond Vietnam and beyond Watergate because the issues are so important that this country cannot survive if we do not face up to them adequately and effectively," Laird told the Republican National Committee.

Illegal U.S. Raids Into Laos Reported

By MIKE SHANAHAN
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite a 1969 law prohibiting American ground combat troops from entering Laos, U.S. soldiers accompanied nearly 450 secret ground operations in that country in 1970, the Defense Department reported Monday.

In all, during the years of the Indochina war, there were 3,638 ground operations into Laos and Cambodia, the department said.

Some of those missions involved two or more platoons of troops accompanied by as many as 22 Americans, the Pentagon said.

Details of the secret crossborder operations were made known in a "white paper" provided by Deputy Defense Secretary William P. Clements to the Senate Armed Services Committee.

Sen. Harold Hughes, D-Iowa, who has been questioning secret U.S. military operations in Cambodia and Laos, termed Clements' report "incomplete and unacceptable."

The report disclosed that the National Security Council headed by Henry A. Kissinger approved each of the 3,875 Cambodian bombing raids in 1969 and 1970 as well as the methods for keeping them out of the newspapers.

From the first Cambodian B52 raid on March 18, 1969, Clements said, "the necessity to minimize the likelihood of public speculation or disclosure was established within the NSC."

Pentagon spokesman Jerry W. Friedheim said some of the larger operations included blowing up bridges or attacking North Vietnamese communication complexes.

The Cooper-Church Amendment passed by the Congress on Dec. 29, 1969, prohibited funds for the use of ground combat troops in Laos. Friedheim said all operations in Laos after that date were "intelligence type missions."

There were 76 Americans killed in the Laotian missions code-named Prairie Fire. The white paper said efforts are continuing to notify all the families of those U.S. troops died. They were initially told that the casualties occurred near the South Vietnamese border.

Nixon Offers Olive Branch; Congress Willing To Accept

By FRANK CORMIER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - president Nixon, in an ambitious bid to move out of Watergate's shadow, urged Congress Monday to join him in a "constructive partnership" to speedily enact major legislation.

Submitting an unusual 15,000-word State of the union message, Nixon held out olive branches to the Democratic-controlled Senate and House as he called for "swift and decisive action" on administration bills ranging from revenue sharing to trade, pension and tax reforms.

Repeatedly pledging his cooperation, Nixon told the legislators that "if we proceed in a spirit of constructive partnership, our varying perspectives can be a source of greater creativity rather than a cause of deadlock."

Welcoming what he termed a "congressional renaissance," Nixon said he believes in a strong Congress as well as a strong presidency and asserted:

"There can be no monopoly of wisdom on either end of Pennsylvania Avenue-and there should be no monopoly of power."

Responding to the speech, House Speaker carl Albert, D-Okla., said, "I feel pretty good about it." He added that he found "nothing very startling" in the message.

House Republican Leader Gerald R. Ford of Michigan said he would be willing to work for the President's proposals, citing Nixon's "willingness to work with Congress for the good of the nation in an absence of partisanship."

Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield said he would call Seante committee chairman together to map strategy on what Nixon recommendations could be handled this year.

GOP Senate Leader Hugh Scott said the Congress could make reasonable progress on proposed legislation if it would buckle down to work.

Besides focusing attention on the legislations he wants, Nixon also spotlighted actions he opposes: red ink spending, any tax increase, major defense cutbacks and busing of public school children to achieve racial balance.

Nixon stated that if Congress votes more money than he wants, he will not hesitate to veto spending measures or impound appropriations.

He also said he would "continue to oppose all efforts to strip the presidency of the powers it must have to be effective"-an obvious threat to veto any legislation that would restrict his warmaking powers.

Mixing compliments with criticism, the President said Congress has made "commendable progress" in some areas this year but that action on his own initiatives "has been far less than I had expected."

Nixon said "the battle against inflation must be our first priority for the remainder of this year" and called on Congress to hold appropriations to his spending ceiling of $368.7 billion for the fiscal year that began July 1.

Nixon's Lawyers Appeal Sirica Ruling On Tapes

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon's lawyers told the U.S. Court of Appeals Monday that an order requiring the President to release his tape recordings of Watergate-related conversations will be a long step "toward government by judiciary."

The brief, filed in advance or oral arguments Tuesday, asked the appeals court to nullify the Aug. 29 order by Chief U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica that the tapes be turned over to him for screening what portions the Watergate grand jury can hear.

Sirica filed his own answer with the court and responded also to a cross-petition by special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox. The prosecutor asked that the judge's order be changed to produce the tapes in their entirety to the grand jury. Nixon's lawyers argued that Sirica's decision, if allowed to stand, would do great damage to the constitutional principle of separation of powers.

"Today it would be the presidency that would be lessened and crippled in its ability to function," said the brief by the Prdsident's attorneys. "Tomorrow it would be Congress, for if presidential privacy must yield to a judicial determination, it is difficult to think of any ground on which congressional privacy could continue to stand."

Kissinger: Wiretapping Rarely Justified

By HARRISON HUMPHRIES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Henry A. Kissinger said Monday the use of wiretaps in the interest of national security "should be very rare."

President Nixon's national security advisor and nominee to be secretary of State said he would have no personal disagreement with a policy of conducting weretaps only when approved by a court.

But in reaching a balance between human liberty and national security, "the weight should be on the side of human liberty," Kissinger said in response to questions at his confirmation hearing before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

The committee, meanwhile, continued to press for an FBI summary of wiretaps in 1969 and 1970 of members of the national security council staff headed by Kissinger.

Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson offered the committee at a closed session what he called "a summary of the summary," without identifying the reportedly 17 individuals subjected to electronic surveillance to determine the source of informationleaks

No One Complained When Harley Died

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) -When Harley Lewis died, he was buried in a potter's field in a trench filled with two feet of water, two toads and hundreds of tadpoles.

A 17-year-old stockade prisoner sentenced on marijuana charges read his obituary.

A man serving 60 days for public drunkenness dumped black soil and coral rock into the grave, cracking Harley Lewis' pine box.

Dirt poured over Harley Lewis' feet.

No one complained. Only the people who buried Harley Lewis and a woman from the county welfare department were at his funeral.

Lewis died on a Miami sidewalk about two weeks ago. Not too much is known of him except he had a rented room here.

"Once he was a photographer and took pictures of movie stars and everything," his landlord said. "He was about 67. He had to sit up to sleep because he had emphysema and a bronchial asthma. Every evening he would watch television until it went off the air.

"Twice he told me he wished he didn't have to suffer so much," he said. "He came here to die."

Lewis' final resting place was the 40-acre potter's field south of Miami where coffins are buried in predug trenches 400 feet long.

The day they buried Harley Lewis, there were three such trenches.

Since 1966, the county has buried 1,600 persons who died unclaimed or indigent. The county pays $100 for an adult, $35 for an infant, to funeral homes that take turns getting the bodies ready for burial in the trenches.

"When the land is filled, the Parks and Recreation Department will landscape it and plant trees and set in cement markers with numbers," said Charli Gainsslen, the woman from the Welfare Department.

"We know where everybody has been buried for as far back as 1929," she said. "We have to because sometimes a family will want to disinter a relative."

She talked softly while the former marijuana smoker read from the Bible: "The Lord is my sheperd I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures..."

Weeeeeoooooo, Yer Ass

On April 15, 1973, the three-year contract between the United Farmworkers Union and the desert grape industry in and around Caochella Valley, California, came to an end. The next day, the farmworkers were told that the Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America had secured contracts to represent the Valley's 3500 vineyard workers.

In the fall of 1965, the Filipino Agricultural Workers Organizing Committee came to Delano, found the $1.20 an hour being offered for a wage outrageous, and started setting up picket lines. Eight days later, Ceasar Chavez and his Farmworkers Union decided not only to support the strike, but to merge with the AWOC to form the now legendary United Farmworkers.

The UFW spent five years on strike in order to win the original contracts with the table grape industry. Before the 1970 union agreement, the nation's 3,000,000 agricultural laborers worked an average of 119 days a year, with an annual wage of $1389. One out of every three farmworkers had no toilet, one out of every four no running water. The life expectancy of a worker was 49 years and a thousand a year died from pesticide poisoning in the fields.

Despite evidence to the contrary (including polls showing that 90% of the workers want Chavez to negotiate), the Teamsters claim that they best represent the workers of Coachella Valley. The truth is that they best represent the economic interests of the growers and the political interests of Richard Nixon.

Agriculture has grown into a multi-billion dollar business, which would come in real handy in the area of world trade, especially in the face of the dollar crisis. Agriculture is also becoming a keystone in the Republican economy. With other industries unable to compete, the U.S. has moved into an increasingly unfavorable position in world trade. Nixon's plan then, is to increase the production and exportation of farm products, to the delight of his friends in the industry and at the expense of the farmworkers and the consumer. Since government controls have been lifted, we've witnessed shady grain deals and an accompanying rise in the price of beef. So one can even blame Richard Nixon for that, although his strategy is being carried out with help from his friends (we've already seen by the Watergate scandal that our beloved president never works alone.).

His friend in this case is Under Secretary of Labor Laurence Silberman, who arranged for Frank Fitzsimmons (President of the Teamsters) to address the annual convention of the American Farm Bureau (who have a long history of calling unions Communist fronts). He referred to Chavez as a "a revolutionary fraud" and got a big hand from the growers. A month later, the Teamsters signed an agreement with the Labor Contractors Association and their representatives showed up in Coachella with an offer.

That Teamster contract reinstitutes the notorious Labor Contractor hiring system, reduces the workers' already minimal pay by 10¢ an hour, imposes no restrictions on the use of man-killing pesticides and leaves the workers without any effective medical benefits.

So as a result, the United Farmworkers have refused to work, and have set up picket lines around the fields where grapes and lettuce grow. The Teamsters have tried unsuccessfully to "organize" the workers by breaking heads and burning people's homes. They have imported scab labor in their attempt to destroy the United Farmworkers Union. By now this scab picked fruit is arriving at the stores in your neighborhood. If these grapes sell, the next bunch of growers with UFW contracts to renew will follow suit and invite the Teamster hardheads to "organize" the fields on their terms (i.e. a lower hourly wage, no restriction on the use of condemned sprays, reinstitution of the slave labor contract system, and a medical plan that neatly excludes seasonal workers).

The growers have no compassion or understanding of the plight of the worker--what these bastards do understand is sales. Nothing less than a massive consumer boycott grapes and iceberg lettuce will cause the growers to recognize a union that represents the workers.

You can help. BOYCOTT ALL TABLE GRAPES AND ICEBERG LETTUCE. If you shop at A&P Stores or Safeway, tell your grocer that he should not buy scab items such as lettuce and grapes. Also tell him that if he continues to do so, his store will be boycotted. Weeeeoooooo, yer ass. Help support the United Farmworkers Union.

University Judiciaries

Making Them Operate

By JIM PAPPAS

It finally happened. Those summer jobs ended and now we're back at UMass beginning another year. In thinking of last year, I'm sure most of us don't remember University Judiciaries. In fact, most people probably don't even know what the hell University Judiciaries are.

For the past few years we have had the somewhat unique opportunity here at UMass to set up and operate a totally student run court system. Selection of judges, membership in the system, and a good part of the governing rules and policies were left open to the discretion of undergraduates.

So, what happened? Our judicial system ended up as one of the most dismal failures of modern history. At the end of last semester, it was totally disbanded. Apathy left the courts meeting infrequently. Poor administration left most people illtrained, but most importantly, there was little knowledge or use of the judicial system by the general student population. The judicial system became overburdened by shoplifting cases and tried nothing else but shoplifting violations.

The tremendous opportunities of a student operated court system were never even remotely realized. No cases dealing with women's rights, minority rights, or challenging the everpresent administration were tried. The reason for this failure are really immaterial now. The fact that this situation existed and must be altered is the only real matter of consequence.

As Attorney General I've made a commitment to affect this change. What I'm asking for is other interested people to make a similar committment. There is more than enough work and the fields of concentration are wide open (womens' rights, minority problems, special problems of gays, veterans, and foreign students to name a few).

The only real qualifications one needs are a sincere interest and a little time each week. Any person interested in law, police work, or any other field related to the legal structure will find their experience with this judicial system a valuable one in terms of their personal growth and education.

There can be more to an education than just classrooms. Make a committment to a worthwhile experience with practical value and inquire at the Student Attorney General's office in 422C Student Union for more information.

Jim Pappas is the Student Attorney General.

Fighting Communism?

A lot of people think that the United States is fighting communism. Are we? I don't think so. In fact, I can show that ever since Franklin D. Roosevelt took office back in 1933, the official policy of the United States government to do everything it can to help the communist cause.

As I stated, most of it started with F.D.R.'s taking office. What he did was recognize Stalin's regime in Russia, giving respectability to the Kremlin Butchers.

Then, the Import-Export Bank was sent up with the purpose of guaranteeing that U. S. businessmen who traded with Russia would get paid-by U.S. taxpayers (the Russians are famous for not paying their debts). Thus, the taxpayers have been paying off Russia's debts since 1933. But when we pay Russia for what she gives us, we pay in gold.

Trade and aid to any other country's government by the United States constitutes an endorsement of that country's government. Which is saying that the United States approves of the communist government in Russia while Russia says that only capitalism or communism will survive. It's like a French Communist once said, "I think the best way to fight capitalism while waiting for the revolution is to make money by exploiting the capitalists." So much for aid and trade.

What about war? Well, in World War II, we allowed Russia to march into and conquer Berlin when it would have been much easier for the United States to do so. And there is the case of Eastern Europe after World War II. We gave Eastern Europe to the communists. A case in point is Poland (See Arthur Bliss Lane's "I Saw Poland Betrayed" - available from any American Opinion Bookstore for $1).

All this has been done by our government. Other books show that such people as Eisenhower, Kennedy, Johnson and Nixon have continued the trend, with Eisenhower and Nixon being the worse of the lot. (I ought to publish a list of most recommended readings sometime).

But our government also is doing something else. It is known as pressure from above and pressure from below. The communist groups around the U.S. supply the pressure from below, stirring up such phony issues as civil rights (which has not helped the blacks that much), conservation, and civil liberties. The "liberals" in our government supply the pressure from above which is legislation designed to "stop" the pressure from below. Only all it does is take more freedoms and rights away and give the government more power. Now if this keeps up, the government will soon have total power and control over the people. Which is saying that our government, in the name of fighting communism at home, is giving us the same thing, just as Hitler and Mussolini did in the thirties. And this is what the "liberals" are doing, while aiding the communists abroad. And it is still going on (examples: Vietnam and the food giveaway to Russia).

So is our government really fighting communism? No way!

The Societal Sufferance

(Editors's note: This is the second part of a two-part article prepared by a foreign student for the express benefit of incoming foreign students. Part one appeared in yesterday's Collegian, entitled "The Educational Trap."

It is an individual's point of view. The Foreign Student Office does not agree with it and therefore would not print it, as the Office believes Haridasan has presented a bleak picture of the American university to the foreign student. The article presents the culmination of the experiences of a few students at this University, whose names have been withheld for reasons of publicity.)

By N. HARIDASAN

Mr. Student, after reading thus far, would ask: "What then, shall I do?" For a start, try talking with your fellow-students, within and without the department. Seek information at all levels - staff and faculty. Seek opinions at inter-departmental and intra-departmental sources. Dig up some mud. "Dissatisfaction breeds progress" - and don't you forget it. Progress has never come about because of a satisfactory static state. An attempt should also be made to prise some information from the student evaluation that takes place at the end of every term. I, for one, have wondered what does happen to all those forms? Which "dank, and musty dungeon do they end up in, collecting the dust and cobwebs of ages, while history moves on"? "Never volunteer, unless you are ordered" seems to be practiced very well (on this campus), and Mr. Student, you will not find anyone volunteering all this information for your gain, or for that matter, preparing such a paper for your perusal. But then, Haridasan is not just 'anyone'! So, take off that coat, set aside your ego, drop your status, roll up your sleeves, and dig - to save your neck - because it is your fees and monies and time that you are spending in this place, and it is your neck that 'they' have on the chopping block!

Take simple courses - 500-600 levels - and get the grades; audit the 700-800 (harder) series. Rock the boat - if it is stranded on a reef - that is the one way to get it off. Don't forget to research the possibility of transferring whatever credits that can be transferred from your earlier study programs - especially important to students at doctoral levels - BEFORE you draw up a course-schedule for your 2 - 3 - or 4-year stay here. This is not paradise, not a utopia. If it were, if there were such a place on earth, then multitudes would be streaming there. But being what it is, it can be as good, or as bad, as you, Mr. Student, make it out to be.

And finally, Mr. Student, you can either take the easy way and compromise with the ways of men for what they are worth or else be a MAN and set your goals and aspirations "greater than the follies of the fool", and pray for a courage that will, like the six hundred who rode into the valley of death, keep you standing fast, firm in the principle of your life, and you will end up "a wiser and richer man". That is, for a start, something that you, Mr. Student, can do.

Education can be defined in various ways: For me, it is of two broad types: curricular (that which literally includes everything outside the former). Social activities, religious and cultural participation, student and societal groups are some of the kinds of interactions that could be included in the second type of education. Mr. Student, you can now allocate your available, limited resources of time, talent and brains between the two. No so much to be a jack of all trades and master of none, but that all work and no play makes Mr. Student a very dull (narrow-minded, stick-in-the-mud, dog-in-the-manger, ignorant) boy.

Ethnic and national groupings are not few and far between. Inter-ethnic and inter-national groupings are rarities. Mr. Student, if you had to stay only with your people, you could have stayed at home. You didn't have to come all this way just to seek a piece of your community in this campus. If the expression "In Rome do as the Romans do" has any significance, it is now. How would you like if one from another nation came into your land and took little or no interest in actively participating within your community's activities? Rather crummy. Wouldn't you say so? Wake up; the coin has two faces.

But what is this you say Mr. Student? You came here to study? Is that all? Then why don't you stick to only studying? Please do not take part in anything other than studies - no smoking, no drinking, no gambling, no 'wine, women and song' as the expression goes, no talking, no films, no cars, no stereos, no clothes, no shopping, no touring, no photography, no nothing other than plain, and simple, pure, study. Surely, Mr. Student, you do see how silly it all sounds. Especially that argument of coming here only for studies. Now, if you said something regarding education. . .

What is that, Mr. Student? You say you have come here for an education. That is good. But, just a minute. What do you define as 'education', please? You don't have a definition? Would you care to use mine? It would not hurt to try, would it?

Within your field, Mr. Student, you cold find some organization on or around the campus, that could make use of what you have to offer and that you could learn from. Not only are they crying for your professional expertise (for whatever it is worth at this stage of your life), they would also learn from your culture, your country, your background, your religion, your environment. And this becomes very important where foreign students are concerned. To you from nations outside the U.S.A. this is a special challenge. There are many Americaans (local-yokels, as one author put it) who have never had a chance to travel, even outside their own state and county. Whatever knowledge they have of foreign lands are limited to preconceptions created by television presentations, books, magazines and pictures, glamorizations by foreign embassys and the press. Now you are HERE. In a position to give a first hand account from the wealth of your experience. Share and care. Suffer a little. Sacrifice of your time and energy. And you will grow up, in your stay here, wiser, and richer. Then you will learn. That will complete your education.

For the first time in my life, I contacted the instructors (of the two courses I planned to take during the Summer of '73), not to find out if I have the background for the course (that should be evident from the course description and the perquisites given, if any), not to find out if I need the course (which should be evident from my background, interests, plan of study, and aspirations for a career), but to know (1) if the instructor was going to follow the course title and description as given in the catalog, (2) if he was one who brainwashed students into warped and hypocritical ideas, and avoid teaching him the subject, (3) if the instructor was one of those who blackmailed students, through the grades, into agreeing with him on all matters (course be hanged), (4) if the would correlate the exams, if any, with the entirety of the course work and the readings given, and base the grades thereon, (5) if he would permit the student the freedom of his own way of life, beliefs, principles, and not let these affect the final grade given. The answers received, in order of the above questions asked, were)1) Yes, with divergences where necessary to be made with prior intimation to the students,)2) No, (3) No, (4) Yes, and (5) Yes. Needless to say, these instructors were principled enough to keep their word to fulfillment, through the course and to the end. Needless also to say, it was my pleasure, nay, my privilege, to have studied under these masters.

To the few like these I dedicate this paper.

Letters To The Editor

Boycotting Grapes And Lettuce

To The Editor:

The United Farm Workers A.F.L.-C.I.O. is in the process of organizing local boycott committees in Western Massachusetts. Intensive consumer boycott committees are part of a national strategy across the country in order for the consumer to actively protest to his grocer and grocery chains that not only should stores not buy scab items such as lettuce and grapes, but that if the store continues to buy the products the store will then be boycotted if it does not become more socially responsible.

People are saying, "What another boycott?". We say 'yes' because the struggle to legitimatize the UFW which has over 80% support of the workers is a long struggle. The workers are continuing to fight in a place where 7% of all farmowners process 79% of all the land and employ 75% of all the labor. The working conditions in the fields are especially dangerous due to the unlimited amounts of chemical poisons that are sprayed on the produce, yet the workers are unprotected by state and federal legislation that would give them a minimum wage, unemployment benefits, pensions, medical insurance and fringe benefits. The average yearly wage for a farmworkers is $1,037 though in 1969 the gross income from agriculture in California was over 5 billion dollars-making it the largest state industry.

Over 90% of the workers in the Coachella Valley are on strike against their employers who signed a secret contract with the West Coast Conference of the Teamsters upon the expiration of the workers first union contracts with the UFW, April 14, 1973. The Teamster contracts were not voted on by the workers, they were negotiated with the owners and none of the contracts provide fully for the health, and wage benefits that the UFW requested.

The farmworkers are not about to break their strike now over. Over 5,000 people have been jailed this year for violating unconstitutional injunctions and in August a worker was killed by a sniper though no investigation took place. The UFW has the support of national religious and radical groups., it needs our support at the meeting Tuesday, 7:30 P.M., 177 Campus Center.

The Vatican II stated in the Constitution of the Church in the Modern World: Among the basic rights of the human person is to be numbered the right of freely-founding unions for working people. These should be able to truly represent them and to contribute to the organizing of economic life in the right way. Included is the right of freely taking part in the activity of those unions without fear of reprisal.

Girls' Work

To The Editor:

I feel that I must call something to the attention of my fellow students here at UMass. It concerns the Newman Center, the Catholic Center on campus. This past Sunday, I went with a friend to the 8:00 mass where the monsignor told us that the Center is once again in need of 1) men to be altar boys; 2) men (and yes, even a few iconoclastic women!) to serve as ushers; and 3) last and certainly least (my word choice) members of the distaff side of the student population to keep up the area around the altar (i.e. dusting etcetra). Or as the priest so aptly explained, altar boys and also priests aren't the neatest people around.

I believe the monsignor called it "girls work". Must I continue? The need is obviously there girls, so let's get out and help these people. After all, we were designed for this sort of thing. I'll bet the rags are even provided to us. See you there, sisters.

Auto Pollution Control - Who Foots Bill?

WASHINGTON (AP) - The General Accounting Office has challenged the legality of Environmental Protection Agency regulations that would require the consumer to pay for replacing costly emission control systems on 1975 model cars.

In a letter dated Sept. 5 to Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, chairman of the subcommittee on Air and Water Pollution, the GAO said EPA rules calling for replacement of the catalytic converter - expected to be the principal anti-pollution device on the 1975 cars - at the owner's expense "is not consistent with the law."

At issue is the interpretation of the warranty provision of the Clean Air Act which requires the catalytic converter to last for five years or 50,000 miles while permitting "reasonable and necessary" maintenance costs to be charged to the auto owner.

The EPA said in June it would allow the converters to fail once during the warranty period, with the replacement cost paid by the consumer.

In a letter to Comptroller General Elmer B. Statts, Muskie said the cost of replacing a converter could be as much as $150 and argued that such a cost did not fall in the category of reasonable maintenance.

The GAO agreed, replying to Muskie that "it is our view that replacement of the catalytic converter may not be considered reasonable maintenance so as to require that replacement be at the vehicle owner's expense."

Although the GAO finding is not binding on the EPA, a spokesman for Muskie noted that it could form the basis for a court challenge by consumers to the EPA regulations.

Ford Motors To Up Prices

WASHINGTON (AP) - The government Monday gave Ford Motor Co. approval to raise its prices on some 1974 models even more than was announced last week.

A Cost of Living Council spokesman said the council was sending Ford a letter approving a decision to make some equipment, that formerly was optional, standard on 1974 models.

The spokesman argued against concluding that the changes constituted an increase in price, saying the formerly optional equipment would cost about 20 per cent less when made standard.

However, the spokesman acknowledged that the move would increase prices to customers who otherwise would have decided against buying the optional equipment.

The council Friday approved an average increase of $74 per model for Ford to offset the cost of government-mandated safety and environmental features.

The features will not be obtainable on all models. They reportedly include carpeting, concealed windshield wipers and certain exterior and interior luxury improvements.

It was not know whether the other three major automakers would make similar moves to standardize formerly optional equipment.

"Preacher" Makes Pass

By STRAT DOUTHAT
Associated Press Writer

HUNTINGTON, W. Va. (AP) - John "Doc" Walls nursed a sore hand Monday and promised himself he'd never again let a rattler get the drop on him.

But the 54-year old Pensacola, Fla., snake handler said he couldn't wait to get his hands on his three wriggly pals: a cobra, a cottonmouth and "Preacher," the rattler that sent him to the hospital last Wednesday.

"Oh, no," he said from his hospital bed. "I'm not contemplating quitting. Did you ever hear of a race driver who quit because of a wreck?"

It was his sixth bite in the past four months and the 30th of a 20-year career of handling poisonous reptiles.

"But this time was really something," he said. "The cobra was trying to get out of the cage and made a pass at me. He just grazed my pants leg, but he left me wide open for the rattler and it got me so hard it almost knocked me down. And it wouldn't let go, either. I had to reach up with my other hand and pull him off of me."

Walls was in intensive care for several days, but said he was almost fully recuperated and hoped to be released later this week in time to rejoin his show, operated by Fun, Inc., either at Beckley or Charleston, W. Va.

"It's fascinating work," he said, "and we also feel we have helped save a lot of lives over the years by instructing people how to avoid snakes and what to do if they're bitten.

"I don't just do this for the money."

SVS also has information on many types of international and domestic service programs, which are open to student involvement including: Vista, Peace Corps, International Voluntary Service, and United Nations Volunteer Programs.

Last semester SVS placed over 250 UMass students in over 50 agencies in the Amherst, Holyoke, and Springfield area. With as little as 6 hours a week a student can avail himself/herself to what might be the most interesting learning experience of higher college career. In addition to assisting students in becoming involved in already functioning community programs, SVS is eager to aid any person interested in developing new and creative approaches to community and campus problem solving.

Any interested students are asked to stop by Room 318, Arnold House to speak with representatives of the program. The phone number is 545-2021. Please feel free to call.

Mitchell, Stans To Appeal

By MARCIA CHAMBERS
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP)-Former Cabinet officers John N. Mitchell and Maurice H. Stans are set to make a last-minute appeal Tuesday to delay the start of their federal conspiracy trial here.

Last week, Judge Henry J. Friendly of the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals granted Mitchell, former attorney general, and Stans, former commerce secretary, a hearing before a three-judge panel on new requests to delay their trial.

They were charged with charges of conspiracy, obstruction of justice and perjury.

The selection of the jury for the trial in U.S. District Court is to begin Tuesday, perhaps not until afternoon.

Therefore, the trial could still begin on time, if the federal panel, after hearing arguments, immediately rejects the defendants' claim that they are being "rushed to judgment" without a reasonable time for attorneys to prepare their case.

Defense attorneys contend that the demands of various Watergate investigations, including the Senate committee hearings and the Washington, D.C., grand jury probe, have precluded adequate preparations for the trial.

The trial judge, Lee P. Gagliardi, has previously denied numerous defense motions to dismiss the charges, transfer or delay the trial. Usually such pretrial orders cannot be appealed until the trial is over.

State Hospital Needs You

Northampton State Hospital is again recruiting students to participate in its volumteer program. Various programs are offered including games, arts and crafts, tutorial, dances and physical ed. Any student who can spare two hours per week on a regular basis is invited to contact Jeanne S. Boynton, Director of Volunteer Service at the hospital.

Scheduling is flexible and may be arranged according to the availability of the student.

Foreign Students Need S.S. Numbers

Recent changes in U.S. Social Security law affecting foreign nationals will take effect as of September 17, thereafter it will be extremely difficult for foreign nationals who do not have work permission from the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service to obtain social security numbers.

The University now requires all students to have numbers for identification purposes; foreign students are therefore advised to apply for a social security number this week in order to avoid difficulties which they may experience once the new laws take effect. Application forms for use in obtaining a social security number are available from the Foreign Student Office, Whitmore 239.

COLLEGE TEXTBOOK SALES dropped one per cent during 1972, in spite of a three per cent gain in book sales generally over 1971, according to a report in the Media Industry Newsletter.

While elementary and secondary textbook sales showed no change, sales of paperback juvenile books experienced the largest fall-off - 17 per cent.

Religious books tallied the second greatest gain of the year by scoring an 11 per cent increase to the 17 per cent tallied by business books.

Total book sales for 1972 were $3.2 billions, a $75 million increase over 1971.

DUELS MAY BE BACK ON THE CAMPUS, if the acceptance of a dean of students of the challenge of the vice-president of the student council at John Jay College of Criminal Justice is any indication.

A report in Lex, the JJCCJ student newspaper, indicated the weapons would be banana cream pies at an undetermined distance.

Occasion for the tilt was the annual election rally/mixer. Seems that the student challenger had been editor-in-chief of Lex whose name had been linked to complaints about a report of the Student Interest Committee, with which the Dean had been involved.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You may be asked to withhold information. Be positive of reasons — take nothing for granted. Gemini, Virgo persons could be in picture. Accent discretion. Hold something in reserve. Play cards close to chest. Timing is of utmost importance.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Friend may express puzzlement over money matter. Be gracious without becoming inextricably involved. Strive for greater harmony on home front. Domestic adjustment appears necessary. Intelligent concession on your part works wonders.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): What appears to be opposition could be of "paper tiger" variety. You have solid backing from one in position to open doors. Some who report to you contradict each other. Be selective, discriminating. Sift fact from fiction.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Accept responsibility. Many now may depend on you and expect you to serve as example. This is not entirely fair, but you benefit in long run. Perceive potential. A bit of overtime will eventually pay dividends.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Obtain valid hint from Cancer message. Steady pace is essential. Keep on track that leads to goal. Obtain better means of distribution. You can reach more persons with just a bit of extra effort. Aries is in picture.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Set your own time and place. Be a shrewd observer. Let others show their hands. Hold back until all facts are assessed. Permit mate, partner to present views. You do best now by listening and learning. Leo, Aquarius could be involved.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Highlight intuitive intellect. Means follow through on "inner feelings." Share knowledge. You learn as you teach. One who depends on you does turnabout — you receive favor from unexpected source. Remember diet resolution.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Avoid extravagance. You are already paying out enough — it is time to do some conserving. Have fun without being foolish. New contacts, social encounters prove fruitful. Experiment. Ask. Give full rein to intellectual curiosity.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Some events, situations and reactions may seem unreal. But you can wager that bills have to be paid and that everyday chores must be done. Know it and draw line between imagination and wishful thinking. You will be doing some remodeling — and rebuilding.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be ready for change, travel, variety, intensified relationship. Gemini, Virgo are likely to be in picture. Short trips, neighbors and relatives are featured. You are active and there is no need to engage in gossip.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You may be spending too much for too little. Know it and draw in financial reins. Consult with family member. Do some cost-cutting. Genuine bargains are available if you become more of a comparison shopper. Taurus, Libra persons figure prominently.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Select the best — don't fall for sob story. Insist on quality. One who tries to pull wool over your eyes does not deserve sympathy. Act and react in mature manner. Elevate self-esteem. Begin to like yourself — more and more!

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are intuitive, a natural teacher, progressive, inventive, generally unorthodox. You are able to perceive future trends. You seem, somehow, to know when something of importance is to occur. Some insist you have ESP. Perhaps. But you are prescient — you do know without knowing how you know. Major decision affecting personal relationship will be made in December.

As Football Season Approaches

Dolphins Await SF

By JOHN R. SKINNER
Associated Press Sports Writer

MIAMI (AP) — The suddenly not so awesome Miami Dolphins open defense of their 1972 National Football League title here Sunday against San Francisco with worries about defense and injuries.

The Dolphins seemed invincible as they won all 17 regular season and playoff games last year. But they wilted badly in the second halves of exhibition games this summer and lost the last two to Minnesota and Dallas.

Preseason injuries have left Coach Don Shula with only two healthy defensive tackles, Manny Fernandez and Bob Heinz. Jim Dunaway has been lost for the year with a broken back vetebra and Maulty Moore has been lost for at least eight weeks with a shoulder separation.

The Dolphins traded away defensive tackle Mike Kadish to Buffalo before the injuries hit. "I don't believe in spending my life second-guessing myself," was Coach Don Shula's comment about the timing of the trade.

Shula also swapped reserve wide receiver Otto Stowe to Dallas for Ron Sellers in the off season, and Sellers has been out of action since Aug. 4 with a knee injury. The loss of Paul Warfield since Aug. 24 with a thigh injury has made Sellers' absence more noticeable, but Warfield is expected to play against the 49ers.

Stowe has become a regular for the Cowboys and scored twice in Dallas' 26-23 exhibition victory over Miami last week.

"I can't worry about things I no longer have control over," Shula said.

Shula also dealt third-string quarterback Jim Del Gaizo to Green Bay after Del Gaizo was impressive in early exhibitions.

Pats Trade Wirgowski

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) - The New England Patriots traded defensive end Dennis Wirgowski to the Philadelphia Eagles and acquired linebacker Brian Stenger from the Pittsburgh Steelers Monday in National Football League deals involving undisclosed 1974 draft choices.

The Patriots had to cut four players from the regular roster and six of 13 on the taxi squad by the NFL's 4 p.m. deadline, but Coach Chuck Fairbanks did not disclose any names.

Wirgowski, a ninth round draft choice from Purdue in 1970, has played three years with the Patriots. Stenger, a 240-pound Notre Dame graduate, has played both middle and outside linebacker in four years with the Steelers.

Maynard Traded

NEW YORK (AP) - The New York Jets traded veteran wide receiver Don Maynard, pro football's all-time leading receiver, to the St. Louis Cardinals Monday for an undisclosed draft selection.

Carter Injured

CINCINNATI (AP) - Backup quarterback Virgil Carter, injured in Saturday night's final exhibition game, was declared lost for the season Monday and former St. Louis Cardinal quarterback Tim Van Galder was picked up on wiavers, the Cincinnati Bengals announced.

Van Galder, 29, was waived by St. Louis last week.

Carter suffered a broken collar bone and was placed on the injured reserve list.

"It's a major blow," said Coach Paul Brown. "We don't even have a week to work with Van Galder before heading into our season openers."

Van Galder, who played at Iowa State before spending three seasons as a taxi squad quarterback with the Cardinals, was activated in 1967, but didn't play in his first National Football League game until last year.

Carter, in his sixth season, led the NFL in passing percentage in 1971 with 138 completions in 222 attempts.

The Twenty Minutes... Too Little, Too Early

Hungry is the key word from the opening whistle you could see quite clearly that the Crusader lines were imbued with an almost eerie zeal, intent on getting to Piel Pennington and forcing him to rush his throws, on clearing the paths for Crusader runners to break out and on giving Pete Vaas time to twiddle his thumbs for ten seconds and still pick apart the Minutemen pass defense.

For some reason the UMie lines were toyed with until only the faint possibility of a comeback spurred them on to play with muscle and authority. Suddenly in the fourth quarter, the Crusader lines, which had toyed with the Minutemen, were shocked to find our heroes coming on strong for really the first time in the game. The resurgence of the Minutemen found UMass soundly outclassing Holy Cross. It remains a complete puzzle as to why the Minutemen could only get hungry when it was too late. A lead of 13-0 should have spurred them on to vanquish the Holy Crossers as convincingly as possible. Sixty minutes of sustained football by Dick Macpherson's crew would have undoubtedly gained them a victory, but 20 or 25 at the most, was just not enough. The potential is there, as the saying goes, the Minutemen proved that in the fourth quarter, but to realize that potential in terms of victories they will have to play like bengal tigers, not pussy cats. . . . .and for sixty minutes.

The Crusader Story

Dick MacPherson managed to get across the point to the referee in this instance, but his Minutemen failed to put up enough points on the board Saturday afternoon, as they were beaten 30-28 by Holy Cross. The Crusaders, led by the pinpoint passing of Pete Vaas blew the Umies off the field for three quarters, only to have the Minutemen come oh so close to pulling it out with a fifteen point final quarter.

Andy Dutkanicz's attempt at a forty-two yard field goal falls short, and with it the hope for revenge against the Holy Cross Crusaders. The kick which was attempted into the wind, is watched nonchalantly by HC's #43, who is apparently confident that the kick will not be long enough.

The Crusaders leave Amherst with a taste of victory, only three years after an attack of hepatitis forced HC to cancel it's football program temporarily. The Minutemen can only hope for a better performance and result next week against Villanova.

Commentary

Twenty Minutes Wasn't Enough

By DAVID EIBEL

Holy Cross began their 1973 Crusade by beating the UMass Minutemen 30-28 in irreligious fashion. Except for a final quarter in which the Crusaders faltered, they controlled the play and conquered Dick MacPherson's crew in very thorough and convincing fashion. As one fan in section eight put it so aptly "We were crucified."

For the Minutemen, it was a case of too little, too early, rather than the oft-coined "too little, too late." Most of the spectators at Saturday's fixture would probably have thought that the game was simply a case of one team, Holy Cross, grabbing a seemingly insurmountable lead, and then having a second team, UMass valiantly try to wrestle the lead away in the dying moments and fail, just when victory seemed within grasp. The fact of the matter is that the Minutemen's efforts in the fourth period should not have been necessary to the extent that they were. A little more, a little bit earlier, say when the score was 13-0 for the Minutemen, would have precluded the necessity for such last minute heroics.

When a football team bursts ahead by 13 points before the other team has even had a chance to acclimate themselves to field conditions, you'd expect the team in the lead to do everything in their power to pad their advantage and keep the other team off the scoresheet. You would never expect them to lead by thirteen points and then die for forty minutes, yet that's exactly what the Minutemen did on Saturday.

You could sense the fact that the Crusaders, who had all the reason in the world to have a letdown, seemed to get hungrier just as the Minutemen seemed to disappear from the playing field, until the game was all but frittered away.

THEY CAN ONLY WATCH--This pass from Piel Pennington intended for Bob Wolfe (44) goes through Wolfe's hands and is nearly picked off by the HC defender. It was that kind of afternoon, balls were being dropped, and assignments were blown by the Minutemen as they were outplayed for the most part by Holy Cross.

Sox Trim O's 4 1/2 Games Out

BALTIMORE (AP) - Bob Bolin rescued Luis Tiant after Baltimore scored two seventh-inning runs and got out of his own bases-loaded, none out jam in the ninth, giving the Boston Red Sox a 4-3 victory over the Orioles Monday night.

The victory moved the Red Sox moved to within 4 1-2 games of the first-place Orioles in the American League East.

Bolin, recording his 12th save, got Don Baylor on a fielder's choice grounder after run-producing hits by Merv Rettenmund and Boog Powell chased Tiant, 17-12.

With the bases loaded in the ninth, Reggie Smith caught Rettenmund's fly to short left-center and threw out Jim Fuller trying to score. Tommy Davis then flew out to end the game.

A pair of singles by Carlton Fisk had helped Boston build a 4-1 lead before loser Jesse Jefferson, 4-5, was lifted in the sixth.

"A Tribute To John n' Onie"

From Onie to John — His suitcoat and tie definately did not depict his condition. One went to look for the car, the other helped his inebriated friend from section 6. . And still a third was looking for one more who was lost amidst the suds of his alma mater's victory. . .But for them, the party had just begun. . .

They all qualified for medicare before its inception. They live in the memory of the glory years of the Cross when the Jesuits nearly nipped the Catholics from Notre Dame for the Sugar Bowls of the 40's. . .Still in moth balls are the racoon coats, battered beanies, and penants of ol. . The Brandy remains the same. . .But the boys did Schlitz on Saturday. .

All five of em' were pretty fucked up. Both teams had emptied from the field. The Associated Press was just getting the staggering result. And there was John. . .59 years of age and a Worcester accountant, passed out and stiffer than his tie. I imagine ol' Onie is still describing to John how foolish it was of an attempt from 43 yards. . .John never saw a thing. . .

For Holy Cross. . .They never miss a game. Sunday morning is Saturday's headache as they live with the hope of a Vaas touchdown. They speak of how close they came against Army at the Point a year ago. They bitched in defeat and the military police were summoned. But they said they'd be back. . .

And just maybe this is the year the Cross will stop the rednecks from the Hudson. But Onie remembers the nostagia of old. . ."There was a time when we used to battle Carnegie Tech in the 40's for a shot at the Sugar Bowl". . .But Onie couldn't help holding back his enthusiasm of the present. With his obvious joy, he continued to slober all over himself. . .

To the boys who've been following the Cross for decades, it was just another Saturday with Schlitz and sunshine. Yes, when it was over and they're clean on the season with one over the barrel, you had to point them in the direction of Worcester. And when Onie woke John up about 20 miles from home, the accountant had to admit the whole game for him was taken out of context. For his missed the final gun, the Minutemen gloom on the scoreboard, and number 10's exit. . .

Number 10 just happens to be Paul Hansen. Pound for pound, for the things he can do well, he just happens to be the finest Minuteman football player. But John never noticed. And for his performance against the Cross, Paul Hansen, happily married, may just get a pro football contract. Steve Wood for his performance got embarrassed, the offensive line for theirs got humiliated, and Andy Dutkanicz was simply pressured . . .Jan Stenereud and a good bookie couldn't have made money on that attempt. . .So Paul Hansen is now 0-1. . .

You really couldn't blame him for putting his head down when it was over and simply sprinting off the field. He did what he was called upon to do. . .So did Bobby Parrott. But the irony belongs to John Healy. Out of the lineup Healy has one of the worst individual records in UMass sports history. . .He's 0-3 (two to the Cross and one to Bucknell). . .

Hansen shouldn't hang his head. Some of his friends should. . .Pennington and Berra excluded. But that's nonsense to John and Onie. . They've got another one to slurp through this Saturday. . .

UMass Union To Hold More Talks

Employee Work Stoppage Ends

Outside the incomplete Graduate Research Center, one of the University employees does his thing in Tuesday's work stoppage.

By DAVID SPARLING and B.J. ROCHE

A work stoppage by approximately 1,000 UMass employes ended yesterday afternoon under the threat of a court injunction from the university to force the employes back to work.

A spokesman for the parent organization of local 1776 of the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO said they had decided to call the employes back to work because of the possibility of an injunction from the university forcing the members to end the walkout.

Charles Sheridan, a representative of Council 41 of the union, also said the new parking plan would be sent to state attorney general Robert Quinn for a ruling on its legality.

Leaders of the union are scheduled to meet with administration officials today to discuss the parking situation. The workers had been demanding the abolition of the new parking system, under which most students and employes pay higher parking fees than under the old system.

The employees who did not report to work, two thirds of the 300 first shift dining commons workers, over 90 per cent of the physical plant (maintainance and janitorial) 800 workers, and most of the Campus Center workers set up their pickets at various points on campus at six in the morning.

One picketer, Bob Smith, a night janitor from Granby, had got off work at one a.m. and was on the lines "a little late" at seven.

Smith said that the university administration was trying to impose their parking plan on the employees "and we weren't even in on any decisions."

At the time Smith said that he was striking "until this is settled" even though its continuation might end up "with a few leaders fired".

Smith said that the administration had not listened to the union and that even the most trivial matters brought to the administration were passed on to arbitration boards.

"That's o.k., I guess," Smith said, "but that takes time and meanwhile alot of us workers are suffering."

Other workers interviewed said that instead of on-campus parking, many were willing to take UMass buses but that service was not widespread enough. They also brought out the fact that a recently acquired cost of living raise was effectively wiped out by the increased parking rates.

The new parking system, drawn up by UMass administrators, and put into effect this fall, charges higher rates to workers, faculty and students for spaces in the university's core and periferal lots. It is part of a government-financed study on parking programs for urban areas.

By early afternoon yesterday both groups appeared at an impass.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery issued a release then vowing "to use every means within the law to keep classes going and maintain essential services for students."

Bromery reminded the union leaders that Local 1776 workers were in violation of state law and he intended to "take every legal step necessary to put an end to the strike."

Carol Drew, president of Local 1776, after being advised of the Chancelor's release said at that time that there was a possibility of a "complete breakdown" between the administration and the union. At this time yesterday afternoon Drew had not been in contact with the administration.

Drew had spent the morning checking on the picketers making sure they "hadn't been hassled."

The effects of yesterday's work stoppage were felt mainly in the dining commons.

Joel Stoneham, Director of Food Services, said that the dining halls, lines and kitchens were manned by office personnel and student employees. The student employees' work is usually a part time job given instead of direct cash scholarships. Yesterday they were encouraged by Stoneham to work "as much as they could."

Stoneham admitted that there would be "limited service" but was convinced that if the strike did go on longer they would not run out of food. Stoneham also praised the office help for their contributions, noting that many started work at 4:30 a.m. and some would continue until 8 p.m.

Besides the corner cutting at the dining commons, evidence of the strike was hard to find on campus. Few students joined in picket lines or offered more than lip service to the picketers. The concensus of workers and students both was that the students would not become actively in-

Chilean President Overthrown

Allende Ousted, Kills Self

By ROBERT D. OHMAN
Associated Press Writer

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP)- Salvador Allende, the first freely elected Marxist in the Western Hemisphere, was ousted in a violent coup by the Chilean military Tuesday and police said Allende took his own life rather than surrender to the attacking rebels.

Allende's slumped body, with a bullet through his mouth, was reportedly found in the presidential palace after a 20-minute attack by the military which included bomb-dropping planes and heavy artillery.

A four-man military junta took control of the government and declared a state of siege. Censorship and a curfew were imposed.

The coup capped weeks of violent unrest in Chile, in which the armed forces finally joined growing groups of workers and professionals who had been demanding Allende's resignation. But the 65-year-old Allende held true to his firm commitment not to resign his attempts to bring socialism to Chile.

In his last public statement, made by radio as two air force jets screamed over the downtown government house, Allende said: "I will not resign. I will not do it. I am ready to resist with whatever means, even at the cost of my life in that this serves as a lesson in the ignominious history of those who have strength but not reason."

The chief photographer for the Santiago daily El Mercurio said he saw Allende lying dead on a blood-soaked sofa in the anteroom of the palace dining hall. He said the president had shot himself once in the mouth.

Police Prefect Rene Carrasco confirmed the suicide. He said Augusto Olivares, a close Allende volved unless they could not get food or if they lost heat and electricity caused by the shutdown of the on-campus power plant.

The building trade union members working on campus, notably at the construction of the second tower of the Graduate Research Center, honored the pickets and did not work. Union delivery trucks also did not cross the lines.

One of the major concerns yesterday was the coal supply at the power plant. Coal truck drivers were among those honoring the lines and at the time of the end of the work stoppage there was only estimated to be enough coal on hand for another ten hours.

"Then," one of the plant's skeleton crew said, "we'll have to shut down." That estimate would have the plant shut down at three a.m. today.

As the afternoon wore on, the growing possibility that the administration would seek a court injunction forcing the union to end their walk out was a major factor in 1776's decision to return to work and reenter negotiations.

Daniel Melley, director of public affairs at UMass said the work stoppage was over around five p.m. yesterday. He said the administration "expressed appreciation to the labor executives for their help in ending the strike." And the administration also "expressed appreciation to students, staff, and faculty for their patience."

Sheridan was optimistic that the negotiations would continue "in good faith" and that there would be serious negotiations.

Elsewhere on campus, following a six p.m. meeting in Franklin Dining Commons. the presidents of area governments and executive committees of the undergraduage and graduate senates announced that they will request a meeting with administration officials today to "re-open the parking fee issue."

Got A Minute?

The Occupational Vocational Center of Haydenville offers a unique opportunity for experience to any student on campus who wishes to volunteer time every week. The Center helps the emotionally disturbed and the mentally retarded obtain the vocational training that they need to prepare them for regular employment.

This year the Center is looking for students to volunteer several hours every week to take one of the emotionally disturbed to a movie, a park, shopping or some other activity. A one-to-one relationship may develop from this which would be beneficial to both the student and the patient.

The program needs the support of students in the five college area if it is to achieve fruition. Any student who wishes to volunteer time to this program may contact Irene Romanchuk at 586-2627 after 4:30.

Clinic Doctors Education

By SHARON HUGHES

A small clinic at UMass with resources to improve teaching skills is quickly achieving its goal of becoming a national center.

The Clinic To Improve University Teaching has been offering its services to volunteer campus professors for a little over a year. The clinic staff helps faculty recognize their teaching strengths and weaknesses by interviewing students, teachers and videotapeing classes.

Last summer, the 25 member staff extended its services to professors across the U.S. Mexico, Germany, Israel and Canada with results described by clinic director Michael A. Melnik as "very good".

Melnik particularly emphasized his experience with German and Mexican professors because the implications improved teaching skills have for their society

Regarding Mexico, Melnik said, "In underdeveloped nations improved educational skills is a question of national survival. It's crucial for them to find a way to train masses. But its equally important that the method used be attuned to their clients and their environment."

"The German method of teaching is similar to the structure of their society--autocratic. Encouraging teachers to work with students in a spirit of co-operation could change the whole structure of society."

To further expand services internationally, a 28 minute film describing the clinic process with translations in French and Spanish is in the making.

In the U.S., the clinic is exploring the possibility of a telephone dictation system. Other university clinics would call, the question recorded on a three minute tape, and a group of diagnosticians (clinic instructors) would answer the question by mail.

Assistant Director of the Clinic George Bryniawsky is optimistic about the dictation system and the future of the clinic.

"Most Universities have attempted to improve the quality of teaching by identifying good professors and supporting them. The Clinic is unique because it offers day to day assistance."

Director Melnik added, "We're trying to upgrade the morale of the teaching profession as well as the basic skills. He called the feedback from the clinics efforts "overwhelmingly gratifying". This semester he anticipates a consolidation of the different approaches to teaching improvement offered by the University: TIP (Teacher Improvement Program) a University center still in the making, and the clinic.

When a consolidation is reached, the clinic will announce which improvement strategies it will offer.

Senate OK's Student Trusts

By JEFFREY H. LEVIN

State Senator John W. Olver, of Amherst, announced this week that legislation designed to protect the student supported legal services at UMass has been approved by the State Senate.

The bill, sponsored by Senator Olver at the request of student attorney Richard Howland would permit "the trustees of UMass to establish and manage trust funds for student supported activities, including legal services." It would also permit student supported trust funds for the operation of dining commons, health services, research institutes, dormitories and, apartments. All such trust funds would be self-supporting through student tax monies.

Howland assumed his position as student attorney in 1970. His duties include advising students of their legal rights and responsibilities and directing those who need to be represented in court to other lawyers. The student legal service program, one of the first in the nation has been praised by Senator Olver for the benefits it provides to UMass students.

Presently, Howland's salary is derived from student monies. According to Harry Greenwald, a legislative aide to Senator Olver, the question arose last year as to the appropriateness of this method of payment. Conceivably, Howland, who is paid by UMass could be retained to represent a student party against UMass. To guard against this possibility, Greenwald said, the trust fund bill was proposed.

The legislation would make Howland directly responsible to UMass students and available to represent them in the event that a suit against UMass should arise.

The bill, Greenwald said, "encountered no difficulty in being passed by the Massachusetts Senate." It was approved on a voice vote.

The proposed legislation now goes to the Massachusetts House for consideration by that chamber.

Students Don't Rally To Work Stoppage

By MIKE KNEELAND

When the work stoppage began, workers of Local 1776 expected students to rally to their cause. So far, this has not been the case.

"The students are taking our places in the dining commons," one picketer complained. "They're certaintly not helping our cause," he added.

On campus, few students seemed either aware or concerned about the work stoppages.

"Is there really a strike?" one student asked. "I didn't even know they raised parking fees," she said.

Other students knew of the stoppage but they were indifferent. "I have nothing to say about the situation," many students said in reply to questions.

Students living on the fourth floor of Dickinson were an exception.

"We got up at 5 a.m. to picket with the workers," said J. Pinck. Ms. Pinck said that most of the signs were made by students on her corridor, which she said is officially known as the Liberation Corridor.

Ms. Pinck said that student support has been "absolutely minimal. The students will get concerned when they no longer have any hot water because no coal is being delivered."

Ms. Pinck said she doesn't think students should stop attending classes. "But they should be picketing with the workers showing them we support them," she said.

Students forced to drive their cars to campus were sympathetic to the workers' grievances.

"I didn't pay the parking fee this year because I couldn't really afford to," one commuter said.

"And if I can't pay it, then many of those workers probably can't pay it either," he said.

Is ThatRoommate Yours?

By AVIS YUNI

If the college community consents, police officers may begin to spot check the public areas of dorms in an attempt to remove those people living in the lounges who do not know anyone in the dorm.

In a recent meeting with the Area Directors, David Johnston, Director of Public Safety (UMass Police Dept.), drew up a proposal allowing police officers to go through the public areas of dorms every now and then at some unknown time.

Diana White of the department told the Collegian that the officers absolutely would not go on the floors or into student rooms.

She stated that the UMass police have received many complaints of men living in the lounges of dorms and threatening the residents. These persons are not connected in any way with anyone in the dorm, yet students after seeing them around a lot, falsely think that they belong with someone there.

However, Ms. White stated, "they are just living there and are ripping off things from students in the dorms."

Under Johnston's proposal, if a police officer sees someone living in a lounge with no visible means of support or reason for being there, he would ask the individual to show an ID. If none can be produced, the person would be asked to leave.

This proposal is only in the talking stages, Ms. White stated. "It has just been made to the area directors and the security department is waiting for feed-back from them and the Heads of Residence."

Ms. White emphasized that the proposal would not be put into effect if the college community does not want it.

She stated that the department is only interested in kicking out those people staying in lounges who are hurting students through threats and thefts. "Innumerable cases of people doing just this have been reported," Ms. White stated.

Cashier's Office Didn't Skip Town

By CHRIS WALTER

The Student Union cashier's office has been moved from its second floor space to occupancy next to the S.U. ticket office. The move was made in order to allow R.S.O. a more convenient location.

Check cashing hours at the new office presently run from 9 a.m.-4 p.m. Mr. John Twilley, who is in charge of the office, says that the new hours are temporary and a result of construction still going on within the office. Regular hours of 8:45-4:15 will resume "as soon as possible." Twilley went on to say that the office is operating smoothly, and any problems which have been encountered thus far are temporary ones due to the short period of time the new office has been occupied. He feels that when the staff has had a chance to organize the office, "check cashing will run even more smoothly."

30-inch Horses Worth Weight In Gold

NEWBERRY, Fla. (AP) - On an old plantation in this rural central Florida community is a herd of the world's smallest horses, too tiny to be raced, ridden or worked on farms.

But they're worth up to $4,000 a pound.

"They just stand there," said Alma Bridges, who with her husband Bob owns 190 knee-high stallions, mares and colts, all registered American miniatures.

Mrs. Bridges said they have turned down an offer of $60,000 for Gumba, the 3-month-old, 15-pound pride and joy of Komoke Ranch.

"He's just spoiled rotten and we're so attached," Bridges said.

Midget horses are worth so much because there are only 350 registered in the United States, the Bridges said. They are under 34 inches tall, smaller than a Great Dane or old English sheep dog. Yet they are perfectly formed, full-grown horses.

"They do tricks or are used in display at carnivals," Bridges said. "And they're loveable and cuddly like a dog."

Mrs. Bridges said they recently sold 40 of the miniatures to a wealth Japanese businessman, who is paying $32,000 just for transportation in order to begin a breeding stock in Japan.

"It's a country gentlemen's hobby," said Bridges, 50, who sold an apartment business in Boca Raton five years ago and moved to the 400-acre ranch 15 miles west of Gainesville. "I'm not doing this to make a fortune," he said. "I've already got it."

The Bridges are selling their bigger miniatures and keeping the best. The smaller they are, the more they're worth, with a 28-incher pegged around $12,000.

"We only open the ranch to serious qualified buyers and then by appointment only," Mrs. Bridges said. "We don't have time for people who want to come out and look at little horses."

Allende Took Death Over Surrender

adviser, also killed himself.

A list of 68 prominent Socialist and Communist leaders was broadcast and they were ordered to appear at the Defense Ministry or face arrest. More than 100 Communist and Socialist party members were reported arrested in Santiago and Valparaiso a port city where naval units began the coup early Tuesday.

On Tuesday morning, the chiefs of the army, navy, air force and national police sided with the anti-Marxist opposition and issued a noon ultimatum for Allende to resign.

Moments after the deadline passed, two air force jets dropped bombs and fired rockets, severely damaging the fortress-like presidential palace. The president's official residence, about a mile away, was bombed after guards there "resisted the armed forces and police," the junta said.

Allende, midway through his six-year term as president, refused the demand for his resignation and held out for about three hours in the palace with his personal bodyguards and presidential police. The palace defenses crumbled in a final 20-minute assault by tank-supported soldiers and national police.

No casualty figures were immediately available. A U.S. Embassy spokesman said no Americans were known to have been wounded.

Allende had insisted that he would lead Chile to socialism within a democratic framework, but growing opposition from Chile's large middle class made that impossible. His nearly three years in power were marked by political and labor turmoil, economic crisis and rising inflation.

The coup was the first time in 46 years that the traditionally nonpolitical Chilean military had overturned a civilian government. Chile now becomes another on a growing list of South American countries to fall under military rule. Uruguay came under armed forces domination last may.

Right-wing extremists killed the Chilean army chief, Gen. Rene Schneider on Oct. 22, 1970, in an unsuccessful plot against the government. Last June 29 about 100 soldiers attacked the palace in a coup attempt crushed by loyal army units.

But on Tuesday the coup succeeded.

Long-distance telephone and telegraph services in Santiago, a city of three million, was shut down while the siege and attacks occurred, and were not reopened until nightfall.

Sporadic firing continued through the day between army patrols and small bands of Allende's leftist supporters who sniped from office buildings.

The heavy action centered at noon around the presidential palace, a fortress-like building that once was a mint and covers a block in the heart of the city.

Bombs and rockets smashed into the graceful, interior patios and Allende's office reportedly was badly damaged. Several tanks opened fire at the front of the building when Allende's guards refused to surrender.

Washington Reaction Mixed

By GEORGE GEDDA
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The move to topple President Salvador Allende of Chile drew mixed reaction here Tuesday even though it was carried out by the most cohesive pro-American element in the country, the armed forces.

The White House was non-committal on the situation but some officials said privately the attempted ouster was perhaps the best hope for a renewal of friendship between the two countries. Others, however, said this prospect could lose its significance if a change in command in Santiago means civil war for Chile.

GOP Reformers Go To Work

By DON McLEOD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The reform commission created to open up the Republican party's convention process for 1976 began its work Tuesday with a warning from GOP Chairman George Bush to "avoid the pitfalls of quotas."

"I think we have to have a broader appeal," Bush said in an opening address to the commission, "but we must avoid the pitfalls that led the Democratic party to unmitigated disaster.

"There is conflict," Bush acknowledged. "There will be conflict. But I hope we can do it without the same amount of tourniquets the Democrats required."

The group is called the "Rule 29 Committee," for the article in the current rules which created it. It is charged with the responsibility for broadening the base of participation in the party without getting into the mandatory racial, ethnic, sex and age quotas which led to dissention in the Democratic party last year.

The committee, in its organizing session, voted to meet in either St. Louis or Kansas City next June 15 and 16 to approve a preliminary draft and in Washington Dec. 7 and 8, 1974 to write its final report.

The closest thing to a quota in the current rules, approved by last year's national convention in Miami Beach, is the requirement that "each state shall endeavor to have equal representation of men and women in its delegaion to the Republican National Convention."

While this doesn't mandate equal proportions of men and women in state delegations, it is sufficient foothold to bring on credentials challenges in 1976.

The GOP turned sharply away from any guarantees for youth and minority groups at the convention, requiring only that the states take action to encourage them to participate.

The committee also has the task of reviewing all of the convention rules, but no drastic changes are expected.

The only other controversial rule is one apportioning convention delegates among the states with the use of a bonus system which rewards states going GOP in important elections with extra delegates. This system is currently under attack in federal court here from the Ripon Society, a liberal Republican group.

Allende Tried To Socialize Chile

By WILLIAM F. NICHOLSON
Associated Press Writer

President Salvador Allende once told foreign newsmen in Chile that the only way he would leave office before the end of his term would be in a pine box.

The quip was designed to underscore Allende's determination to see through his pledge to "lead Chile down the road to socialism." But it turned into reality Tuesday in a military coup that toppled Allende's three-year-old regime.

The 65-year-old physician had spent much of his life seeking the presidency. He was elected only on the fourth try, in October 1970, and only after the Congress voted to confirm his 36.3 per cent plurality at the polls.

Despite Chile's slide into political and economic chaos during his rule, Allende never wavered from his determination to stay in command and socialize the Chilean economy.

Allende the public man presented Chileans a dandified figure before his downfall. He was short and stocky with a full head of auburn hair that his detractors hinted had been dyed.

But Allende was a different man in the political arena, the only leftist Chilean politician capable of uniting half a dozen often quarreling Marxist and leftist parties.

It was his forging them into a united front that won him the 1970 election. During the three tumultuous years that followed-including Cabinet reshuffles, inflation of 323 per cent in one year and food shortages-it was Allende who kept the Popular Unity coalition afloat.

But even he began to worry in public in recent months as national strikes brought the already crippled Chilean economy to its knees.

Army Gen. Herman Brady, commander of the key Santiago garrison, said Sept. 2 in an off-the-record interview at a private home: "I'm afraid the armed forces are going to have to take over. This situation can't go on."

But Allende remained publicly serene, declaring that he was confident in the armed forces and in his leftist supporters.

Prices: Up And Up

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Increasing numbers of manufacturers have proposed price increases in recent days under the administration's Phase 4 anti-inflation program, Cost of Living Council officials said Tuesday.

The council is receiving 80 to 100 price increase proposals a day compared with an average of about 20 a day in the first week of the program. James W. McLane, deputy council director, said at a news briefing.

Proposed increases announced by the council Tuesday ran the spectrum of wholesale and retail products, ranging from forging ingots of Borg-Warner Corp. to transparent plastic bags by Consolidated Food Corp.

They would result in higher prices for aircraft, snowmobiles, glass containers, bank checks, appliances of all kinds, bedding, magazines, wine and beer, clothing, cigarettes, sporting goods and roofing materials.

Council officials objected to a suggestion that businesses were encouraged to file for price increases because of what they considered favorable action by the council on proposed steel and auto price increases.

"We don't think they got favorable consideration," McLane said, adding that the initial reaction from industry is that "we've really taken a tough stance."

The council said that 267 major firms proposed price increases on 1,038 categories of products between the start of Phase 4 on Aug. 13 and last Friday.

McLane said he expects the proposed price increases will continue at the current rate for several more weeks before tapering off.

McLane said the rising number of price increase proposals stems from growing familiarity by big companies with Phase 4 rules and from higher costs.

The increases can take effect in 30 days unless the council acts to block or delay them.

Senate Comm. Getting Flak; May Decide To Lie Low

By MARGARET GENTRY

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon's lawyer, Charles Alan Wright, told a federal appeals court Tuesday it would cause grave damage to the presidency to yield confidential tape recordings to the Watergate grand jury.

But special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox said learning the truth of vital parts of the investigation depends on access to the nine tapes.

In two hours of argument, the two specialists on constitutional law carried to the appeals court the historic confrontation that is certain to reach the Supreme Court.

Wright argued for the appeals court to nullify an order by U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica who commanded the President to deliver the tapes for his private inspection. Sirica wants to decide what portions, if any, of the tapes can be turned over to the grand jury.

Two of the nine-member panel's more conservative judges, Roger Robb and Edward A. Tamm, were absent from the hearing. Tamm's secretary said he was at a judicial conference.

No spokesman for Robb was immediately available for comment.

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Senate Watergate committee, under pressure from a number of Republicans to lower its profile, meets Wednesday to decide how to proceed with its investigation.

The closed session will be the first meeting in more than a month for the seven senators who used the summer recess to check on back-home reaction to the committee's often sensational public hearings.

Chief counsel Samuel Dash, whose staff has continued its investigation of 1972 campaign practices during the vacation break, is to give the committee a report on the staff's recent findings and a recommendation that the hearings continue. He has a prospective witness list ready for consideration.

Current plans call for the panel to complete its probe of the Watergate break-in and cover-up with testimony from former special presidential counsel Charles W. Colson, Watergate conspirator E. Howard Hunt and three lawyers who were connected with the Watergate case.

Hunt, one of the so-called White House plumbers, who directed the Ellsberg burglary, is to be questioned about that incident, as is former plumber David Young.

Brezhnev's Diplomacy Causes Rift In Moscow

By STEPHEN BROENING
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW AP-There are signs of strong opposition within the Soviet leadership to Leonid I. Brezhnev's policy of easing tensions with the Western world.

Some recent events suggest the opposition has been actively working to sabotage that policy and that Brezhnev has proved too weak to stop it.

Chinese diplomats, with undisguised glee, say that Brezhnev is in such deep trouble that he may not last another year as general secretary of the Soviet Communist party.

Some Western diplomats, concerned about the implications of recent developments, don't go as far as the Chinese. But they have concluded nevertheless that powerful forces within the Soviet structure are out to thwart Brezhnev's careful opening to the West.

The internal debate appears to be revolving around what effect increased ties with the West will have on Soviet society.

The evidence consists of the following:

-The labored explanations in the Soviet press about what the policy of detente means. It amounts almost to a defense and shows that a lot of people need convincing.

-Even in the explanations, cross-currents are apparent. The most striking was a statement by Brezhnev in a speech Aug. 15 displaying optimism about increased ideological and cultural intercourse with the West, and the failure of the Soviet commentators to follow up the Brezhnev line.

Trial Postponed For Mitchell, Stans

By MARCIA CHAMBERS
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - At the request of an appeals court, a federal trial judge Tuesday postponed criminal proceedings against former Atty. Gen. John Mitchell and ex-Commerce Secretary Maurice Stans in connection with a secret $200,000 contribution to President Nixon's re-election campaign.

District Court Judge Lee Gagliardi directed defense and prosecution to decide upon a mutually satisfactory new date for the trial of the two former Cabinet officials. He previously had refused a delay.

However, the two sides were unable to reach an agreement in their initial get-together, and Gagliardi took the matter of a new trial date under advisement.

The government was amendable to a month's adjournment.

Mitchell's forces wanted the trial postponed until three months after the Senate Watergate hearings end, and Stans' lawyers sought a delay at least until Nov. 26.

Mitchell and Stans were charged with conspiracy, obstruction of justice and perjury in their campaign dealings last year with fugitive financier Robert Vesco. An extraordinary panel of 1,500 prospective jurors already was on hand for the trial's scheduled beginning in the federal courthouse at Foley Square.

Defense lawyers carried their request for a delay in the trial to the Circuit Court of Appeals during the day. In a 2-1 decision, the appellate judges held they had no power to reverse Gagliardi's refusal to postpone the trial. But they said they would have granted a delay if they could, and they urged him to do so.

Attorneys for Mitchell and Stans argued for a delay on grounds that the pressures of Watergate had interferred with their preparation for the Vesco case. Both defendants have appeared before Watergate investigators in Washington.

Magdalen College Will Stress Intellectual And Moral Values

By ALEXANDER G. HIGGINS
Associated Press Writer

CONCORD, N.H. (AP)-Bucking the trends to bigness, impersonality and "lack of intellectual and moral rigor" in American higher education, three Roman Catholic laymen are planning their own college.

At a news conference Tuesday, the three announced they will open Magdalen College in September 1974, "somewhere in the Manchester area." A site has not yet been chosen.

The liberal arts school, which will be limited to 300 students, is to be "an alternative to these persons interested in a traditional education which has as its aim the cultivation of the individual through intellectual and moral values."

Initially, 40 freshmen will be enrolled. All students will start as freshman, so it will take four years before there are four classes, sophomore through senior.

Student activism will be discouraged in favor of seminar discussions, all students will take the same courses and attend chapel daily with the faculty.

Students and professors will live on campus and eat together.

Cambodian Officers Reportedly Shot For Ordering Retreat

By DENIS GRAY
Associated Press Writer

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) - The Cambodian command claimed Tuesday its forces have squeezed Communist-led insurgents out of the northern and southern edges of embattled Kompong Cham.

Diplomatic sources reported that much of the fighting for the provincial capital 47 miles northeast of Phnom Penh was house to house and that battle lines remained confused.

The city, Cambodia's third largest, has been under siege nearly a month.

Col. Am Rong, the chief spokesman for the Cambodian command, could not confirm reports that at least 12 first lieutenants and captains were executed in Kompong Cham last Friday for allegedly ordering a retreat from an insurgent attack.

The reports, from reliable sources, said the officers pulled their men back last Thursday without firing at the village of Balaing, two miles north of Kompong Cham.

The sources said Gen. Sosthene Fernandez, the commander in chief of the Cambodian army, ordered the executions on an inspection trip to Kompong Cham. Fernandez then ordered all upper--echelon commanders to shoot anyone refusing to fight, the sources said.

Phnom Penh continued to send reinforcements to Kompong Cham, where an estimated 10,000 government troops now face about 8,500 insurgents.

Casualty figures generally have benn unavailable since the fighting began.

In South Vietnam, the Saigon command issued aerial photos to back up its claim that North Vietnam is establishing a dozen air bases in the South.

State Police To Stay At Walpole

BOSTON (AP) - Lt. Gov. Donald R. Dwight said Tuesday that the state police will maintain a contingent at Walpole State Prison indefinitely.

At a news conference during which Frank A. Hall was named commissioner of the State Department of Correction, Dwight said a contingent of four to six state policewomen will remain at the maximum security prison despite the recent appointment of a new superintendent.

The state police were put in charge of the riot torn prison after Gov. Francis W. Sargent fired former Correction Commissioner John O. Boone June 21.

Douglas H. Vinzant, formerly superintendent of the Concord State Prison, was named superintendent of Walpole late last month.

Hall indicated at the news conference that he will look within the state penal system to find a successor for Vinzant at Concord and also for a new superintendent for the state prison at Norfolk.

The former Norfolk superintendent, George Bohlinger, resigned two weeks ago.

Hall did not indicate how long it would take him to fill these posts.

SAN MARINO (AP) - The all-male governing council of this hilltop republic, the world's oldest and smallest, has adopted a law ending some of its time-honored discriminations against women.

Among other things, it allows them to hold public office and to make binding legal and financial committments.

Clara Boscaglia, a 42-year-old teacher who led her countrywomen in a 15-year campaign for equal rights, hailed the vote.

"I'm afraid many women here don't really realize what this means," she said.

IRA Indicated In Station Bombings

LONDON (AP)-Bombs "typical of IRA manufacture" exploded in two London railway stations Monday, injuring 13 persons, Scotland Yard reported.

The explosions marked the bloodiest attacks so far in a three-week terror bombing campaign officially blamed on extremists of the Irish Republican Army.

Two of the victims were seriously injured and one was reported near death.

Bomb scares forced evacuations and police searches in half a dozen other London rail terminals. But only one other explosive device was found, and it failed to go off.

More than 40 bomb attacks in London, Birmingham, Manchester and other British cities since Aug. 18 had already injured a total of a dozen people, a figure eclipsed by Monday's explosions.

Sargent Against Death Penalty

BOSTON AP-Gov. Francis W. Sargent indicated Tuesday that he won't sign pending legislation restoring the death penalty in Massachusetts, should it reach his desk.

A bill restoring the death penalty has been given initial approval in the House and now awaits further action.

While declining comment on the specific bill before the legislature, Sargent said at a news conference that he is concerned about the deterrent value of the death penalty.

Frank Hall, Sargent's new correction commissioner, said the death penalty means there is no hope, and it is contrary to his reason for working.

Parking: Everyone's Guilty

With all the turmoil of yesterday and Monday on this campus over the parking issue it's blatantly obvious that things are really starting to hit the fan. What's obscured behind all the happenings is the continuing hardening of positions on the matter by the Administration and the workers on campus, with a generous helping of same coming from the student sector. It seems as if the only way to come to any sort of an agreement about the situation is if all sides step back for a minute and realize that everyone's guilty to some extent, and then try to work from there. What follows is an outline of some of the problems as I see them and some suggested solutions. First the problems, with no order of guilt implied by the order in which they are presented.

I.The Administration and its representatives.

There are a few problems with the way the administration has handled the whole affair, dating back to last April. First, the original plan which provided for fees up to $125 was a total abomination, and it was ultimately retracted, which was good. What was bad was that it left a bad taste in everyone's mouth. Hopefully that would be solved by the Chancellor's promise of input from all sides into a second plan.

But the input never happened - another Administration mistake, and a serious one. It need not be reiterated here how it is not only proper but essential to have everyone's input into the governance of this University.

Another problem was in the presentation of the plan. Both Vice Chancellors Gage and Campion struck out miserably at the mass meeting in the Student Union Ballroom last May. In fairness to them it can be said that it is questionable whether anyone, even someone talking a fairly good game, could have cut through the hostility of the crowd that day. Nevertheless, the plan, which had good points, was never sold properly, and it added fuel to what was fast becoming an out of proportion fire.

The last mistake the administration made was in dealing with the ecology issue, a key part of the plan especially to students. After implementation of the present parking plan was approved by the Trustees early in the summer Administration reaction to questions about their committment to ecology on campus was decidedly noncommittal. Whether or not this was intentional is a moot point. It angered a lot of students, and cast a suspicion on the administration which we're still not sure isn't justified.

II.The workers and their representatives.

There have been a few problems with the handling of the parking situation from this end, too. First is the issue of the worker's position against supporting the bus system, a position held by many of the workers as illustrated by some of the signs at Monday's rally. What the workers don't realize is that their support of such a system is not them subsidizing students, but them subsidizing a system which will be available to them and will speed the realization of the goals of a decent parking plan (I'll give you my idea of what a decent plan is toward the end of this piece.)

Another problem seen from my viewpoint with the workers is their seeming reluctance to separate themselves from their cars. This affects students, too, but seemingly to a lesser extent. It should be understood that everyone is going to have to sacrifice a bit for the good of the environment or in a very short number of years not only Amherst but this entire nation is going to be in a very deep, if not irreversible, ecological crisis. This is the place to start, and it won't take very long for people to acclimate themselves to the use of a mass transit system if it becomes a reality. Procrastination only prolongs the amount of time it will take to adjust.

III. Students and their representatives.

Almost the entire undergraduate and graduate student bodies here are guilty of a serious mistake in this as in other cases - not giving a damn. For this they deserve whatever they get, since they didn't stand up and scream for what was theirs (input into governance) when it was being taken away from them. It easily reminds one of a microcosm of the nation, in which people idly stand by while the government strips them of every power which is rightfully theirs.

As far as student representatives go there is also a lot to say, and 95% of it concerns the President of the Student Government. The Student Senate's only problem is it's usual confusion in trying to deal with anything, but that is minor in this case compared with the errors of the SGA President, Nick Apostola.

It seems that Apostola, the only representative of UMass/Amherst students on the Board of Trustees, released a statement of his concern Monday about the aforementioned committments of the Administration to ecology and input into University governance. A little too late, Nick, although we appreciate your finally coming around five months after the controversy started. Because the fact is that where it really counted, when the present proposal came before the Trustees early this summer, Nick Apostola voted FOR the plan, and hen spent the summer privately discrediting the work of his colleagues on the problem, saying that they were wasting their efforts and should get on to more important things.

Apostola is too interested in being a politician, convinced, we suppose, that politics is the only route to getting things done. With that attitude and the incredible blunder of his Trustee vote, which by the way is construed by many Trustees as the voice of the students, it seems only fair to invite Apostoal to get the hell out of office, or to get it together REAL quick, while there's still someone left ready to forgive him. From this perspective it'll be difficult to trust him for an awful long time.

IV. The young Worker's Liberation League

This group burst onto the scene of the controversy just days ago, after five months. Just as our secret, from here they look like a bunch of political opportunists, although their leafletting was helpful to the rally. The best thing to do really is just ignore them.

V. A proposal which hopefully will help.

Simply stated, here's how it goes:

For no more than three years, and with a promise of substantial decreases after that time, parking rates will take a big jump. Keep in mind that this is a student suggesting this, and students here now stand to gain the least, since they'll never see the fruits of this plan. Anyway, with the increased revenues from the hike build new lots, close up the core campus to cars, and expand the bus system to Northampton, Belchertown, and South Deerfield.

After three years the prices go down. Buses sell advertising to raise revenues and makes up the rest with fares. If a person lives more than 3/4 of a mile from a bus route that person can register his/her car on campus for a nominal fee. If a person living 3/4 of a mile or less from a route still wants to take his/her car to campus, that person ought to pay through the nose for the privilege.

Buses used on campus ought to be plentiful enough to make getting around easy. All buses ought to be clean and efficient in keeping to their time schedules, or nothing will ever be accomplished.

And last, people ought to abide by the system and stop being enslaved by their cars. In the end, the issue is much bigger than the present hassles. It's the whole ecology issue, and that, potentially, is our lives.

No More Free 95¢ Drinks

Last night, while walking aimlessly through the Campus Center, I decided (as I usually do when walking aimlessly through the Campus Center) to stop in at my home away from home, the Bluewall. After waiting in line for a relatively short time, I found myself face to face with a grinning bouncer who was repeatedly uttering the phrase, "Top of the Campus card". At that point it dawned on me that I had forgotten to obtain that little sticker that goes on the back of one's I.D. card, and I explained my situation to the grinning bouncer.

Still grinning, the man explained to me that I couldn't get in without the sticker and that I should purchase one as soon as possible for the mere price of one dollar. By this point, the man in line behind me, becoming quite impatient with the whole affair, informed the grinning bouncer that I was with him and could therefore get in with his sticker. I thanked the man and proceeded into the Bluewall.

Now this little story might appear interesting (or whatever) but the crux of the matter is that the Campus Center has just found another way of ripping us off-that being the "Top of the Campus Club". It used to be that when a person obtained his or her "Top of the Campus Club Card", that person also received a slip entitling him or her to a free 95 cents drink. This allowed the Top of the Campus to retain the status of a club, while not ripping the students off for another dollar. However, the practice of the 95 cents drink has ceased and now it becomes clear that the Campus Center is making an extra ten thousand dollars or so, in addition to the already exorbitant Campus Center fee.

The "Top of the Campus Club card" is just one example of how the university is ripping off the students this year. Another major source of ripping off this year comes in the form of the parking tax, which is probably the most discriminatory and senseless tax the university has imposed to date. Good parking spots should not be limited to the rich, for often, those who need parking the most are those who can least afford it. Furthermore, the additional parking lots in the peripheral regions of campus are a worthless and unnecessary threat to the environment.

A third instance of student rip-offs is none other than the Dining Commons, which can only be described this year as going from disgusting to unbearable. Not only is the food worse than ever, but there is now only one choice afforded to the students. At $2.40 per meal (under the ten meal plan), it certaintly doesn't seem worth it.

There are countless other instances that the average student encounters daily that drive him to pull out his hair and curse to the sky. If the administration doesn't do something soon to rectify this situation, then it will drive the students away from their university and force them to revolt.

Supporting Trade Union Struggles

To The Editor:

Four to five thousand Chicanos, Puerto Ricans, Blacks, and whites of the United Farmworkers Union have been arrested in California and neighboring states in just the summer months of '73. The capitalist press has virtually ignored the daily beatings and macings of these peoples. These times of increasing centralization of power under the Nixon administration, and total integration of corporate interests with those of the government are leading to a heightening stage of fascism. That these atrocities are not protested by the people at large only indicate the alienated state of the crisis ridden populace.

The importance of supporting progressive trade union struggles such as the United Farmworkers must be emphasized. This union, inspite of the Meany bureaucracy, is fighting for the day-to-day survival of the peoples of colour. The daily crisis of all peoples is easily seen by the outrageous increases in food prices. The agri-business monopolies not only exploit their own workers but are bringing to starvation or malnutrition all peoples of the working class. It is at this time that the so-called "middle class" must align itself to either the interests of the bourgeoisie which is leading even the middle class to a sustenance or maintainance of existence level, or the working class. The general alienation of youth, and the disillusionment of adults with the underhanded tactics of the Nixon administration must lead to either a generally apathetic or submissive populace or an increase in the progressive elements of the working class.

Not only is the lettuce boycott in need of your support, but grape contracts previously awarded to the UFW are being "sweethearted" by the teamsters union and a grape boycott is again inevitable. If we do not stand up now, for our rights and for the rights of others, America shall fall into the hands of fascism and corporate control.

Reduce Pain, Increase Pleasure

To The Editor:

To me, the Amherst area is geographically one of the most beautiful areas on earth. It has a Greek flavor about it. When in Los Angeles, I felt, (take away the ugliness asphault, gasoline fumes, and the design of the city) this could be Paradise.

In view of the incredible potential and beauty of this area and with my mind's eye looking back in time to what happened to Los Angeles, I would like to offer some suggestions to improve the quality of life. These suggestions are aimed at helping create an understanding of how people can harness the vast productive potential of America and use this to create civilizations and cultures which encourage beauty and truth and personal liberty. "One word of Truth outweighs the world." Stop the world and look at Nature. Then look at what has been done to Nature. Then think about what can be done with Nature. We are living in a Divine Comedy and it is my belief that the role of the individual should be to reduce pain and increase pleasure in whatever context.

I believe it evident that the origins of individual unhappiness and both physical and mental disorders are in many of the insane developments in the dream worlds of engineering, architecture, and city and rural planning. I propose the following ideas:

1-Collective use and ownership of automotive machinery.

2-expenditure of money and energy wasted on individual automotive machinery on public transportation machinery and culinary delights. I am an advocate of the Walking Power in this time of Energy Crisis.

3-Abandonment of Cubicle Housing designs in favor of something more conducive to individual expression and creativity.

4-Thinking of the Amherst area in terms of a National Educational Resource Area. Or even a World Educational Resource Area. Think Cosmic.

5-The poetics of machinery. Let us not turn our backs on machinery. Let us try to understand machinery and use it in beneficial ways.

This Is Life, Baby

To The Editor:

The Victorian age is over. The hinderence of social progress is people who are of your own mind's thoughts. Persons who are trying to shake childhood-instilled, puritan ideals, and venture forth to the land of self-expression produce a needless guilt: but why do they have to release their anxieties on us in the form of preaching?

I applied to this college because it was deemed akin to my life-style. A place to get out what you put in, in any respect. My new found emotions for this place are typical of my peers. We have found a sense of freedom, though mummy and dadums still pay the bills, the miles between us can't be measured by mere yardsticks. And any like me who've come from even a semi-restrictive way of life under the roof of parents and their rules experience a pendulum swing, and we swing the opposite way. We will prostitute out position, take full advantage of our new liberal life--all in the name of finding ourselves. In time we will find our own little niche and realize where our limits for enjoyment truly lie.

I haven't your great experience nor benefit of time at UMass, but the name Campus Center, to me conjures up a place of, for, and by the people of the campus, the residents of this "city" whose buildings, dorms, and CENTERS, reflect their own selves. I truly hope for this--a little honesty is also what I came here to find, and it'd be nice to know it already exists. Which is more than I can hope to find with you. Just where do you get off with the title "Getting High, Getting Laid"! You write words you know appeal to a student's mind, words guaranteed to catch the eye, and then you follow it all with a hypocritical story. Rip-off capitalism wants you!

I can't see covering up for "appearances sake." People get high, people get laid, this is life, baby. I'd be bullshit to know college is just another school/factory hiding behind pseudo-morality, closing its eyes to people's true behavior.

People should be made aware of pros and cons of anything they undertake. Any and all information and/or "supplies" should be made available on sex and drugs. It is up to the individual to decide what or what not to listen to. It is time to stop treating college students as sheep. Cut the crap, Joyce, you do your thing...

Sex, drinking, smoking and capitalism and all the other deadly sins are going to be around long after you bite the dust.

Employees Need Cars

To The Editor:

I do not understand why the University administration insists on making the employees, who run this place, pay for a change in student parking policy. Now that the draft is over (hopefully), students come here by choice. The University employee on the other hand has to make a living.

Excluding commuters for a moment, students don't need to have private transportation because they live in dormitories on campus. This is not true for the staff. Living off campus they need transportation to and from campus, and barring an efficient bus network, in their own automobiles. They are a captive audience and are being forced to pay for parking of cars that are luxury items.

As for commuters, they freely and gratefully choose to live off campus. The price we have to pay is small for the benefits derived. Just because more and more students choose to have cars why should those who make their education possible have to pay to park their transportation to campus?

For Residents Only

To The Editor:

After going through the usual Freshmen hassles and realizing that the housing office ignores everything you ever requested, I settled myself in my room. I figured in a place as massive as this one, there must be a Darkroom available for me to use. I called the photo center and no one seemed to know anything (a common reply to most questions you ask anyone around here).

My next step was to call the head resident at Moore house. He abruptly informed me that the darkroom in Moore house was exclusively for residents. When I told him I lived in southwest, he got angry, said it was for his people only, and hung up.

Things are in a rather sad state when there are facilities on campus for those with special interests and they are unavailable for use.

I have done extended work in this field and had planned to continue it this year.

It is a loss not only to me, but the entire school that there is not more personal attention paid to those who have a small request.

To Moore house head resident - ENJOY YOUR DARKROOM.

With the onset of a strike of employees of the University, the normal amount of trash accumulated in Franklin Commons was increased by the use of paper plates and plastic utensils. To top off this pile of garbage, it was discovered that the gentlemen who pick it up and drop it off were on strike too. The pile remains in the basement of Franklin, becoming larger.

Price Ceiling Ends, Cattle Prices Hold

CHICAGO (AP)-Prices for live cattle remained steady Tuesday as apparent confusion reigned from the farm to the grocery store.

Retail and wholesale prices for beef, which was freed from a government-imposed ceiling Sunday, remained generally unchanged although there were some indications that price increases are not far off.

A spokesman for a large retail supermarket chain in Chicago said increases in beef probably won't come until Thursday. He said they would move gradually upward.

Other supermarket officials said they are watching the live cattle market to determine how prices will go since the controls were lifted.

"Everybody's trying to wait and see what kind of a turn there's going to be," said Rick Keene, an Agriculture Department marketing specialist.

The number of cattle sold at markets Tuesday was down from a week ago. Ordinarily, the decrease in supply would mean an increase in price, but this did not occur.

Live cattle prices generally held steady to slightly lower. Observers said this was due to uncertainty in the industry-from the farmer who doesn't know whether to bring his animals to market to the grocery retailer who didn't know how high an increase in beef the consumer would tolerate.

They said farmers are still withholding cattle from the market until they can detect a price trend.

Capital Destroys Old Papers

By JOHN B. LENGEL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Special "burn bags" and shredders regularly consume tons of outdated classified material and other documents considered sensitive in this security-conscious capital.

The classified papers may contain military, technical or security information.

The federal word destruction also includes drafts, memoranda, messages, message responses, studies, reports and just about any other stack of paper an official regards as sensitive.

L. Patrick Gray, the former acting director of the FBI, said he was unaware his office had a "burn basket." He told the Senate Watergate committee he burned some Watergate-related trash at his Connecticut home.

At the FBI, where all messages are regarded as confidential, all paper trash is collected in special "burn bags" from white-rimmed waste-baskets for burning by security men.

"We're a security agency and we don't let our material get into the general trash," says FBI spokesman Jack Heringten.

The supermarket-size paper bags are marked with red diagonal stripes and the words "Classified Burn."

The General Services Administration says it spent $31,000 for 900,000 official burn bags last year in the capital.

Regular, unmarked paper sacks are used and burn bags are also employed to collect material for shredders.

The Pentagon, Atomic Energy Commission, and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration are among the top security-conscious agencies with specific procedures for destroying material.

On occasion, a NASA man in suit and tie can be seen in suburban Arlington, stoking reams of papers into an air-jet spurred incinerator used by several federal agencies.

The Secret Service destroys White House information. However, Secret Service Spokesman John Murray, says: "So far as how, or what, or when, we won't comment."

Guru's Disciples To Speak

A program on the 'Knowledge' of Guru Maharaj Ji, 15 year old 'Perfect Master', will be held in room 162 of the UMass Campus Center at 7:30 pm, this Thursday, September 13. The program will feature talks on the 'Knowledge' by local disciples, music and a taped spiritual discourse by the 15 year old master.

Guru Maharaj Ji's appearance in Boston August 4 inspired over 500 people including several Amherst and Northampton residents to receive 'Knowledge', the fantastic meditative experience that is the basis of the spiritual movement growing around Guru Maharaj Ji. The Maharaj Ji's followers claim that the 'Knowledge' is neither a philosophy nor a religion, but a direct, tangible experience of man's essential life force, freely offered to all 'seekers of truth'.

Thursdays program will be the first in a semester-long series of discussions on Guru Maharaj Ji and his 'Knowledge'. All members of the Amherst-Northampton area are welcome to the programs. Admission is free.

For information, please call 1-527-6687.

Commentary

Ali's Next; May Be His Last

By DEAN TUCKER

If Ken Norton had walked the wilds of queer street upon direction of Muhammad Ali's jabs Monday night, yet another chapter in the great one's bizzare trip through the world of heavyweight would be pen ready.

The fact is, that although Ali occasionally held the hands of time unmoving with a display of dancing and jabbing reminiscent of the days when giants like sad Sonny Liston would rather sleep on the canvas than be surrounded by the floating stinging then Casius Clay. Ali's trip is nearing crash. The final jolt before he sleeps in boxing's annals will be when George Foreman gets a shot.

Rumor has it already that the two are talking about a nine or ten million bash in Brazil. An event of that size would settle several things, among them Foreman's reputed prowess and any complaints of poverty Ali has left to make.

Ali was a changed man as he said he would be. He was trim at 212 and pretty much kept his promise to keep moving on his toes. A few times Norton had him checkmated in the corner and began to pound away, but Ali managed to dance or clinch his way to safety or offense and keep Norton from using his masterful inside fighting ability to its lethal utmost. There is every possibility that Norton could drop Foreman if he gets his foot in the door.

Ali's victory puts him in a position he knows well. He is heavyweight boxing's main man. He keeps the sport alive and ostensibly lucrative with his constant activity. Why Foreman and Frazier duck him is open to several explanations all of which retard the game's ability to continue. But that will have to change. Foreman cannot continue to fight stiffs like Roman and maintain any respect as a champion. Frazier cannot duck Ali much longer. Norton deserves a fight with smoldering Joe. There is much heavyweight activity that should take place. It is a sad suggestion to think that everyone is waiting for Ali to lose his fight with age rather than go down swinging.

But fans will just have to wait for the money men to put up, or they'll never know if Ali can be shutup.

NEW KENSINGTON, Pa. (AP) - Have you ever wondered what happened to Knute Rockne's one and only football playbook, John L. Sullivan's boxing gloves or Jim Thorpe's letter sweater from Carlisle? Or how about the Boston Braves' uniform Babe Ruth wore as he closed out his baseball career?

These sports items, and many more, have found their way into Joel Platt's house in Monroeville, Pa.

Platt, an avid collector of sports memorabilia, has spent 30 years building his stockpile of coveted items. The collection numbers more than a million momentoes from sports immortals.

"My goal is to create a sports immortals museum, an all-sports hall of fame in a tourist location, and to bring these sports stars to life with the use of wax figures and all the modern audio-visual effects," said Platt.

Robinson, DP's Sink Sox 8-3

BALTIMORE (AP) — Brooks Robinson's three-run homer capped a five-run third inning rally and Baltimore's defense turned over four double plays, pacing the Orioles to a 8-3 victory over the Boston Red Sox Tuesday night.

The triumph gave the Orioles a 5 1/2 game lead in the American League East with a seven-game bulge in the loss column.

Robinson's ninth homer of the baseball season, off Marty Pattin, 13-14, followed a two-run bases-loaded single by Don Bayler.

All of the scoring came after Al Bumbry beat out an infield single for one of his four hits and was forced for the second out. A ground rule double by Tommy Davis and a walk to Boog Powell leaded the bases for Bayler.

Bumbry, who has gone 15-for-21 in his last five games, tripled home a run in the fourth and scored on a single by Rich Coggins which chased Pattin.

Dave McNally, 16-14, eased out of a first inning bases-loaded jam when Orlando Cepeda hit a double-play grounder.

Two more twin killings ended the second and fourth innings, and another came in the fifth after Bob Montgomery doubled and scored on a single by Doug Griffin.

USC, Nebraska Top Pigskin Poll

By ODELL HANSON
Associated Press Writer

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) - Nebraska moved up to the No. 2 spot behind defending national champion Southern California in The Associated Press' first regular-season football poll Tuesday, but Coach Rom Osborne was far from ready to stake any kind of a claim to a third national title in four years for his Cornhuskers.

"We appreciate the honor but at this time of year it's rather nebulous," said the first-year head coach, successor to Bob Devaney.

"We have played one game so I guess there's a little bit to go on. The only rating that's very meaningful is the one at the end of the season."

Early scheduling gave Nebraska the jump on other potential title contenders and the Huskers made the most of national television exposure by subduing UCLA 40-13 Saturday. It moved Nebraska from fourth in pre-season balloting, to second, and dropped UCLA from 10th to 16th.

Crew Looks To Build Toward Even Bigger Year

Unfortunately, it went pretty much unnoticed. Now is as good a time as any to expose it. And although it may be news to you, the University of Massachusetts Crew team did win the Small College National Championship this spring at the Dad Vail Regatta in Philadelphia this June. And yes, it made the front page of the New York Times Sports Section.

Much to our despair, the University of Massachusetts Crew team is not recognized as a varsity sport. That's too bad. Most small college national champs are. But, at any rate, to repeat as national champs, the new team needs help.

There will be a general recruitment meeting tonight for all candidates, including interested freshmen (no rowing experience needed), in SBA 120 tonight at 7:30. A rowing film will be shown and members of the Crew Club and the coaches will be on hand to discuss UMass Crew in depth.

Informal workouts will start at the end of the week in preparation for the first race of the fall season; the Head of the Charles Regatta, on Oct. 21st in Boston.

Yes, Pat Keenan was great in a Minuteman uniform. But will he ever be seen performing his heroics in a Bruins uniform. Only time will tell as he worksout at the B's training camp in Fitchburg. Needless to say, in the play above, Keenan scored. Pat is the UMass all time hockey scoring leader.

Keenan, Flaherty; B's Hopefuls

By BILL BALLOU

FITCHBURG — Mixed in with the Bep Guidolins, Don Awreys, Bobby Orrs and Phil Espositos were the Peter Gaws, the Gordie Clarkes, the P.J. Flahertys and the Pat Keenans.

Those who had made it and those who hoped to.

Orr and Esposito were there, at the Bruins rookie tryout camp, to test wounded knees and try to strengthen legs weakened by too many days of injury-forced inactivity.

Keenan and Flaherty, both ex-UMass hockey stars, were fighting for a handful of jobs open with the Bruins (highly unlikely), the Braves (possible), or the Dayton Gems (good chance). There are about 40 other people, equally hopeful, battling the UMies for a chance at today's big money.

Flaherty, a goaltender, had a tryout with the Rochester Americans of the American Hockey League last fall, and while he played a couple of periods for them in an emergency role, got cut and spent the season with the Fitchburg Hornets of the New England League.

He's back and hoping to land a job with the Braves, so he can play in his hometown. He thinks he's got a decent shot. There are six pros in front of him, and four amateurs in camp with him. One of them, Peter Crosbie, played last year in Canadian Junior A (St. Catherines) and was drafted by the B's. He didn't look too sharp in Tuesday's workout, and Flaherty said that he didn't look all that impressive Monday either.

If Crosbie's the best of the lot, then Flaherty stands a good shot at making it through tryout camp. And if he does, then he stands an equally good shot at breaking into one of the pro rosters.

The Bruins have a couple of guys like Don Wallis and Chuck Goddard, who can be had, although it still is highly unlikely that Flaherty will end up as high as the Braves.

As of mid-afternoon Tuesday he'd only played once, in Mondays scrimmage, and in that one he gave up five goals. But Flaherty never worries and he figures he's going to do all right.

Keenan, on the other hand, said he hadn't been feeling good and seemed discouraged by his play.

"I'm taking a terrible beating physically," he said. "I'm not used to the hitting and if I do something stupid like turn my head for a second, Bam!"

"But I'm learning every day, and starting to pick things up," he continued. "I've got to, because there's only three days left."

However, the record setting All-American looked reasonably good, though not sharp, in morning drills, and certainly played better in the ten minute scrimmage than the majority of the other hopefuls.

Another UMass alumnus, Don Riley, is trying out with the California Golden Seals at their camp in Canada. As of this writing he hasn't sent in a "progress report."

The Bruins are training this year at the Wallace Civic Center in Fitchburg, and the rookie camp started Sunday and will run until the end of the week, when the big boys come in.

A few, Orr, Esposito, Cashman, and Brooks are on hand for daily workouts, but the big action in the day comes at 3:30 when the two separate sections of rookies scrimmage.

If you're thinking of going up, admission is 50¢. But don't bother asking directions, because you can't get there from here.

Banned At UMass

UMass football games will not be televised over cable t.v. this season as was previously announced by WUMV TV station director Marty Kelley. The video-tape network saw its plans thwarted when UMass athletic director Frank McInerney stepped in and refused to give the school's consent to the cable television broadcasts.

Kelley had made verbal commitments with several cable t.v. stations throughout the state and had signed a written contract with the Blue Wall on campus to show the tapes of the UMass football tames on Sunday nights.

McInerney may seem to some to be a heartless villain for stopping WMUA TV's plans, but he does have some good reasons against letting this product go on cable television.

McInerney explained to me that Marty Kelley had talked to him about videotaping UMass football in three major steps: First, Kelley went to him and asked him if they (WUMV TV) could film the games as an educational experience for the crew. The A.D. went along with this. Next, Kelley went to him and asked him if he could show the films on the Blue Wall screen on Sunday nights, as a service to the UMass community. Again, McInerney gave his O.K. And then Kelley suggested the idea of showing the games on cable t.v. around the state. Here is where McInerney got off.

McInerney would not allow this amateur product to be shown outside the UMass community and in my opinion, he had some very good reasons.

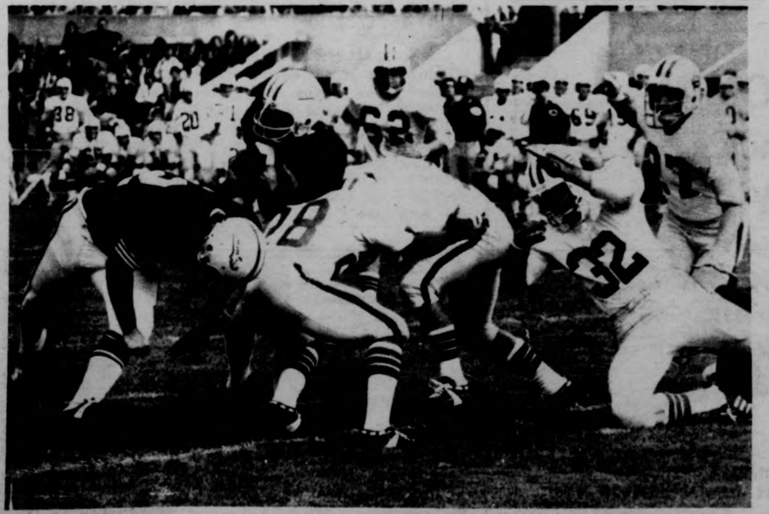
First, there was the problem of allowing a product which he had never before seen, be shown throughout the state. Whatever depicts UMass becomes representative of UMass, he rationalizes. The amateur quality of the videotapes would reflect directly on the University; the film would be black and white, the camera work and the rest of the production would not be up to the level that the average sports fan is accustomed to.

Also, McInerney expressed a concern that if UMass should have a poor season record-wise, their image could be hurt around the area. It may then prove to be a difficult task to build that image back up.

And then there is the possibility of getting commercial television to broadcast the UMass games in the future, which would bring in some money to the football program which cable t.v. could not offer.

Whether most of these excuses are legitimate or not, McInerney did I believe, make the right decision. Marty Kelley just went about the whole thing with his eyes looking straight ahead and did not look into those little, important matters such as contracts, insurance, and getting the approval of the university.

The idea that WUMV TV is committed to do, "to present UMass to the rest of the community" is a fine idea, but I still get the feeling that everything was just thrown together.



No, this isn't a touchdown play. It's not even a short gainer. Jerry Mondalto just doesn't have enough to get around all those white jerseys. Well, better luck next time fella. Blocking assignments will have to improve for the Minutemen to begin winning ways.

Parking Not Enforced Till October 1st

By MIKE KNEELAND

University and union representatives agreed in a two-hour meeting yesterday to ask the State Attorney General for an advisory opinion on the legality of the new parking system.

The University will not enforce the new parking system until Oct. 1, and will meet with union officials after the Attorney General renders his opinion to discuss parking fees.

Administration officials said they were confident the Attorney General would rule in their favor.

At the meeting, UMass officials also said they would not take disciplinary action against union leaders for calling the strike nor penalize workers fearful to report to work during the strike.

They hadn't decided, however, whether or not workers who participated in the strike would be paid for the work they missed.

Both administration and union officials were pleased with the meeting's dialogue. University representatives said they are looking forward to improved relations with the union.

Carol Drew, president of Local 1776, said after the meeting that she was displeased with the student response to the strike.

"We did what we did for the students as well as ourselves," she said. "I've tried hard in the past to unify the workers and student body

Food Costs — Any Suggestions?

By Stephen von Lichtenberg

The change in food service policy instituted on the first day of this semester is the result of tremendously increased food costs.

Each year food services prepares a budget predicated on the number of meal tickets it expects to sell balanced against its fixed costs (i.e. maintenance, labor, power, etc.) and the cost of the food necessary to provide the students with a standard menu. Once a budget has been passed the food service managers know almost to the dollar how much money they will have to implement the menu.

Last year's budget included a 10% increase in the money allocated for the purchase of food. "The increase to this point in time has been 35.5%," according to Mr. Joel Stoneham, Director of Food Services.

A meal costing $1.00 last year would cost $1.35 this year. Last year's budget allowed for an average cost per meal of 69¢ which Ms. Cappadona, official at the Food Services Dept., said "is a livable figure at last year's prices."

In order to bring current costs in line with this figure, food service must change some of its policies and services.

There are two options which the students will choose from in the

The Wellman Document, permitting students to "have primary responsibility for services and activities which are designed primarily for students", was the main topic of discussion at last night's first Student Senate meeting of the fall semester. The Trustee Document was passed April 4 and will be implemented for the first time this academic year.

With reference to the present parking issue, student Trustee Nick Apostola contends that the administration is not using the rules in the document. He feels that although the Board has passed the policy and it was supposed to be implemented this fall, it has not been implemented yet but should be. Apostola believes that the administrators are "living in the spirit of the document sometimes, and not living in the spirit sometimes." He argues that they should be in the spirit of the document at all times.

Other topics discussed included the need for a chairperson for the Student Matters Committee. The chairperson of the Budget Committee also resigned but David Booker said that the Budget Committee would be merged with the Finance Committee.

An announcement was made about President Robert C. Woods' visit to the campus in the near future. The exact date is not known.

Booker informed the representatives of the elections that would be coming up. Apostola reported the elections would be held October third, fourth and fifth. The week after the elections, Apostola plans to have workshops introducing the government procedures used at UMass.

Jim Lindsey, chairperson of the Campus Center Director Search Committee for the Board of Governors, and the Senate representative on the Board, reported on the progress made over the summer. The major action taken was the hiring of John Corker for the position of Director of the Campus Center.

Corker was introduced to the Senate and spoke briefly of his impression of his duties. He was glad to be working at the University with students that are a "great and conscientious bunch."

Outreach representative, Bill Burke, reviewed the purposes of his program in order to spur interest in the Senators. He informed the group of the programs in existence, such as interns in Washington and students involved in an assortment of community services for semester credit. He did not want to seek recruitments so much as to "make the students aware of the program."

Nick Apostola reported on other developments made with the administration over the summer besides the Wellman Doctrine. His first comment was one of disapproval towards Vice Chancellor Gage's proposal to set up a committee of students to advise him. It was Apostola's contention that such a committee, if chosen by Gage, would be made up of students of Gage's liking, and as a result, Gage would only be hearing what he wanted to hear.

Apostola mentioned the annual convocation which will be held in the Campus Center Auditorium, Tuesday September 18, at 2:30. He said, "you'll probably have to cut class for this one."

A motion will be made at a future meeting to set up a Steering Committee for a Constitution Convention which Apostola wants to have late in October or the beginning of November. The idea is to discuss and develop new student government systems and models.

The final topic covered in Apostola's presentation was the Policy Councils Act which will be brought up for vote soon. By putting students on committees with power to oversee administrative committees and boards, Apostola said it "should give students a pretty good grasp of what's happening with student money."

The last report was given by treasurer, Paul Hamel. He mentioned the copy of the Fiscal Year '73 Account Activity Report and the need for it to be passed by the Senate at a future meeting. Approved at this meeting was the allocation of $2,000 to a night bus service around the campus.

Radio City Stays Open

NEW YORK (AP)-Radio City Music Hall, the "showplace of the nation" that is a must item on many tourist itinerarie, won a five-day reprieve Wednesday from a threat it would soon go dark, perhaps permanently.

The reprieve came when negotiators for Radio City agreed to extend to next Monday night a contract settlement deadline with three unions. The original deadline had been midnight Wednesday.

The management of the 6,200 seat theater says it can no longer hold out against spiraling costs and a dwindling audience for its four-a-day fare of a first-run movie and a live stage show.

A threatened lockout of its employes was a response to failure to come to contract terms with three of the theater's unions.

The Music Hall management is demanding flexibility to book other sorts of entertainment during slack periods of the year. To do this, it must get out of contract guarantees of 52 weeks of work a year for its performers.

On-stage performers, including the world-famous Rockettes, agreed to accept lay-offs in a new contract late Tuesday night.

The musicians union, representing the Music Hall's 76-piece symphony orchestra, so far has refused; stagehands and wardrobe attendants also have not come to terms.

From a profitable venture during most of its four-decade existence, the Music Hall has limped along in recent years, subsidized to some degree by Rockefeller Center. The center reported the theater lost $500,000 last year and the outlook was for a $1 million deficit in 1973.

The Music Hall's family-type movies and lavishly-mounted stage shows have attracted 230 million paying customers since it opened in 1932.

Who's Josh?

Lassie Get Out!

By SHARON HUGHES

Ever hear about the dog around the Hatch last year who was trained to take twinkies from the counter and deliver them to its owner? Well, no more. The dog catcher is coming to campus.

A part-time dog catcher will begin patrolling the Campus Center and Student Union this Friday according to Dudley J. Bridges, manager of the CC Building Operations. The catcher will pick up all dogs--with or without leash.

All pets except seeing eye dogs are prohibited in the CC/SU complex by a CC Board of Governors ruling of last July. The Board is a 15 member student body with power to determine policy for both buildings.

Its decisions have the full force of law. A Board ruling could be overturned by a student referendum called by the Student Senate.

Prior to the Board's action this summer, the CC/SU operated under a "leash law" whereby only pets without a leash would be apprehended by the catcher.

But after the Board received complaints from janitors, the student body voted unanimously to bar unleashed dogs as well.

Most janitors can relate several funny stories about the dogs they've seen. Like the one that appeared to wait for lunchers at the Hatch who bought food but forgot the drink. While you got the drink, he was eating your lunch.

However, they can also tell you some unpleasant experiences. For instance, the time consuming, not to mention nauseating task of cleaning up after dogs.

Supervisor of janitors, Charles Lehman, said the union contract allows them to refuse cleaning the mess, but so far none have exercised the option.

Besides creating additional duties, dogs are a frequent source of complaints from people who are chased, bothered and on occasion, bitten by dogs.

"To deny they are a problem is ridiculous--they are a problem. I'm not so sure the student interest in the long run won't be served", said Jim Lindsey, chairperson of the Board of Governors.

Both Lindsey and Bridges agree that the administration is at fault because they don't closely enforce the regulation against pets in the dorms.

Lindsey said that so far the Board has received very few complaints about the pet prohibition.

The COLLEGIAN asked several dog owners to comment:

--"I can see it in the cafeteria but I don't see any reason why dogs can't be allowed to walk from one end of the Campus Center to the other."

--"I waited for a long time to get just the right dog to buy. I found one over the summer only to come back to school and be prohibited from keeping him with me. I can see the janitors point of view, but there are good dogs as well as bad dogs. And they should be allowed in the building with their owners."

In fact, not all janitors are opposed to allowing dogs in the building. Some favor it with no conditions imposed. Others said they only object to dogs without leashes or without owners.

"I love dogs; have a few of my own. What I hate to see is the way some owners mistreat their dogs. I've seen dogs tied up to a post outside the Blue Wall for hours while the owner is inside; or locked for hours in a room", a janitor said.

The controversy goes on, but the dog catcher, Guilford Hanks will be in the buildings for about four (around lunchtime) beginning this Friday. When asked how much he was paid and whether he was in the kennel business Hanks replied, "I don't care to be written about".

If the procedure that has been used for the past two years is again followed, dogs he has picked up can be retrieved by contacting Dr. Ruder, Market Hill Road, N. Amherst.

Get out? But who'd be Joe Cool in the Student Union? Besides the gang in the Hatch would be lost without me and what about my part-time job as a Bluewall bouncer?

Everywoman's Center Offers Project Self Workshops

This fall Everywoman's Center at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst is offering another series of Project Self workshops, by, for and about women. They begin the week of Sept. 24 and run through Nov. 16. Most meet for two hours once a week over an eight week period. There is a minimal charge, $18 for the eight weeks, and this fee is reduced for women on welfare.

The workshops sponsored through Project Self cover a broad range of areas related to the many aspects of women's lives. Each is designed and led by a woman from this area interested in sharing her special skills, concerns and interests with other women.

Sally O'Donnell, for example, found herself isolated at home with a young family and writing nothing more creative than a weekly grocery list. As a step out of that predicament and as a way of helping other women she and Kate Wenner, a free-lance writer, will be offering the workshop "Taking Pen in Hand." Their workship aims at exploring ways in which writing can help with personal growth and change. It is one of several being offered in the general area of "Exploring Our Creativity."

"Exploring Skills for Living" is another set of workshops of concern for women who wish to develop competence in daily matters of survival. "Backpacking and Hiking," "Carpentry, Our Style," and "Tae Kwan Do," a form of karate, are three of the workshops in this area.

"Exploring Our Cultural Identity" and "Exploring Alternatives" complete the general areas of Project Self workshops. Complete information on the offerings in these two sections as well as additional information on workshops on skills for living and creativity is available from Everywoman's Center at Munson Hall at UMass, telephone 545-0883. Registration will be Sept. 18 and 19, and many workshops have limited enrollments.

Activists To Plan Campaign Strategy

Political activists from across Massachusetts will meet in Framingham on Saturday to begin planning campaign strategy for next year's statewide elections.

The open meeting, which will take place at Framingham State College, is being organized by a group called the Ad Hoc Committee. Membership on the Committee includes such political figures as State Representative Barney Frank of Boston and former U.S. Senate candidate Thomas Boylston Adams of Lincoln.

Amherst resident Kenneth Mosakowski, who has been invited to attend the conference, is urging politically-active citizens in western Massachusetts to participate in the public strategy session. Mosakowski, who last year managed the successful campaign of State Representative James Collins (D-Amherst), feels that Saturday's open meeting "could begin to set in motion a process which will determine the outcome of not only next year's race for Governor but also contests for Secretary of State and Attorney General."

Mosakowski noted that "the Watergate scandal has 'turned off' so many people to politics that even honest candidates, campaigning on a sound, bread-and-butter platform, may find it difficult to make a significant impression on the voters in 1974."

"We must begin organizing now," he said, "to ensure that competent, progressive-minded candidates for statewide office will survive next year's primary elections so as to be able to offer the voters a real choice in November."

Persons desiring further information about the conference may contact Mosakowski at 253-7768.

Mitchell Wished Well

NEW YORK (AP) - Former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell, emerging from the federal courthouse where he and former Commerce Secretary Maurice H. Stans had just won a delay of their conspiracy trial, departed from his usual retisence when a well-wisher spoke up.

As Mitchell got into a waiting car after pressing through a crowd of spectators in Foley Square, a young woman teacher shouted to him: "Mr. Mitchell, you're right. I believe everything you've said."

Mitchell took his pipe out of his mouth and, in his only words to the crowd, said softly, "Thank you, dear."

B.U. Surplus

BOSTON (AP)-Boston University ended its 1973 fiscal year with its first surplus in three years, BU President John R. Silber said Wednesday.

The university reported it had a surplus of $611,000 June 30. That compares with deficits of $2.2 million in 1972 and $4.7 million in 1971.

The total budget of the university was $91.8 million in fiscal 1973. The fiscal 1973 budget had projected a deficit of $3.9 million.

Silber said the university achieved the favorable financial results "while improving the quality of academic programs and student life at Boston University."

Scattered Resistance To New Junta Continues

By ROBERT D. OHMAN
Associated Press Writer

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — The new military junta buried Salvador Allende on Wednesday and warned armed supporters of the dead Marxist president that they would be "shot on the spot if taken prisoner."

Scattered resistance to the regime continued and unofficial sources estimated that between 500 and 1,000 persons had been killed since the military revolt Tuesday.

Explosions were heard in some industrial neighborhoods and snipers, barricaded in office buildings, exchanged fire with military patrols in the streets below.

Six hundred leftists surrendered after a gunfight at the technical university near downtown Santiago, sources said. In another brief skirmish, soldiers moved in and occupied the large state-owned textile factory in the capital.

Officials said the new government expelled 150 Cuban extremists from the country Tuesday. They were excorted to the Argentine border.

Firm estimates of casualties were impossible to obtain since no movement was permitted in the city and no official figures were issued.

Many people have been stranded ever since the coup in office buildings and hotels — not allowed to return to their homes or to go out for food and drink. All businesses were closed and the streets were empty of civilians.

There were conflicting reports on the whereabouts of Allende's widow, who was believed to have returned recently from Mexico where she took part in relief work.

Newsmen received reports of gunfights between soldiers and armed workers occupying factories to protest the coup, which toppled the Western Hemisphere's first freely elected Marxist government.

Allende had called on workers at the start of the coup to occupy factories in defense of his three-year-old government. It was his last message. The military junta said Wednesday that the 65-year-old Allende, who dedicated his life to politics, had killed himself as troops closed in on the presidential palace.

Chile's ambassador to Britain, Alvaro Bunster, said in London that he doubted the junta's version. "I don't think President Allende committed suicide," he said. "If he is dead, he has been killed. Only a few weeks ago Allende said he would not commit suicide whatever happened."

The Peronist newspaper El Munde in Buenos Aires, Argentina, said it had learned from one of Allende's bodyguards that Allende was killed. Police officials threatened to "blow up buildings if necessary" to silence snipers.

Communications in the nation were erratic and it was impossible to determine conditions in other parts of the country, but the Junta said in a broadcast the nation of about 10 million people was returning to normal.

The military junta said that Allende had taken his life at 2 p.m. Tuesday as troops entered the downtown presidential palace after Allende forces surrendered. Tanks shelled the building and two air force jets hit it with bombs and rockets until Allende gave up.

A communique issued Wednesday afternoon said the first military patrol entering the building found Allende's body. It was taken to a hospital and a board of doctors pronounced Allende dead.

Allende was buried at noon Wednesday, the communique said, and only the immediate family attended. Early burial is normal in Latin America.

In his final radio broadcast, made early Tuesday morning as jets screamed overhead, Allende told the nation that he would fight on, "even at the cost of my life."

A police official said Allende shot himself once in the head with an automatic weapon that was a gift from prime minister Fidel Castro of Cuba, who spent a month in Chile in 1971. The official said the weapon was found beside Allende's body in a second floor dining hall.

The four junta members appeared briefly on television and announced some government plans. They said Congress would take an indefinite recess and diplomatic relations wuld be maintained with all presently recognized nations, except Cuba.

Two members of the new junta — Gen. Augusto Pinochet, army commander-in-chief, and Gen. Gustavo Leigh Guzman, air force commander — were named to their jobs two weeks ago by Allende, who hoped to keep the military loyal to his government. The two other junta members are Adm. Jose Toribino Merino, acting Navy commander-in-dhief, and Gen. Cesar Mendoza, head of the national police.

Grocery-Bag Bomb Injures 8

By PETER MUCCINI
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) - London's third and fourth bomb blasts in three days exploded Wednesday in a crowded shopping area and in the Bohemian Chelsea district. Eight persons were reported injured.

Six persons were hurt when a shopping-bag bomb blew up on Oxford Street at the offices of the Prudential Assurance Company. The explosion shattered windows of a clothing store on the ground floor.

Four of those injured were office girls hit by flying glass. Scotland Yard said none of the casualties was serious.

Another bomb exploded in Chelsea, scattering debris over lower Sloane Street and bringing ambulances screaming into Sloane Square.

Initial reports by firemen said two people were injured.

A warning that a bomb had been planted in the area was telephoned to the Press Association, a domestic news agency, 10 minutes before the explosion.

London has been the victim of more than 40 bomb incidents blamed on Irish extremists seeking to drive the British from Northern Ireland.

Unlike many earlier bombs, no advance warning was given for the Oxford Street bomb. Only the observant eye of a young stenographer raised suspicions.

Police cleared shoppers and passers-by from the area before the explosion 10 minutes later. Police began a hunt for a young man seen running away just after the blast.

The bomb was inside a gray and white striped paper bag. Sue Reilly, a 26-year-old Irish-born stenographer, spotted it through the gates of an elevator and raised the alarm.

"I noticed it because the floors are usually clear," Miss Reilly said. "Also I am a nervous person and these bombs really frighten me to death, so I am always on the look out for them."

The explosion came after Monday's blasts at Euston and King's Cross railroad stations in which 13 persons were injured. The Euston blast was set off by a bomb in a snack bar. A warning was given shortly before.

Witnesses said the King's Cross bomb was heaved into an unused ticket office by a baby-faced boy who looked "too young to shave."

Police believe the explosions, which have also erupted in Birmingham and Manchester, are the work of the die-hard Provisional faction of the Irish Republican Army.

The IRA has not claimed responsibility for the explosions or indicated whether it has extended its campaign from Northern Ireland to the British mainland.

Don't Jump!

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)-Golden Gate Bridge authorities have beefed up security to delay as long as possible the inevitable 500th fatal leap from the Western Hemisphere's most infamous suicide spot.

Authorities don't doubt someone will jump from the 6,451-foot span that stands at the gateway to San Francisco Bay.

Number 499 took the 240-foot plunge Monday.

Officials have stepped up security measures and tripled "rolling patrols" criss-crossing the bridge. Two television cameras installed in 1967 continue to scan the 4,200-foot main span from each of the 746-foot-tall towers.

Cadeters Ditch "The Silence"

WEST POINT, N.Y. (AP) — The Cadet Honor Committee at the U.S. Military Academy has voted to end the traditional but rarely invoked punishment known as "The Silence."

The ostracism imposed on honor code violators "remains a matter of individual decision now," said Cadet Richard H. Achwamb, the honor committee's chairman.

Schwamb said Tuesday that following an informal referendum conducted by the committee among the 4,200-member Corps of Cadets, the panel voted "to discontinue the formal sanctioning of the tradition of social ostracism known as 'the Silence.'"

"This is not a change to the cadet honor code, which states simply that a cadet will not lie, cheat or steal nor tolerate any cadet who does," said Schwamb, a senior from Silver Spring, Md.

"The Silence" provoked widespread public criticism when Cadet James J. Pelosi disclosed at last June's graduation that he had endured the tradition-backed isolation for 19 months.

Pelosi, from West Hempstead, N.Y., had been found guilty by the honor committee of completing a quiz answer after the examiner had given an order to stop. He denied the charge and his conviction was reversed on appeal, but the cadet corps nontheless applied "The Silence".

(SC2) QUINCY, Calif., Sept. 10 -- FAMILIAR SCENE AGAIN--Harley Hutchinson and helpers drive a herd of Herefords through the town of Meadow Valley in Northern California. With the lifting of the federal price freeze, cattlemen and retailers are speculating over what will happen to beef prices and are not predicting exactly how much they will rise.

Beef Prices Unsettled

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Shoppers used to pinching their pennies got a break at the supermarket Wednesday: plenty of beef at the meat counters and big sale signs in the windows.

The situation was still unsettled two days after the end of the beef price ceiling and the beginning of new regulations on other foods. But an Associated Press survey found that prices in most areas were stable and in a few cities there were declines.

"Mrs. Consumer has won the battle," said a New York meat wholesaler. He said more and more cattle was being slaughtered and there might be a glut on the market.

Stores in Hartford, Conn., advertised a variety of beef sales this week. Ground chuck, which had been $1.09 a pound, was on sale at 99 cents a pound and porterhouse steak was $1.79 a pound, compared to $1.99 earlier.

The Connecticut Agriculture Department said dairy prices were rising, with butter at $1.05 a pound, compared to 87 cents three weeks ago.

Leon Litchfield, a spokesman for the livestock market at Walterboro, S.C., said prices didn't seem to be affected by the lack of federal ceilings.

In some cases, store officials said they simply hadn't gotten new price lists from their suppliers. "I'm paying more for my beef, but the customers aren't," said Ron Pitts, manager of a Publix supermarket in Miami. "I can't raise my prices until I get new price sheets from the company and I don't have them yet. I could get new prices lists this afternoon or tomorrow and the prices will go up."

Watergate Hearings Resume Soon

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Seeking to wrap up its probe quickly, the Senate Watergate committee Wednesday voted unanimously to resume public hearings Sept. 24 and attempt to complete them by Nov. 1.

Chairman Sam J. Ervin Jr., D-N.C., said the panel would "expedite the proceedings by hearing witnesses with highly relevant testimony" only. He said the committee was "not responding at all to pressure" to keep the hearings from public view.

Committee aides were quick to note that Nov. 1 is only a target date and suggested that the committee won't stick to it if it uncovers dramatic new information about political sabotage and campaign financing in the 1972 presidential race.

These matters will come under scrutiny when the panel completes the Watergate phase of its investigation.

There is little question that committee senators have lost their taste for the long and detailed examination of the type they conducted into the Watergate break-in and White Hous cover-up. Before summer recess, they operated on a five-day weekly schedule of hearings; in the last six weeks of hearings, they hope to meet three days a week.

Committee sources gave various explanations. Sen. Edward J. Gurney, R-Fla., was known to feel the hearings had become destructive and served more to viligy the administration than enlighten the public.

Committee vice chairman Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., who perhaps gained the most politically from television exposure during the first round of hearings, reportedly was feeling the pressure from his Republican colleagues who believe that enough is enough.

If the networks decide to cover the future hearings live, Baker told reporters Wednesday, "that's their prerogative. If they decide not to, I certainly wouldn't be disappointed."

NBC said it might air live coverage of all or part of the hearings, or possibly opt for no live coverage at all, depending on the witness list.

CBS and ABC said they were undecided about live coverage.

Some committee sources say a general feeling now exists that the special Watergate prosecutor's office appears to be doing its job and that the committee's hearings at this stage can only interfere with other investigations.

The pattern for the next round of hearings won't be decided until next week when the committee meets again to approve a witness list.

The hearings recessed Aug. 7.

Health Bill Vetoed

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon's veto of a health services bill was sustained today by the House. He thus remained undefeated in five veto battles with Congress this year.

The vote was 273 to 143 with one member voting "present", or five votes short of the required two-thirds majority. Although the Senate had voted to override the veto, the action by the House means the bill is dead.

The bill would have set up new programs of federal aid for developing emergency medical systems and would have required continued operation of Public Health Service hospitals in eight cities.

The administration had been pushing for phasing out some care at Public Health Service facilities, and has started contracting with community hospitals for the care of PHS patients. The hospitals are being kept open under a federal court injunction.

Nixon Sympathetic To Tax Increase

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal Reserve Board chairman Arthur Burns said today President Nixon is "rather sympathetic to a tax increase."

Nixon said Monday in his second state of the Union address to Congress that "this administration continues its strong opposition to a tax increase."

In an appearance before the House Banking Committee, Burns was asked by Rep. Henry Reuss, D-Wis., if the Federal Reserve had gotten adequate support for its inflation-fighting campaign from the White House.

"I am very much encouraged in talking to the President in that he is not only continuing his struggle to restrain spending. . .but I found him rather sympathetic to a tax increase," Burns said.

No followup questions were asked by anyone on the committee and Burns made no other mention of the tax increase.

Asked by a reporter during a recess if he expected the President to ask for a tax increase, Burns said "I would not put in terms of expectations but I would not be surprised."

Parolee Arrested For 69' Robbery

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) —Parolee Lloyd Estabrook was ordered held without bail Wednesday following his arrest Tuesday night on a fugitive-from-justice warrant.

The warrant was issued in Burlington, Mass., in 1969 in connection with a bank robbery.

Estabrook was committed to the New Hampshire prison May 22, 1970, after being given a 7-to-10-year sentence for robbery in Rockingham County. He was paroled July 24, 1973.

He pleaded innocent to the fugitive charge in District Court on Wednesday and a probable-cause hearing was set for Oct. 9.

State Prison and parole officials said they had not known of the outstanding warrant.

Estabrook was with paroled murderer Frederick Martineau last week when Martineau was arrested on a drunkenness charge and returned to the State Prison.

Martineau and Russell Nelson, who were convicted for a 1959 murder in Nashua, were paroled Aug. 5.

Gov. Meldrim Thomson has filed suit to revoke the paroles. Concord Police Chief Walter Carlson said the warrant to pick up Estabrook was presented to him by state police Tuesday.

He said police in Massachusetts recognized Estabrook from a news story and sought his arrest.

Former Prison Warden Parker Hancock said he had been unaware of the outstanding warrant, although the prison normally would have been informed of it.

"I think it's very unfair to him at this point," Hancock said. "It's unfair to his employer and all concerned."

Hancock said Estabrook had an "excellent record" at the prison, and had done well as a prison trusty, on work release and in his job after being paroled.

U.S. Biding Time With Chile

By GEORGE GEDDA
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Amid official denials of U.S. involvement in Chile's military coup, the State Department Wednesday appeared disposed to bide its time before making contact with the new government leadership in Santiago.

The sensitivity of Washington's relationshp with the new military junta was underscored by charges from leftist groups here and in Latin America that the responsibility for Tuesday's ouster of President Salvador Allende lay not in Santiago but in Washington.

Demonstrations with anti-American overtones were reported in Argentina, Mexico and Costa Rica, among other countries. In Washington, 150 demonstrators gathered near the White House bearing placards saying, "Let Chile's Democracy Live."

State Department spokesman Paul Hare said the coup was a Chilean "internal matter" and that no elements of the U.S. government were involved.

Based on past experience, State Department officials said it was not surprising that the U.S. was accused of complicity in the takeover.

It was clear that Washington initially identified with the Junta. To do otherwise, one official said, would only feed speculation that the United States inspired the plot. It was understood that Washington would allow several other governments to recognize the junta before it makes its move.

Prior to recognizing a new government, the State Department normally determines whether the regime intends to observe its international obligations and is in effective control of the country. On the latter point, reports of widespread resistance in Chile to the new leadership raised questions about its capacity to govern.

Hotel Declared Fire-Hazard

By JACK ALEY
Associated Press Writer

PORTLAND, Maine (AP)-Maine's largest hotel must correct 45 flaws before it will be reasonably safe against fire, a Portland fire official says.

The assessment of the Sheraton-Eastland Hotel here came only two days after a pre-dawn fire at the venerable Hotel Sedgwick in Bath claimed four lives. The cause of that fire was attributed to a faulty pipe joint.

Lt. George Howard of the Portland Fire Prevention Bureau told The Associated Press he checked the 700-plus room downtown establishment last month after a fire on its sixth floor gutted one room and caused considerable smoke and water damage.

"I worked my way carefully through the whole building," Howard said. "In the event of a severe fire, there is the possibility of a big loss of life, especially in the old Congress Square section."

Most of the 340 rooms filled on a resident basis are in the old Congress Square section or in the more recently-built Eastland wing. These residents are predominantly senior citizens and some live there on contract from the Public Housing Authority. Many are invalid.

Howard said he was nearing completion of a report on the Eastland that recommends 45 safety improvements the hotel must implement to reduce fire hazards. The most important, he said, include:

—Replacing rotted fire hoses that are liable to burst as soon as water pressure is applied. Many of the hoses also are improperly hung and don't reach all the rooms on some floors.

—Fixing improperly installed rubbish and laundry chutes in which open metal doors could spread smoke from a basement fire to all parts of the building.

Divorce Law Challenged

BOSTON (AP) — The American Civil Liberties Union has gone to federal court to try to set a precedent for a "no fault" divorce statute in Massachusetts.

The ACLU brought the case on behalf of Myra and Robert Tumposky of Suffolk County, who allege that their marriage problems do not provide sufficient basis for a divorce on grounds mandated by state law.

According to the challenge to the state law, the Tumposkys tried to file for divorce on grounds of "irreconciable differences" but were refused by a state court.

Trial Lawyer Monroe L. Inker has been named a special assistant attorney general to represent the state in the case.

Colson Dropped As Watergate Witness

WASHINGTON (AP) - Former presidential counsel Charles W. Colson has been dropped as a witness before the Senate Watergate committee after his lawyer said Colson expected to be indicted by a federal grand jury.

Once the Watergate figure most anxious to publicly defend the Nixon administration, Colson was removed from the committee witness list at his own request, Senate sources said Wednesday.

The sources said Colson's lawyer, David I. Shapiro, told committee Chief Counsel Samuel Dash Tuesday his client expected to be indicted by a federal grand jury investigating the office burglary of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist.

Shapire apparently was informed of Colson's status by the office of Watergate special prosecutor Archibald Cox, which also is probing the Ellsberg burglary conspiracy. A Los Angeles county grand jury returned four indictments in the case last week.

Documents in the possession of both the Senate committee and the special prosecutor indicate that Colson was instrumental in having E. Howard Hunt hired by the White House to probe the Pentagon Papers case.

Senate Confirms OEO Nomination

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate today confirmed President Nixon's nomination of Alvin J. Arnett to be director of the embattled Office of Economic Opportunity, the antipoverty agency.

The vote was 88 to 3. A Republican conservative opposed Arnett on the grounds that he would not move fast enough to dismantle OEO; two Democratic liberals opposed him because they feared he was not really committed to the agency.

The three voting against Arnett were Sens. Carl T. Curtis, R-Neb., William D. Hathaway, D-Maine, and Edmund S. Muskie, D-Maine.

Nixon ordered last January that OEO be closed as of June 30 this year and named Howard Phillips acting director to carry out this directive.

Many of its functions were terminated and many employes discharged but Phillips' activities finally were stopped by a federal judge who held he was acting without authority.

State Senate Approves Park Bill

BOSTON (AP) - A $25 million bill creating a Massachusetts bicentennial corporation to develop state parks in the Holyoke Range and the Boston Harbor Islands was approved by the state Senate Wednesday on a 22-8 vote.

"I am at a total loss to understand how we tie in the Boston Harbor Island and the Holyoke Range with the Bicentennial," said Sen. David H. Locke, R-Wellesley.

He added that the Bicentennial Commission, which is planning the Massachusetts part of the celebration of the nation's 200th birthday, "has already squandered thousands of the taxpayers dollars" on frivolous projects including a three-volume history of the nation and manufacture of Bicentennial commemorative medalions.

"Well, I guess the taxpayer, weighted down under all these burdens, can look down, see his medallion, and say, "We won the war,' " Locke said.

"You know, I think if the men who fought in that historic battle could have looked ahead 200 years to see how it would be commemorated, they would have stayed home-they just wouldn't have gotten out of the sack," Locke said.

The town of Wellesley which Locke represents did stay in the sack," said Sen. Chester Atkins, D-Acton, who is chairman of the Bicentennial Commission. "In fact, they stayed in the sack during Bunker Hill, too."

"That's because the town of Wellesley didn't exist then," Locke retorted.

Atkins said that in addition to the development of the Holyoke Range for $5 million and the Boston Harbor Islands for $20 million, the Bicentennial will create more jobs for the state.

Consumers Gain A Point

By JIM LUTHER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Senate passed a major consumer-protection bill yesterday requiring that sellers state specifically what their warranties mean.

The bill, which now goes to the House, also expands the power of the Federal Trade Commission to deal with all unfair practices affecting consumers.

Passage was by voice vote.

The bill allows the seller of any product worth more than $5 to decide whether he will issue a warranty. If he issues the warranty, he must disclose whether it is a full guarantee or describe it in easily understood terms.

The minimum standard for any such warranty requires that the seller promise to replace or repair any malfunction or defect within a reasonable time without charge.

And if the product requires an unreasonable number of repairs during the warranty period, the consumer has the right to demand and receive a replacement.

A key feature of the bill concerns implied warranties.

It prohibits a supplier who warrants his product from disclaiming any implied warranties.

"Thus, the present misleading practice of using very limited express warranties to reduce consumer rights which would have been available but for the disclaimer of implied warranties is prohibited," said the Commerce Committee report recommending passage of the bill.

"The need for this legislation is urgent," said Sen. Frank E. Moss, D-Utah.

"The consumer today invariably is in for a rude shock when he seeks redress for a faulty product," Moss said. "He finds that the warranty does nothing more than limit the liability of the seller."

There was no stated opposition to the bill, although some senators were unhappy that an amendment offered by Moss on behalf of Sen. Vance Hartke, D-Ind., extending the measure to used-car dealers was tacked on without being considered by the committee.

Her early life's story was the basis for the Rogers and Hammerstein musical, "The Sound of Music."

ROME (AP) — The parents of the missing J. Paul Getty III have $100,00 in ransom they haven't been able to get rid of. They made another try Wednesday, addressing themselves to persons who may have kidnaped the youth two months ago.

"Wherever you are," read the latest appeal, "Make yourselves heard and contact the American envoy who has come to Italy a few days ago to solve the case. He has the money for ransom and is willing to stay in Rome another week. We hope that during this brief span of time, our anxiety will end."

Three days after Getty dropped out of sight July 9, an unidentified telephone caller told his mother he had been kidnaped and demanded ransom.

Belchertown Volunteers

Orientation To Begin

The Belchertown Volunteers will initiate their activities for the fall semester this Saturday with an orientation program which will be conducted by members of the Belchertown staff and followed by a tour of the school. Buses will leave from Haigis Mall in front of Whitmore at 12:45 p.m. to take the volunteers to Belchertown. The buses will return to campus by 3:45 p.m. and drop students off at different points on campus.

The Volunteers are a group of UMass students who spend their Saturday afternoons talking to, playing with and working with the Belchertown residents. Volunteers engage in sports and recreation with the younger residents, play bingo with some of the older handicapped residents, and provide needed companionship for residents by taking them for walks. Volunteers are especially needed now while the weather is still warm and the residents can enjoy fresh air and get some exercise. No special talent is necessary for one to become a volunteer. It makes no difference what class or major a person is in. All that is required is a willingness to give of oneself to help a person in need. The Belchertown Volunteer program might help students who are unsure about their future to gain a clearer idea of professions that might interest them.

Last year the Belchertown Volunteers were very active. Through their efforts a number of residents attended a UMass football game, the Belchertown town fair and enjoyed a day on the UMass campus. The Volunteers also held parties at Halloween and Christmas. There are a number of activities in the planning stages for this year as well. The number ofthese activities which will be carried out depends entirely upon the amount of student support given to the program. It is hoped that a large number of volunteers, new and old, will turn out for Saturday's tour and orientation. Anyone interested in working with the mentally retarded is welcome. If you have any questions, please call Ken at 253-7461 or Mary Jo at 546-6953.

NSF Summer Research Ends This Week

Amherst, Mass.--A summer of independent study ends this week for eight Bay State students taking part in research projects sponsored by the National Science Foundation (NSF) and the UMass School of Engineering.

The eight are all engineering students who will be seniors this fall, five from UMass and three from Lowell Technological Institute. Each spent the summer on an independent research project and will continue on that project during the coming term, working with a faculty advisor from the UMass school of Engineering. Professor Robert Kirchhoff of the mechanical engineering department is director.

The program is supported by a grant to UMass from the Undergraduate Research Participation Program of NSF. It is designed to give outstanding undergraduates an early chance at independent research.

The five from UMass are:

--George Burgess of (61 Grove St.) Paxton, working with Prof. G. A. Russell to determine the acoustic power output of a noise source;

--Rene Bernier of (1930 Pleasant St.) Fall River, who is making an experimental solar energy study, working with Prof. Jon G. McGowan in the building of a honeycomb-type collector;

--Michael Billups of Belchertown, making a systems study of the energy requirements of the agriculture and food processing industries with Prof. Kirchhoff;

--Donald Coe of (3 Hardwick Rd.) Wakefield, who with Prof. Karl Jakus is analyzing auto noise and may design an instrument that can measure speed by noise analysis;

--and Mark Cavanagh of (16 Tucker Ave.) Lexington, who is working with Prof. John Ritter in a study of the stress and corrosion susceptibility of a glass-ceramic material.

The three from Lowell Tech are:

--Robert Gay of (54 Grimes St.) Ludlow, who is studying the Unimate industrial robot with Prof. Corrado Poli;

--Edward Kokoszka of (55 Rogers St.) Chicopee, who is working with Prof. W. R. D. Wilson on a study of the effect of surface roughness and additives and how they affect transport and breakdown of lubricant films; --and David Adam of (132 School St.) Northbridge, who with Prof. Lawrence Ambs is making a complete study of automobile performance, using a computer simulation model of a vehicle.

Federal Reserve

Credit Remaining Tight

By PEGGY SIMPSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON AP- Credit will remain tight in the coming months, Federal Reserve Board Chairman Arthur Burns said Wednesday, with mortgage loans still scarce and home-building restricted.

He challenged the contention of critics, however, that Federal Reserve policies restricting the flow of money had caused the housing slowdown.

The housing industry is overbuilt, Burns told the House Banking Committee, and there are twice as many unsold new houses today as two years ago.

"By late 1972, overbuilding and high prices had set the stage for a downturn in residential construction," Burns said. "The ensuing decline in housing starts got underway long before supplies of mortgage credit began to affect home building adversely."

Banking chairman Wright Patman, D-Tex., criticized Burns' contention of being "overbuilt" on housing.

Patman said every congressman is getting mail from "hard-working low-and moderate-income families who cannot obtain housing and who are being priced out of decent shelter by your policies. We are not overbuilt on low-and moderate-income housing and your claims in this area have a cruel ring for great segments of our population."

Burns said a record-high amount of mortgage credit in the savings and loan associations, savings banks and a growing number of private mortgage carriers both ted inflation and led to the housing boom.

Another key factor, Burns said, was overspending by the federal and state and local governments. Another was the reluctance of Congress to increase taxes, he said.

He recommended immediate corrective action to curb inflation by raising taxes or cutting spending and by giving the President more leeway to adjust investment tax credits.

Nixon Scores Fifth Veto

By CARL C. CRAFT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON AP- President Nixon scored a tight five-vote victory in a showdown Wednesday in the House on a vetoed medical services bill. It left Nixon unbeaten by Congress this year in five veto fights.

The vote was 273 favoring a veto override to put the bill into law over Nixon's objections, 144 supporting the President's rejection of the bill, and one member voting "present." This was five votes short of the required two-thirds majority.

While the Senate had voted 77 to 16 last month to override, or 15 more than the necessary two-thirds, the action by the House means the legislation is dead.

President Nixon expressed his pleasure at the House action. A White House statement said the President feels those who voted to sustain the veto "deserve the thanks of all Americans for their actions" and for joining in his efforts of fighting inflation.

Six Democrats joined 138 Republicans in support of the President, while 227 Democrats and 46 Republicans voted to override the veto.

The bill would have authorized $185 million for new federal aid programs designed to develop emergency medical service systems aimed at preventing needless deaths of heart attack and accident victims. Nixon vetoed it Aug. 1, saying it was too costly and infringed on the role of state and local governments.

The legislation also would have required the Nixon administration to keep operating Public Health Service hospitals in Seattle, Boston, Baltimore, San Francisco, New Orleans, Galveston, Tex., Staten Island, N.Y. and Norfolk, Va.

The hospitals are being kept open under a federal court injunction.

Nixon objected to continued operation of in-patient facilities of the hospitals which he said have "outlived their usefulness."

Rep. Harley O. Staggers, D-W.Va., chairman of the House Commerce Committee and chief author of the vetoed bill, said the legislation was aimed at saving thousands of lives by providing fast emergency care by trained personnel.

Cereal Heiress Dies

By JERRY T. BAULCH
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON AP- Marjorie Merriweather Post, the cereal heiress who lived and looked like a queen and whose business acumen made her one of the wealthiest women in the world, died Wednesday at age 86.

The famed hostess, philanthropist and heiress to the Postum Cereal Co.-later General Foods-fortune, died at her Washington estate, Hillwood, where members of her family had gathered. Her health had been falling rapidly in recent weeks.

Mrs. Post was married four times but resumed her maiden name after her last divorce. She is survived by her three daughters, one being actress Dina Merrill, seven grand-children and 11 great-grand-children.

She willed Hillwood and its 26 acres to the Smithsonian Institution with an endowment to maintain it in perpetuity. She also had homes at Palm Beach, Fla., and in the Adirondacks.

POW Eligible For Governor

SANTA FE, N.M. AP- Atty. Gen. David Norvell says former Vietnam prisoner of war James Hughes is eligible to run for governor.

Norvell's formal opinion declared a proxy voter registration of Hughes while he was a POW for nearly six years is valid. Norvell said Hughes "therefore is competent and qualified to seek nomination in the Republican primary for governor next year."

Norvell said an old law allowing family members to register members of the U.S. military to vote was still in effect when Darthy Hughes registered her husband in Santa Fe County on Nov. 15, 1967.

Hughes, who asked for the opinion, has not said if he would seek public office.

Legislator Charged With Rape

BENNINGTON, Vt. (AP) — A Vermont legislator has been named in a $110,000 civil action alleging statutory rape against a 14-year-old legislative page.

The suit was filed this week in Bennington County Court by Mrs. Virginia McKenna, on behalf of her daughter. Named in the suit was Gregory Reed of St. Johnsbury. Reed, 19, was the youngest Vermonter ever to be elected to the state House of Representatives. He served his first term in the House this year.

The suit alleged that on two days during the legislative session Reed had sexual intercourse with Kimberly McKenna in a hotel room in Montpelier.

Mrs. McKenna's attorney, Charles Capriela Jr., said the basis for the suit was simply that the daughter was not old enough to give her consent.

Mrs. McKenna is seeking $35,000 in compensatory and punitive damages, and her daughter is seeking $75,000 in compensatory and punitive damages.

Atty. Gen. Kimberly Cheney said Wednesday his office was looking into the matter, but no criminal charges had been filed.

Reed, contacted at his home in St. Johnsbury, declined comment on the suit.

A freshman at Lynden State College this fall, Reed was 18-years-old when he was elected to the Vermont House last year.

on CAR COATS

The New York coat manufacturers have been crying the blues over sluggish business for early fall. And no wonder, with the hottest August we've had in over 130 years. But the nip in the air tells me that that's all behind us now, and our coat sales show it. If you're thinking of shopping for your outerwear wardrobe, let me pass along a couple of fashion observations.

The single most important fall outerwear garment by far is the car coat. Styling varies from waist-hugging jackets that look super with high-rise or baggie pants to gracefully fitted 3/4 lengths. We might even include ski parkas in this group. Today's car coat is fashioned for action, for you gals who are on the go in any weather. Plaids or solids, pile or fur-like linings, some hooded, the selection at Stewart's is at it's best. You don't wait for a rain storm to buy an umbrella; so, don't get caught in the cold this season without your car coat from . . .

Allende's Downfall

The demise of Salvador Allende's Marxist regime in Chile surprised very few observers. For the past year or so, Allende had retained power largely by the graces of Chile's traditionally non-political armed forces. That the armed forces remained loyal for that long came as a surprise to many, perhaps even Allende himself.

The pundits were fond of referring to the Allende regime as the "first freely elected Marxist government in the Western Hemisphere." Chile was to have been the showcase for the "peaceful" transition to Socialism. Instead, Chile demonstrated how a traditionally stable democracy could be dragged down into chaotic anarchy and ultimately authoritarianism.

Allende's efforts to collectivize the Chilean economy ran into opposition from the very outset of his regime in 1970. The fact that he was elected with bately more than one third of the popular vote, hardly a decisive mandate for the type of brazen schemes which he proposed, is rarely mentioned by his glorifiers. His first major objective was the seizure of U.S. owned copper mines. This he accomplished with scant opposition among Chileans, largely due to the rampant "anti-Gringoism" which permeates Latin American politics. The consequences of the seizures were a predictable response from the "Gringos," namely, a reluctance to extend further credit or investment capital to Chile. The seizure of farmlands by leftist guerrillas also led to disasterous consequences for Chile-severe food shortages, which in turn led to rationing, which is not a very good way of winning votes. To add to the complications, labor became increasingly rebellious, and strikes proliferated despite the reassurances from Allende.

Dwindling foreign capital, food shortages, and recurring strikes all took a very heavy toll on the Escudo, the Chilean currency. The rate of inflation under Allende was a staggering 300% annually (Americans are distressed with a rate of 7%). The rate of inflation, more than any other factor, led to the disaffection of the Chilean Middle Class, which saw in the inflation rate the peril of confiscation which always accompanies the expansion of socialism.

Subsequently, the streets of Santiago, Valpariso, and other major Chilean communities became virtual battlegrounds between leftist and rightist student groups, housewives and workers, and police and innocent bystanders. The Childean economy, both private and public sector, came to a virtual standstill when strikes, particularly those by the truckers, took on an increasingly political tone. Decisive action by Allende was stymied by a Congress controlled by the Opposition parties.

The turning point in Chile came when Allende called upon the military to participate in the government, a move taken to thwart the possibility of an insurrection against the government. The chief military participant in the regime was General Carlos Prats, who many believed had strong sympathies with the Allende regime. During this period, Allende invited Cuba's Fidel Castro to make a state visit to Chile, an act which turned off many of his more moderate supporters and intensified the hostilities of those who had believed all along that Allende's ultimate intentions were to establish a Communist style of totalitarianism.

Communists will no doubt point a finger at the United States, the CIA, ITT, and maybe even Golda Meir in an attempt to place the blame for the collapse of Chile's long standing democracy. One finds great difficulty in believing that those who glorify the likes of Castro and Guevara can seriously be upset over the end of Chile's democratic tradition.

Don't Blame Capitalism

By DAVID EIBEL

It is quite humorous but also quite tragic for me to continually read and hear people decry the system of capitalism both as an economic and social system. It is even more tragic to see those people who supposedly believe in capitalism to continually attack it and, if they're not attacking it, apologizing for it until they sound almost exactly like capitalism's most bloodthirsty enemies. It is also quite tragic when people are given blatantly untrue information about the institution of capitalism, yet no matter how tragic the situation is, the truth of the matter is that capitalism as a system is definitely in the throes of its most serious crisis.

Today, the United States is still popularly known as the bastion of the capitalist ethic. The propaganda media of all marxist states continually revile the United States as the center of operations for the "capitalist, bourgeois, reactionary, imperialist, monopolist, etc. forces" of the world. America still thinks of itself as a capitalist country and its citizens around the world still find themselves apologizing for it. However, everybody is wrong for it's just a matter of time until America becomes as socialistic and totalitarian as many of the countries it claims to despise. Unless, the tide is turned the prospects of a free country-that the chained and tortured of the world could flock to-will never be fully realized.

How people could consider America capitalistic in nature is a puzzle, and one which is difficult to figure out. Capitalism in its truest and thus its only nature implicitly means a free, totally unregulated economy in every sense of the word. In other words, the maniacal machinations of a President Nixon, who seems to be hung up on phases, would not be possible in a capitalist economy. Also, a true capitalist economy would not allow companies to be given tax breaks, or government subsidies. In a capitalist state, the government would not be allowed to interfere in the affairs of business nor would it be allowed to help companies and in so doing robbing the taxpayers' money. A capitalist state would not force its citizens to pay heavy taxes for education and things like health care and in so doing steal the hard earned money of the individual whose earnings must rightly stay his own.

In a capitalist state, as is the case of all economic systems, you cannot have a free economy without complete, unregulated freedom for its citizens, just as in a totalitarian regime, economic controls cannot exist unless the people are chained as well. If the United States were truly a capitalistic state, an institution such as the draft could never have been operated. The draft is or was, a direct infringement on the individual's freedom. No government can arbitrarily force a citizen to fight in any war, especially a war which does not directly threaten the citizen's country.

Capitalism cannot be blamed for today's woes. If anything, it has been a steady departure from the tenets of capitalism that has put America in the throes of severe moral, economic and political crises.

Reordering Society

Environmentalists could be involved in the biggest reordering of society this country has ever experienced. Many of them are not even aware of it.

Because environmentalists favor a reduction or freeze on the growth rate of the country, they are involved in a reordering of the present economic structure. For instance, if suburban and rural housing developments are halted to preserve open space, the value of land in the suburbs will skyrocket. This will be wonderful for suburbanities but for anyone living in the city who wants to move to the suburbs it would be a tragedy. Similarly, the closing of a paper mill because it pollutes a river will preserve its scenic and recreational value but it will cost hundreds of jobs. The demise of the Alaskan pipeline would preserve the tundra but cost the poor in heating bills.

One of the most commonly suggested solutions to any pollution problem is to use less. The obvious resolution of the air problem is fewer cars, to solid waste it's less waste and so on. The Federal government and many states have adopted the "use less" approach. In Boston the EPA proposed that there be a five dollar tax for parking, thus discouraging the use of cars. Other tactics have involved the increase of the gas tax a few cents to help pay for mass transit. The idea simply is to make the car too expensive for som people to use. But which people? Certainly not the Ruckelshauses, the Sargents, or the Kennedys. But instead for the poor, and lower middle class. The extra taxes added to gasoline, the new anti-pollution devices on cars and the parking tax are in reality regressive taxes that charge the poor to preserve an environment so that the rich may enjoy it.

This is why the environment has become an upper and middle class cause. The lower economic groups cannot afford the luxury of a slowing of the conomic growth rate. If all proposed environmental plans were adopted social mobility, as it is in this country today, would be halted. status quo is preserved and strengthened by a slowing or halting of growth, and that is what's proposed.

No one can afford a decrease in the quality of the environment; even now in many places it is unhealthy. But we cannot afford to reorder our society along environmental lines at the expense of social justice, either. Instead a compromise of the two ideals is needed. If the government puts a tax on cars there should be a higher tax on a second or third car registered by the same family. Electric rates should increase with consumption because its production is one cause of air contamination. Farmland, marshes and open space cannot be preserved simply for the benefit of local residents. If development is to be reduced then some form of impact zoning is necessary. The environment can be saved but only if every one shares the burden.

This summer while working at the Department of Environmental Protection on a Mass. Audobon internship I had a chance to meet many environmentalists. They are energetic and even the typists and the people in the mailroom seem to have a real sense of purpose. They don't mind working late or taking work home. Perhaps this attitude prevails because their jobs are related to a cause in which they believe and that helps relieve most of the monotony of work. Work at some departments is little more than a job while at the environmental bureaucracy it is a cause. Some of the people in these bureaucracies are aware that their work might cause a change in society; we must have action on that knowledge.

Letters To The Editor

Several Ridiculous Statements

To The Editor:

The article "The Student as Nigger" by Jerry Farber, published in the pamphlet freshmen received called "It's Your Move," contains several ridiculous statements.

First: Mr. Farber complains "The faculty and administrators decide what courses will be offered." The faculty and administrators are running the school. If you don't like the courses offered at a particular school, don't go there. If enough people decide not to attend, the school will be forced to either change its policies or close down. I realize that in a country where education is primarily tax-financed, you have less options than you would in a free economy. But that's a seperate problem that can be solved by pulling the government out of education.

Mr. Farber also tells with indignation of "one professor who refused to take up class time for exams and required students to show up for tests at 6:30 in the morning. And they did, by God!" He seems to regard this as cruel. Did it ever occur to him that the students might enjoy the extra opportunity for class discussion and learning this teacher gave them?

A less innocent error is Mr. Farber's attitude toward what he calls "black people." He writes, "You stand exposed in front of them, knowing that their interests, their values, and their language are different than yours." Such a bigoted and collectivist attitude is disgraceful in any human being, let alone a professor. To say that a certain group of people, by virtue of a common skin color, have the same values, is to show yourself ignorant of the nature and source of values, which is the individual human being's consciousness. The Jewish holocaust is an example of the possible results of an attitude such as Mr. Farber's.

One last point. Mr. Farber recommends that students "put the grading system in a museum." Rhetoric aside, an example will serve to illustrate the reason for such a system in a specialized society like ours. When I want to put up a building, I want to know somehow if the man I hire is capable of doing the job. If I don't know anything about engineering, as is likely since my special interest is say, literature, I'd like to have some document or other evidence stating that he has met requirements for learning engineering and should therefore be competent. And the man applying for the job wants me to have this added incentive for choosing him inpreference to a person who might tell me he can do the job, but in fact doesn't have enough training. It reduces my risk and provides an objective asset for the competent person selling his skill in the market. An increase in prejudice and subjectivity would be the only result of dropping the grading system. And neither makes for human happiness, as Mr. Farber would do well to learn.

A Piece Of Nonsense

To The Editor:

Who knows who is The Best Man for a political position if there is not a free press and free individuals not coerced by police, politicians, big business, Hearst-like chaim monopolies, or repressive Supreme Court decisions? Who knows who is the best woman if women are not free to express themselves? Perhaps this sounds like nonsense to you and perhaps it is nonsense.

Consider another piece of nonsense:

QUESTION: which came first: the egg, the snake, or the apple?
ANSWER: the grapefruit.

Mr. Mailer stated that America "may be sliding toward a kind of totalitarianism of the most advanced, subtle, and civilized sort." He advocated the establishment of a "Fifth Estate" to uncover evidence of totalitarianism. I advocate, in addition to the Fifth Estate, a sixth estate, a seventh seal, an eight estate, a ninth state, and a tenth of an estate. For the same purpose.

In Russia, which already is totalitarian, Alexander Solzhenitsyn offended the new Czars by advocating an artistic estate. Free speech, he seems to be saying. He did so in his Nobel Prize Acceptance Speech which in and of itself ought to qualify him for another Nobel Prize. The speech, like most of his science fiction stories about the reality of Life and Natire and Godhead are banned in the Soviet Union. He could not leave Russia to go to Sweden because of fear. It is a strange world both here at home and in other parts of the planet.

We are all brothers and sisters--the best of us and the worst of us, the good, the bad, and the ugly. We all sleep on the same earth bed. Even the astronauts!

Once you realize this letter is a mind game in a cosmic egg, you should see at once that the energy crisis can only be solved by turning on the lights in the pentagons of the mind all over the world. One death diminishes all of us. We struggle.

It is not easy living without money; but then it is not easy living with money iether. Any hatred is self-hatred before it is other directed. This exercise is called dialectic pantheism. Newspapers are drugs. Air is a drug. Gas fumes are drugs. (Stand knee kid in nature.) Then reverse positions. Then sit backwards and shake your tail. Now you are a monkey again. Have I converted you? Do colors and sounds speak TRUTH?

Toilet Assumption

To The Editor:

If you are married and have a pet you can forget living on campus, in married student housing, or more than likely even close to campus. There exists several assumptions about married persons that you will find yourself subjected to, even in this college environment. The two most horrendous are that you are prepared to completely change your lifestyle, and that you automatically love children.

Living in a dorm environment with your love can work for a time, but as most who have tried will tell you, it gets to be a real hassle, after the first year anyhow.

Once married, if you get into Lincoln, University, or North Village, you face the added situation of defending yourself against the wild packs of kids. They are easy to spot hanging off your car or leg. Kids are not my scene, but I put up with them daily and their noise because others around me do. Because as unneeded as more baby humans are, they are indeed here, through no choice of their own.

I don't have kids, but my dog had me for a while. I'm in Lincoln and had him up for the day. He was taking a shit over near a hedge in the complex. Janet and I said "good morning" to this guy who answered back to fool us, picked up a board, and threw it at my dog, hitting him in the back. "Don't like shit on my grass," he said. I guess he likes it in his house, where he shits it (and I suppose doesn't care and considers of less intensity the fact that it ends up in the ground or ocean-the backyard of gophers and fish and us too.) and flushes it, or like that of his illegal cat, although this is strictly heresay, who has learned the human eloquence of shitting indoors. This guy is president of the Graduate Senate, John Muller, captain of the noodle factory. If he threw the board at me, I could understand at least where his head was at, but the dog can't dig at all where we went. I find it easy to understand, but hard to believe that so many people on this campus are unaware that they operate much of their existence on Harry Weisberg's "toilet assumption". It's all down the magic porcelain bowl.

What You Can Do To Help

To The Editor:

As probably most of you are aware, there has been a boycott on non-union lettuce and on non-union grapes. The time has come when our help is needed more than ever in these efforts. The UFW's contract, won by years of struggle by the workers and an effective consumer boycott has been replaced by a contract with the Teamster's union; a contract which means wage-cuts for the workers, and imposes no restrictions of the use of dangerous pesticides from which 80% of workers are suffering poisoning. The Teamster's methods of persuasion are fear and violence, already two brothers have been killed in uninvestigated deaths. But the strongest argument of all is the workers themselves who have walked off the fields as never before in support of their union-the UFW, and the right to be represented by the union of their choice. The conditions of these workers is very, very bad, and now the strikers are without pay. You know all this. What you can do to help is write:

Moore's Darkroom

To The Editor:

We would like an opportunity to respond to the laughably irresponsible run-off of Neal Walderman in his letter concerning our refusal to make available the Moore House darkroom facilities for his personal use.

As Neal will see in time, no responsible dormitory government can offer the use of its facilities to the University Community at large and expect to maintain either the physical integrity of the house or the atmosphere of HOME within the dorm.

The Moore House darkroom is funded and used only by residents of Moore House and other students who enroll in our photography colloquia. Much of the equipment is owned by single students who reside in Moore House.

We would be seriously neglecting our responsibilities as Heads of Residence if we were to allow just anyone to use this very valuable equipment. Does Neal lend out his camera?

As far as his description of the incident in question goes (paragraph two of his letter), we most certainly want it understood by the more responsible members of this community that no one here "got angry", no one was quite as blunt about explaining the situation as Neal would have one believe, and no one just "hung up" as Neal implied.

Our darkroom simply is not a university service. Neal should have looked into the facts a bit more before opening his mouth.

12 Killed In S. African Labor Riot

CARLETONVILLE, South Africa (AP)-South African police shot and killed 12 black workers during a labor riot in a gold mine in Johannesburg.

The incident that ended Wednesday was the most serious black-white confrontation under South Africa's apartheid regime since the 1960 Sharpeville shooting.

Another 27 Africans were reported injured, 2 seriously, and 1 policeman was hurt.

Officials confirmed the 12 dead had been shot. Earlier reports said one African worker had been hacked to death by fellow workers.

The shooting brought a drop in South African gold shares in London and prices on the Johannesburg exchange fell across the board after a selloff in the gold section spread to other industrials.

Brokers said the market followed a pattern set by the stock exchanges after the Sharpeville massacre in which 67 Africans were killed and dozens wounded 13 years ago.

The rioting broke out Tuesday afternoon at one of South Africa's most modern mines, the Western Deep Levels, owned by Anglo-American Corp.

The disturbance, said to have involved many of the 1,000 machine operators, climaxed a week-old pay and job classification dispute.

Mine manager Algy von Holdt told newsmen Wednesday that some 75 to 100 workers, whose demands had been turned down, tried to prevent others from reporting for the night shift.

Police were called in when workers stoned white mine officials.

Von Holdt said the crowd grew bigger and the 20 police then on the scene tried to break them up with tear gas and a baton charge.

When the blacks began setting some buildings afire and looting others, Von Holdt said, police reinforcements were called from surrounding towns. A senior police official said his men opened fire only when the rioters had gone "absolutely berserk".

Von Holdt said the disturbances were over by 2 a.m. Wednesday and the morning shift reported for work as usual.

Facilities for Western Deep Level's tens of thousands of workers are considered above average by standards here. It is also one of the wealthiest mines in the world. Last year it made a profit of $68.9 million and paid $29.8 million in dividends.

Chrysler, UAW: Talks Go On

DETROIT (AP)-With a strike deadline two days away, negotiators for Chrysler Corp. and the United Auto Workers were tied up Wednesday in subcommittee discussions of individual issues.

There were no reports of progress on major issues as the contract expiration time of 11:59 p.m. Friday approached.

UAW President Leonard Woodcock had indicated that Wednesday "could well be a critical day" in the talks.

Among the subjects believed under discussion was the union's demand, strongly resisted by the auto industry, that employes be allowed to refuse overtime work.

Despite the lack of major breakthroughs, UAW Vice President Douglas Fraser indicated after a 12-hour bargaining session Tuesday that there was still time to avoid a strike by the UAW's 127,500 Chrysler workers.

Chrysler last month offered the UAW wage-benefit improvements totaling three per cent a year, far below the 6.2 per cent federal guidelines and the settlements of about 7 per cent won by rubberworkers and Teamsters earlier this year.

Congress To Pass 50 Important Bills

By EDMOND LeBRETON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Democratic leaders of Congress said Wednesday they expect to pass about 50 significant bills before adjourning - and not all of them will come off President Nixon's priority list.

A meeting of House and Senate leaders produced no major changes in the choice of legislation to be pushed for the final weeks of the 1972 session, a spokesman said.

The congressional priority list does not include such prime Nixon items as special revenue sharing to replace existing education and community development programs.

House Speaker Carl Albert, D-Okla., and Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield, D-Mont., said in a joint statement: "The tenative adjournment target for the first session remains October."

Both indicated in subsequent comments that the end of October, rather than the middle, now is regarded as a more realistic goal. Other key members are predicting a mid-or late-November adjournment.

"The principal legislative complication for the remainder of this session, as we see it, involves foreign aid and defense," the leaders said.

A major point of contention in the defense authorization bill is a proposal to include a cutback of forces in Europe. It has strong support in the Senate, less in the House, and is opposed by the Nixon administration.

Albert, at his daily news conference, added trade legislation as a possible source of delay, but said he had been assured that a bill will be ready for House consideration early in October.

Cambodia Roundup:

Kompong Cham Cleared Of Rebels

By DENIS GRAY
Associated Press Writer

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP)-The Cambodian command claimed Wednesday its troops have cleared Communist-led rebels from most of the beseiged provincial capital of Kompong Cham.

The government acknowledged that Khmer Rouge insurgents still held key points around the city 47 miles northeast of Phnom Penh but said its forces were trying to trap the remaining rebel elements on the southwestern edges.

The command spokesman, Col. Am Rong, said government units linked up on Phnom Penh's road to the sea-Highway 4- at a point 40 miles southwest of Phnom Penh. But the road remained cut near Ang Snuol about 16 miles from the capital.

A photographer for the Associated Press returning from Kompong Cham said food and water shortages were severe.

The photographer, Chhor Yuthi, said whole blocks in the city's basically residential southern section were engulfed in flames and that bodies were still strewn in some city streets.

In Vientiane, the Laotian government was reported to have initialed an agreement with the Communist-backed Pathet Lao for a coalition government.

The accord would provide for the third coalition government in 20 years of sporadic war between Laotian factions backed by outside powers.

It would give the Pathet Lao, supported by North Vietnam, half the posts in a reconciliation government with Premier Souvanna Phouma, who is backed by the United States. All foreign forces would be required to withdraw from Laos under the agreement.

Attorney For Students

Shoplifting Is A Problem

One of the more esoteric activities engaged in by some University persons is the fine art of relieving local merchants (including the bookstore) of surplus merchandise which they presumably would prefer to sell. Quite frankly shoplifting is a very real problem.

Without engaging in any consideration of political motivation, the unavoidable fact of shoplifting is that the merchant never loses, the consumers always pay. In the Campus Center Bookstore, students ultimately pay to offset losses quite the same as they do at every other store in the area by reason of higher prices.

What has been apparent lately is that many people accidentally commit the crime never intending to have done so. The usual problem begins with some sort of distraction causing the consumer to drop merchandise and replace it in a bag, parcel or pocket. Any merchandise that is concealed from view within the store, whether or not it is taken to or through a check out counter, has been shoplifted. The best procedure is simply to use the carts or shopping baskets and never put merchandise out of sight until it is bagged by store personnel.

The following notes may be helpful in understanding the implications of larceny of various types. Perhaps most students will be more concerned with the possible adverse effect that a record of conviction may have on future employment.

Larceny of Property

"Shoplifting" is a form of larceny; the law does not distinguish "shoplifting" as a separate offense.

a) If the value of the stolen property exceeds $100, the crime may be a felony. Punishment is imprisonment for not more than five years or for not more than two years and a fine of not more than $600, (Ch. 266 Sec. 30)

b) If the value of the stolen property does not exceed $100, the crime is a misdemeanor and is punishable by a fine of not more than $300 or imprisonment for not more than one year. (Ch. 266 Sec. 30)

Larceny "by stealing from the person of another"

This crime includes pickpocketing, and is punishable by imprisonment for not more than five years or by imprisonment for not more than two and a half (2 1/2) years. (Ch. 266 Sec. 25).

Financial Aid, Resource Center Directors Appointed

The appointment of a director of financial aid and a director of a new Resource Center for Non-Resident Students has been announced by Robert W. Gage, vice-chancellor for student affairs at the UMass.

Richard A. Dent, a financial aid specialist who has been with Duquesne University and CEEB, the College Entrance Examination Board, will direct the UMass Office of Financial Aid, which is not only responsible for handling over $3,000,000 a year in financial aid but also processes all work-study and other student on-campus employment programs.

Helen T. Hill, who has held student affairs and counseling posts at Purdue University and other schools, will direct the Resource Center for Non-Resident Students. The new office combines a number of past operations to better serve 7,400 undergraduates and 5,500 graduate students who live off campus.

Richard Dent had been with CEEB since 1967, first as assistant director of college services, then as assistant director of the western regional office. During the past academic year he had been on leave to do an Esso and Sloan foundation-supported study of alternatives in financing higher education. From 1964 to 1969 he served in financial aid and placement posts at Duquesne. He holds a law degree from Duquesne and a B.A. from the College of Steubenville.

Helen Hill came to UMass from West Virginia Institute of Technology, where whe was dean of women, associate dean of students and associate professor of education. Before that she held similar posts at Purdue, Oklahoma State, Houston, Florida and Kentucky Universities. She is a former high school math teacher and taught for neraly ten years in Pike County, Kentucky.

Mr. Dent and his office are supervised by Admissions Dean William Tunis; Mrs. Hill and her office by Vice-Chancellor Gage.

School of Nursing Also Appoints Director

Acting Dean Lillian R. Goodman of the UMass School of Nursing has been appointed program director of the new four-year nursing program at Worcester State College.

Dean Goodman came to UMass-Amherst in 1969 and in 1970 was promoted from associate dean to acting dean in the School of Nursing. Since Nov., 1972 she has been chairperson of the nursing advisory committee of the Massachusetts Board of Higher Education.

Her special field is psychiatric nursing, and among her several publications are: "The Schizophrenic's Mother," "Nursing Education in a Mental Hospital," and "Some Factors in Doctor-Nurse Relationships in Psychiatry."

She earned her bachelor of science degree and her master of science from Boston University and her doctorate of education from the Boston University School of Education. She has been head nurse at Boston State Hospital, assistant chief supervisor of psychiatric nursing for the Massachusetts Department of Mental Health, a lecturer at Boston College Graduate School, and associate clinical professor at the Boston University School of Nursing.

Nixon Considering Housing Allowances

By BILL NEIKIRK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon is nearing a decision on a proposal to provide direct cash payments to help cover the housing costs of low-income families.

If Nixon embraces the program as some government sources expect him to, it would likely first apply to the elderly and then be phased in for other groups over several years.

James T. Lynn, secretary of Housing and Urban Development, recommended the housing-allowance plan after a six-month departmental study.

It is part of a housing package that Nixon plans to send to Congress within the next week. The plan for cash assistance to low-income families would be supplemented by proposals to help middle-income Americans obtain housing.

But the housing-allowance plan is the most dramatic and different approach. It would call for housing aid to people, instead of for subsidized homes. In the view of specialists at the department, it could help prevent much of the scandal that has plagued federal housing programs over the years.

This is how a housing-allowance plan works in theory:

Suppose the program is set up to provide allowances for families earning $4,800 a year, or $400 a month. And suppose the government determined that decent housing in the area where the family lives would cost $150 a month.

The plan would assume that a family could put up a part of its income for housing. The most frequently discussed figure is 25 per cent. In the example given, this would be $100 a month.

Thus the government allowance in this hypothetical situation would be $50 a month, the difference between what the family could pay and the cost of decent housing in the area.

Mass. Campaign Laws Under Investigation

Representative Thomas G. Simons (R-Montague) was recently appointed to a special legislative commission to investigate the financing of political campaigns in Massachusetts and to recommend new legislation to improve the campaign laws.

The special commission will make a study of present practices and laws concerning contributions to political candidates. It will consider the possibility of limiting campaign expenditures and using public funds to finance campaigns.

Representative Simons, a member of the Committee on Election Laws for the past three years, has been active in the area of campaign reform. He is presently helping lead an effort to pass a bill to tighten the laws governing the disclosure of campaign contributions and expenditures.

Simons is also one of ten sponsors of two initiative petitions, filed this summer by a coalition of citizens' groups, that call for setting up an independent Campaign and Political Finance Commission to strengthen enforcement of campaign spending laws and requiring public officials to disclose sources of outside income.

The idea of publicly-funded campaigns lately has been receiving much attention and support in both the Congress and the Massachusetts Legislature. Several bipartisan bills are now awaiting Congressional action. Although bills to provide public funds for campaigns in this state have been rejected by the Legislature in the past, the creation of this special commission indicates a new interest in this proposal.

The focus will be on new accounting, auditing, and reporting problems. Professors Morton Backer and Martin Gosman will teach. The program for tax practitioners will feature a new workshop approach to solving federal tax problems. IRS personnel from the New England area will speak on: state and gift taxation, the intelligence division, the appelate branch, and the Andover Service Center.

Further details on any of these programs may be obtained from the Accounting Department, School of Business Administration, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass. 01002.

No Harm Reported In First Bomb Builders

By FRANK CAREY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Twenty-five men who were heavily exposed to radioactive plutonium while helping the first atomic bomb have suffered no detectable harm, scientists said Wednesday.

The men still carry within their bodies tiny quantities of the ray-emitting bomb ingredient. The amounts, while small, range from one-eighth to 10 times the maximum permissible level for present-day atomic plant workers.

But, says the report of the study:

"Except for the ailments that one would expect in a group of men mostly in their 50s, all subjects examined at their most recent checkup in 1972 were in remarkably good health."

"All men were actively working, most as successful executives," it said.

They were examined for such things as any signs of lung, bone or liver cancer, or any evidence of genetic-cell abnormalities.

No detectable evidence was found.

The report was made by a group of health specialists from the University of Rochester, N.Y., and the Atomic Energy Commission's Los Alamos, N.M., scientific laboratory.

They've made periodic check-ups on the men since 1953. That was nearly 10 years after the men were heavily exposed to plutonium-through ingestion and inhalation-while working at Los Alamos on the famed Manhattan Project.

The report was presented to the Third International Congress of the International Radiation Protection Association.

The student Auxiliary Department is a key part of fire protection for the town of Amherst as well as its three colleges. Above is a scene from a fire which damaged Tobin Hall, at UMass, last January.

Auxiliary Force Seeks Members

The Amherst Fire Department is currently accepting applications to fill vacancies in the student Auxilliary Force for the Academic year 1973-1974.

In Amherst, the role of a student firefighter is an important one. He volunteers his time and energy to the town and university as a member of the Amherst Fire Department, but receives no conpensation except a feeling of achievement knowing that he is helping the community.

The student Auxilliary Department mans two engine companies, and functions as a key part of fire protection for the town of Amherst, including the three colleges.

Approximately 30-40 interested students are being sought to fill voids created by graduation last June. A rigorous training schedule of ten to twelve two-hour sessions will be administered to recruits to familiarize them with skills they are expected to utilize at any given fire situation.

Following successful completion of the initial training period, new members will be assigned their own protective gear, and placed on one of the two apparatus delegated to the Auxilliary Force. Subsequent training drills will be held once a week for the remainder of the year.

Students will be issued department radio equipment on which they are paged if a fire call is received. They are expected to respond to their apparatus, at which time their duties as an Amherst firefighter commence.

Applications can be obtained at the Amherst Fire Department Headquarters, located at 68 Pleasant Street, in the center of Amherst. Applicants will be notified as to the location of a meeting on campus in a few weeks, at which time an outline of the Amherst Fire Department responsibilities and training procedures will be presented.

Open Records Bill Hits Opposition

By MARTY THORNTON
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP)-A bill is pending before the legislature to open most state government records to public perusal, and already the House Ways and Means Committee has taken steps to take the teeth out of the legislation.

"It is a fundamental right of a citizen to know what his government is doing and thus, to have free and open access to most of the official papers and records of his government," said Rep. John Businger, D-Brookline, who has been pushing the issue for three years.

A similar bill died in 1971 after it received an adverse committee report. Last year another bill made it through the House but died in the Senate during prorogation.

Businger's original draft would have made virtually all records of every state agency, department, commission and authority, as well as political subdivisions like counties and municipalities, open to public inspection.

"The theory is to make everything public except for a new narrowly defined exemptions," Businger said, "and it puts the burden of proof on the bureaucrat to prove that disclosure is not necessary."

Under present state law only certain records, which are updated from time to time, are considered public-but Businger's bill would have made everything public except for personnel and medical files, personal notebooks and files, law enforcement investigatory material, trade secrets and similar information.

Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn supported the bill, at least in part, saying he approves "of the concept that the files and records of the Commonwealth and its political subdivisions should be open to the public, except where a compelling governmental interest for exempting such records from public inspection and scrutiny exists."

However, rather than approving the bill in its original form, the House Ways and Means Committee decided without explanation to amend the bill to exempt Massachusetts Port Authority and Turnpike Authority toll tickets. This would make it impossible for the public to find out how much money is being collected on their bridges and tunnels.

No Exceptions, Sir

By GAYLORD SHAW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-The White House refused again Wednesday to say whether President Nixon paid federal income taxes in 1971 and 1970.

Using almost precisely the same words as he employed Tuesday, Deputy Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren repeated "I am not going to discuss the President's income taxes. I think that's a personal matter, and I'm just not going to discuss it."

Lone Moose Captured

METHUEN, Mass. (AP)-A 1,200-pound moose was captured at Hills Pond Wednesday afternoon after it eluded police for about eight hours.

The animal was shot with three tranquilizing darts, then was taken to Boston's Franklin Park Zoo.

The moose was first spotted before dawn in a residential area of Lawrence. It then crossed into Methuen and was cornered in an open field by officers.

But the animal escaped and headed toward Hills Pond, where it was later captured.

Swappers Suffer

NEW YORK (AP)-Fritz Peterson and Mike Kekich, two left-handed pitchers now better known for a wife-swapping incident, are looking ahead to next year while suffering through the final stages of their worst baseball seasons.

Close friends while members of the New York Yankees, Peterson and Kekich shocked the baseball establishment last spring by holding a news conference to announce they had traded households-wives, children, even dogs.

Kekich later was traded to the Cleveland Indians after failing to impress in early going with the Yankees. He currently has a record of 2-4, coupled with a poor earned run average of 7.47. Peterson has won eight of 22 decisions for the Yankees, with an ERA of 4.02.

Peterson and Mrs. Kekich are living together and plan to marry next year; Kekich and Mrs. Peterson are no longer together.

Peterson says of his former friend, their once-close relationship having disintegrated, "I was right in the starting rotation, but it hurt him, Kekich, because he wasn't starting. He was a victim of circumstance."

After the season ends, Kekich plans to go to Montana for a couple of weeks to collect himself, then attend real estate school and play winter baseball for about a month. Afterward he'll go to spring training with the Indians...and what he hopes will be a new start.

Peterson, for his own part, refuses to blame personal problems for the kind of year he's been having. "This winter I'll be in super condition," he sayd, attributing part of his trouble to his job last winter as radio commentator for the New York Golden Blades of the World Hockey Association.

Fall Baseball Underway

By MIKE BROPHY

A reported 125 candidates have turned out for baseball this fall in what is "the largest turnout ever for fall ball," according to baseball coach Dick Bergquist.

Due to the excessive amount of candidates and the lack of an assistant coach, Bergquist is about to commence a three day try-out period in which he and veterans of last year's 22-9 squad will evaluate the group so as to reduce it to a workable size of near 40. "I simply can't handle all these men without an assistant coach. Flanagan, McMahon, and Newell are great help, but it's not the same," he continued.

Of the total group nearly 65 players are desirous freshman who want a chance at making the squad Pitchers rated at the top of the candidate listing as there are 35 candidates out to make the starting rotation.

The tryouts will be conducted starting Friday on Earl Lorden Field and will continue on Monday and Tuesday.

Waterplay

Naiads, the Aquatic Art swimming club on campus, will hold a workshop beginning Monday September 17 at 4:00 in WOPE pool. The workshop will continue Tuesday and Wednesday afternoon at 4:00-5:30. Tryouts for the club will be held on Thursday September 20, at 4:00.

The Blackout Ban. . .Phase V?

By HOWARD

They made a BIG mistake.

That's what those greedy football owners, led by the pigskin god, Pete Rozelle, said last week when the United States Senate passed Senator John Pastore's (D-R.I.) bill to prohibit the National Football League from refusing to telecast home games locally if there is a sellout crowd 72 hours in advance.

Well, Billy Sullivan, Carroll Rosenbloom, Edward Bennett Williams, and all the rest of those money-grabbers of the NFL, you were wrong. Those 76 senators who voted last thursday in favor of the no-blackout measure, had an ace or two up their collective sleeves. Don't understand? Well, then, just...

...think of the effects this is going to have on the country, and the Presidency. Our exalted master at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue is a football nut. During the football season, the only time he gets any work done is on a Sunday when the Redskins are in town, and therefore not on TV. Well, now that the blackout on home games has been lifted, America will have 14 full weeks WITHOUT a blunder by Richard Nixon. For the next three and a half months, it's going to be Redskins, Redskins, and more Redskins for the Trick. He'll have no time to take care of the business of the country, and so the economy will straighten out, the beef shortage will be no more, and once again America will be the land of the free and the home of the brave, Pretty tricky those Senators, huh?

...think of the job boom. The unemployment rate, which has wavered between five and six percent for the last three or four years, is on its way down. Think of it-televisions by the hundreds and thousands will be kicked in, torched, and just simply rendered inoperable as a result of the new law. With the Patriots on TV every Sunday, those cans of Bud are gonna be flying through many a TV screen this season. Hundreds more TV repairmen will have to be put to work to keep up with the boom. Those Senators thought of everything.

Jeepers-at least Dick gets to see a half-decent team. The New England Patriots? Ugh!

NFL East Remains As Only Race

Pirates, 4-2

CHICAGO AP- Bob Robertson's three-run homer led Bruce Kison and the Pittsburgh Pirates to a 4-2 victory over the Chicago Cubs Wednesday.

The triumph evened the Pirates' record at 71-71 and lifted them into a first-place tie with the St. Louis Cardinals in the National League East. The Cardinals play Montreal Wednesday night.

With one out in the Pirates' fourth, Willie Stargell walked and Manny Sanguillon singled.

Ronnie Stennett then fouled out before Robertson followed with his 14th home run of the season.

Kison, recently recalled from the miners, posted his first 1973 victory for Pittsburgh.

Mets, 3-2

PHILADELPHIA AP- Home runs by Wayne Garrett and John Milner helped the New York Mets to a 3-2 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies Wednesday night.

The Phillies nicked Jon Mattlack, 13-15, for a run in the first inning when Billy Grabarkewitz singled, moved up on a walk and scored on Bill Robinson's double.

Garrett's 13th homer tied the score in the third and then Milner socked his 22nd in the sixth inning. Rusty Staub doubled and scored New York's decisive run in the eighth on Milner's infield single.

The score of the St. Louis vs. Montreal game was not known when the Collegian went to press last night. If St. Louis won, they would be a half game ahead of the Pirates; if they lost, a half game behind.

If Montreal won, they would be one game behind the Pirates.

You stand alone with your convictions-as well as with your mistakes, as UMass football coach Dick MacPherson well knows.

Reds Move Out

CINCINNATI (AP) Pitcher Jack Billingham keyed a five-run second inning with a bases-leaded double and scattered eight hits to give the Cincinnati Reds a 7-3 decision over the Los Angeles Dodgers Wednesday night.

The victory, the 11th in 13 games for the Reds, dropped the runnerup Dodgers five games behind in the National League West Division race.

Billingham, who entered the game with an .036 batting average, chased Dodger starter Claude Osteen, 16-9, with a double to center. Osteen had walked two batters before Denis Menke singled in the first run and Darrel Chaney's infield hit leaded the bases.

A third-inning two-run homer by Dave Lopes ruined Billingham's bid for a club-record eight shutout.

Sox Continue Hex Over NY

NEW YORK (AP)- Carl Yastrzemski drove in five runs with a pair of home runs and unbeaten Rogelio Moret won his 11th straight decision Wednesday night as the Boston Red Sox defeated the New York Yankees 7-1.

Yastrzemski hit his 14th homer of the year with two men on in the fourth inning and then smacked a two-run shot in the sixth.

Jim Palmer won his 20th game of the year as the Baltimore Orioles downed the Milwaukee Brewers 4-1 in the first game of a twi-night doubleheader last night. The results of the second game were not known at the time this paper went to press.

"Mac" Made Mistake On Field Goal Try

By STEVE CROWE

UMass coach Dick MacPherson admitted he made the wrong decision last Saturday when he ordered a 43 yd. field goal attempt in the fourth quarter of the UMass-Holy Cross game. UMass was behind by two points, had the ball with a fourth down and 4 situation with1:28 left to play in the game.

"We had two time-outs left - enough time to get the ball back," MacPherson told the crowd of about 60 persons at the Varsity M luncheon Wednesday.

But then UMass was forced to use one of their time-outs to set up the field goal attempt.

"That was where I made the mistake and I should have changed my mind," said MacPherson.

The field goal attempt by Andy Dutkanicz was missed. Holy Cross then took over possession of the ball and ran out the clock while the UMass defense watched hopelessly.

It has been suggested that a pass from Pennington to anyone of his receivers may have proven to be a better strategy it would have at least saved one time-out.

MacPherson said that one of his coaches was in favor of going for the first down. "I should have listened to that man," he said, "He's a good coach."

Film highlights of the game were shown and unfortunately they exposed the fallibility of the referees. On the game winning touchdown play for Holy Cross, the film caught the Crusader offensive with only six men on the line; the rules require that at least seven men line up on the offensive line at all times.

Coach MacPherson said that Coach Ed Dougherty of Holy Cross called him and apologized, explaining that it was completely unintentional.

Errol Prisbee, receiver coach, gave a scouting report on the Villanova team. He attended the Mississippi vs. Villanova (Miss. won 24-6) game last week and came away that "Villanova is a good ball club, but we are a better ball club."

MacPherson also announced that Earle Brown has been moved back to defensive back. The decision was made last Thursday, before the game. Brown had wanted to be a wide receiver but he was beaten out by Tim Berra.

Tight end Gary Mika will not play Saturday. He was helped off the field in the second quarter of the Holy Cross game with a knee injury. X-rays did not reveal anything and doctors are not certain what is wrong.

Encore For Funeral Dirge

The body is still warm, and the soul may not have yet left for where it's bound, but the Red Sox is dead.

The end came earlier, yet no more mercifully than last season, and the disappointment of thirteen previous such deaths in the last fourteen years makes this one no less painful.

The true Red Sox fan, no matter how much he knows in March that September will bring another funeral, is a being of hope. When the score is 12-3 in the eighth and Craig Skok or Mike Garman the man warming up, he sits with his Gansett and remembers 1967. Or he talks of the future Dewey Evans has and the way Rick Miller gets on base.

"What went wrong?" he wonders. And though he and his friends can point to Marty Pattin and the left field screen, or Reggie Smith and his knees, or Carlton Fisk's .084 batting average with men on base as specifics, he really knows that the answer is they just weren't good enough, and the only reason they were so close for so long is that everyone else was so medicore and that the only reason they won in '67 was Carl Yastrzemski and Jim Lonborg and Jerry Adair sold their souls to the devil.

Eddie Kasko will be gone, it seems sure, because he said he had the team and didn't. This will make most happy because Eddie was a human being in a city that demands its sports leaders by Henny Youngman, Albert Einstein and Jesus Christ at the same time.

No matter that Kasko did more with less than any Sox manager since Bill Carrigan (save for Williams in The Year), he didn't have charisma, and besides, he left his pitchers in too long.

Ah, but for some, the true ones, and the ones who remember what it was like before 1965, the year was not a total loss.

Yes, the only thing more exciting than a Sox win is a Yankee loss, and those pin-striped pin heads who "had it all" in June are below .500 in September. They had Murcer and Nettles, and McDaniel, McDowell, and Dobson, and of course Albert "Sparky" Lyle.

What fools the Sox were to trade Lyle. After all, don't relief pitchers usually last for decades, especially ones who rely on overpowering batters? What was Sparky's record last time you checked the Daily News?

In June the Yankee fans popped sickenly out of the woodwork, and in July they had, like all dogs, their day. But now lots of Yankee fans with fast wallets and slower brains are putting in a little OT to pay off their gambling debts.

Bob Gamere told a Yankee fan one night in July that 1) the Yanks would finish at least 10 games out and in fourth and 2) the trouble with New Yorkers is they think the world ends at the George Washington Bridge.

Which nobody can deny.

The true Sox fan hopes the "Bronx Bombers" never win another baseball game, let alone another pennant. And his favorite movie star is Ray Walston and movie "Damn Yankees."

Even so, the delight I (we) find in the Yankee demise can not overcome the pain of another wasted summer.

Reggie Smith, the fans boo you and call you nasty things because in a perverse way, they love you. It's just that you could help end their agony and you didn't. Be glad you play in a city where people care and hope that you don't end up in Baltimore or Atlanta or San Francisco, where you could drop your drawers in center field and only the pigeons would notice.

Yet, it was a good season, and I'm sad to see it end.

This is a strange obituary, probably because not many things rate more than one, let alone a yearly one. What can you say, except wait till next year, and I've heard that one before.

'Hammering' Hank Aaron, superstar of the Atlanta Braves, has a lot to smile about. Tuesday night he connected for his 710th career home run, which leaves him only four behind Babe Ruth's record. Currently in his hot'est streak of the year, Aaron has upped his average to .288 with 83 runs batted in.

Board Of Governors Opposes Military Recruitment In C.C.

By SHARON HUGHES

The Campus Center Board of Governors last night upheld an amendment to prohibit representatives of the armed forces from recruiting students in the concourse of the Campus Center.

Don Sullivan, student employee representative on the Board, explained his new role as a conduit between student employees and management in the C.C.

The 15 member student body also expressed their appreciation to Ken Dean, acting director of the Campus Center since June, for the "fine job" he has done. A new director, John Corker, officially began duties Wednesday.

Additionally, the Board's Program Council reported some future activities.

The amendment to prohibit representatives of the armed forces from recruiting in the CC concourse was first approved by the Board almost two years ago. The Board is a 15 member body representing different student groups with power to establish policy for the C.C. that carries the full force of law.

Discussion regarding the prohibition covered the following points:

--I'm violently opposed to recruitment in the C.C....they've got the post office and national T.V." Don Sullivan (student employee representative).

--"recruiting shouldn't take place in the lobby; it's a public building...they can rent a room in the C.C. to recruit." Jim Lindsey (graduate senate)

--let them do it in Dickinson; there they've got the ROTC...it's a moral issue. I don't object to the military holding a pro/con discussion in the concourse, but recruiting is the issue here and I'm opposed to it." Tony Tartaglia (undergraduate senate)

--"I'm against it for personal moral considerations." Walter Jonas (graduate senate)

--"I disagree with the idea behind it" (the prohibiting of military recruiters).."that is, that they train people to kill"..."we allow pro abortion groups on the concourse"...(to call recruitment a moral issue is) "splitting hairs with morality". Bob McDonald (undergraduate senate)

--"there's an important difference, pro-abortion groups are students...ROTC has their own building to use for recruitment...it's a moral issue with me and I think it is with most students." Jay Denning (commuter assembly)

--"there's a legal consideration; when you begin leasing space to the public you can't discriminate." Howard Levin (undergraduate senate)

Don Sullivan, student employee representative, said he invites suggestions and grievances about the C.C. from student employees. He requires that the normal managerial command be followed first, e.g. report compalints or suggestions to a supervisor and manager.

Student employees in the C.C. "have never had an alternative place to go" before his appointment, said Sullivan.

He called his job a "vital service" and foresees "no problems because of it, but a benefit for all'. Sullivan said he would attempt to keep in close contact with student employees.

The Program Council announced the possibilities of a Nationwide Film Festival and a Chess conference to be held in the C.C. sometime this year.

The Board unanimously approved the following motion congratulating acting director of the C.C., Ken Dean.

"The C.C. Board of Governors express our appreciation to Ken Dean for the fine job he did as our acting director in guiding the Campus Center through an exceptionally confusing and ambiguous period. It was principally through his expertise, enthusiasm and undertaking that the C.C. has made a successful movement into an organization with viable goods and a solid direction."

In other business, the Board tabled 2 motions from the Finance Committee because written rationales were not included in the request for capital expenditure.

Faculty Senate

Wood Opens First Meeting

By HUBBARD

President Robert C. Wood spoke on University reorganization, the budget, and implementation of the governance document at the first meeting of the Faculty Senate yesterday in Thompson Hall.

In an attempt to bring faculty members up to date on summer actions taken by the Board of Trustees, Wood stated that the education reorganization plan, as proposed by Massachusetts Secretary of Education Cronin, had been placed in study.

Due to the University opposition to this plan, and also the public interest group opposition, these reorganization proposals will not be effected.

New types of budget development were also called for by Wood, especially in regard to the growth of the University. New facilities have recently opened at both the Boston and Worcester campuses, causing an enlargement of the faculty and staff at these locations.

Hailing the new governance document as, "a landmark in attempting a departure from the assembly type organization of a university," Wood went on to state that this document will place students and faculty "in the cockpit of planning especially in such areas as the budget."

Announced at the Faculty-Senate meeting was an election to be conducted among all faculty members on Nov. 15 and 16 concerning collective bargaining.

The meeting was chaired by Professor James Matlack, of the English department, who is the new speaker of the Faculty Senate.

Student Newspapers Seem To Have More Control

By BRIAN COOK

In a recent study done on the control and financing of student newspapers, empirical results have not supported much that has been written about the growing independence of the student newspaper, although some gains have been made in this area.

Despite a large percentage increase (not of any statistical importance) in the number of independent newspapers in the last five years, they remain as a small percentage of the total number of student newspapers. Most of the recently independent newspapers are at public institutions in contrast to the more established independent newspapers at private institutions. Financing was the major reason listed by deans and editors as to why their principle student newspaper is or is not now independent. Advertising and student fees controlled by the student governments still remain the two most important sources of income for student newspapers.

The majority of reported changes from 1968 to the present indicate a shift to more control of student newspapers by students and groups with a student majority. Greater student editorial control exists at private rather than public institutions. Fewer student newspaper advisors exist now than in 1968, they have less control over finances and the establishment of editorial policy than formerly, and are less likely to read copy before publication than in 1968.

The administration has become less important in the selection of advisors while journalism departments and student governments have become somewhat more important, especially at public institutions. Newspaper staffs are now more important in the establishment of editorial policy and editors, particularly at private institutions. They are also more likely to have the last say for the approval of copy.

Deans and editors generally agreed on the major purposes and problems of their student newspapers. The former entails three main tasks which they felt a student newspaper should accomplish: (1) report campus news; (2) provide open forum for expression of ideas and opinions; and (3) provide experience for potential journalists.

Editors at public doctoral institutions also included the promotion of political and social change as one of the main purposes of the student newspaper. The latter aspect of problems seemed to concern the common denominators of financing, recruitment and training of staff.

Dwight House Considers Smaller Council

By ED GORMAN

Dickinson House residents agreed Wednesday night to suspend normal house government operations in favor of a smaller, "more workable" house government council for one semester.

At the dorm meeting which was held in Dickinson House's main lounge, Dwight Middleton, Head of Residence, asked the residents to favor a house council of 19 people instead of the usual council of about 40 people. Middleton said that last year's house government was inefficient and expressed hope that the new council would be moe responsive to the opinion of all residents.

The new council will meet once a week to get things started and will decide on the frequency of other meetings in the future.

Middleton also announced the formation of a house Personel Committee which will monitor resident opinion on Dickinson House and Orchard Hill officials. The first decision for the Personel Committee will be on the use of the faculty resident apartment on the second floor of Dickinson.

At this time the faculty resident apartment is officially not in use. However it is being occupied by former faculty resident Roberto White with Middleton's permission. White was introduced to the residents at the meeting and he asked them to favor a proposal which would allow him to serve as faculty resident for the first semester and employ the apartment for other purposes next semester.

White is a professor in the history department specializing in Latin American history. Next semester he will join his family at Purdue University. Middleton asked residents to report their feelings on the proposal to the Personel Committee.

No Evidence Found In 1960 Bugging Charges

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - A special Watergate subcommittee has found virtually no evidence that the committee's chief investigator engaged in electronic surveillance against Richard M. Nixon's 1960 presidential campaign, Senate sources said Thursday.

Sen. Herman E. Talmadge, D-Ga., chairman of the three-man subcommittee, told an executive session of the full committee that he was not prepared to turn in a full report yet because staff investigators still want to interview at least one witness under oath.

But one source familiar with the subcommittee's work during the past five weeks said the evidence gathered so far is flimsy at best and doesn't back up an affidavit signed by the late John Leon stating his conviction that Carmine S. Bellino bugged the Nixon campaign 13 years ago.

Bellino, chief investigator for the Watergate committee, is a long-time associate of the Kennedy family.

At a news conference called by GOP National Chairman George Bush, he was accused of supervising or participating in a political spying operation against Nixon.

Bush produced three affidavits that he said supported the charge and called for the committee to look into the matter.

Court Asks That Cox Listen

By MARGARET GENTRY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - A federal appeals court suggested yesterday that President Nixon let special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox listen to White House tape recordings as a possible means of avoiding a judicial-executive branch showdown in the courts.

Cox quickly agreed to follow the proposed compromise.

The White House had no immediate comment.

Nixon so far has refused to let anyone other than some current and former aides hear the tapes of conversations about the Watergate affair.

He claims the courts have no right to make him turn over the tapes either to Cox or a federal judge for inspection.

The appeals court advanced a suggested compromise by which Nixon, his lawyer, and Cox meet and decide among themselves what parts of the controversial tapes could be submitted to the Watergate grand jury.

The judges cautioned, however, that their compromise proposal did not hint at what course they might take if forced to rule whether Nixon must give up the tapes for inspection.

Watergate Tapes

Kennedy Talks Impeachment

WASHINGTON (AP)-Sen. Edward M. Kennedy said today Congress would have to impeach President Nixon if he defies a Supreme Court order to release the controversial Watergate tapes.

"A responsible Congress would be left with no recourse but to exercise its power of impeachment," the Massachusetts Democrat said in a Senate speech in which he deplored "the increasing speculation" Nixon would disobey a Supreme Court ruling that rejects his withholding of the tapes.

Kennedy cited a number of cases showing the President's duty to obey the Supreme Court and urged Nixon "to recognize that talk of defiance tends to undermine all law and order."

Oral arguments were presented earlier this week before the U.S. Court of Appeals here.

The case is expected to reach the court shortly after it reconvenes in early October.

Kennedy said defiance of a Supreme Court order would be an act of "profoundly serious consequences for our system of democratic government," adding that "Congress should not and would not let it stand."

Child Development Studies

Logic Response And Toy Blocks

By JOAN FASSNACHT

Dr. George E. Forman, assistant professor in the Department of Human Development, has discovered patterns in block playing in infants which could form the basis for later successful logical thought.

Logical thought can be defined as the ability to group similar thoughts together, and to separate thoughts that are different.

Dr. Forman's experiment is designed to relate sensori-motor intelligence (eg.: hand-eye coordination), to conceptual thoughts, (eg.; words, mathematics). It is Dr. Forman's thesis that an infant spontaneously stacks similar blocks together and then draws them apart.

The pattern of placing blocks together and then drawing them apart holds importance when a child later learns to classify objects in thought. Manipulating words when thinking and speaking is analogous to manipulating blocks with your hands.

It is theorized that children possess an innate sense of symmetry. While arranging blocks, a child often will reconstruct an unbalanced construction to make it more symmetrical. Such patterns may be early foundations for mathematical thought. A child seems to unconsciously practice mathematical concepts in his building.

Similar studies were performed last year at UMass and the year before at the State University of New York at Buffalo. Dr. Forman's study, which is to begin in October, involves a variation on the original study. Previously, the study was structured to include specific instructions given to the children. In Forman's variation, specific instructions are eliminated. Experimenters want to record what a child can do with the blocks spontaneously, according to his own intuitive rules.

A chapter concerning a previous similar study by Dr. Forman has recently been published under the title "Concepts of Space and Spatial Concepts" in the book, The Development of Spatial Concepts in Children: Trends for Research, edited by John Eliot.

Dr. Forman has also invented a puzzle game for young children, which has a theme in common with his project. The "Young Learners Puzzles" contains puzzles which are graduated in difficulty from the sensori-motor level to the highest level which involves the sensor-motor level plus the conceptual level in which the child has to think about the meaning of the puzzle piece before fitting it in.

Dr. Forman has been with the Department of Human Development since 1972. He received his B.S. in Psychology from Louisiana State University in 1963, and a Ph.D. in Psychology From the University of Alabama in 1967. He previously taught at Louisiana State University, George Peabody College for Teachers, and SUNY at Buffalo.

Mothers are urged to bring their children between the ages of six and twenty-four months to the Human Development Center for these studies. Three visits will be required; one in October, again in February, and the last in June. The children will be filmed on Super-8 camera at slow speed so that the child's actions with the blocks can be studied in detail. Parents will be paid a small amount to help defray transportation costs. Parents are also invited to attend private showings of their child on film. Comments from the research staff will be provided if so desired. All interested parents should contact Dr. Forman at 207 Hampshire House or call 545-2231.

Selectmen Seek Rt. 9 Work

By SUSAN GALER

Amherst selectmen want reconstruction of Route nine south of the UMass campus to get underway soon. They decided at their meeting on this week to press the state for a start in the immediate future.

Reconstruction of Route nine, which is already behind schedule, was brought up for discussion by Town Manager Allen Torrey. The deadline has been scheduled for the Fall of 1974. The Board voted unanimously to write to the state representatives to put pressure on to start work immediately.

In other business, the selectmen announced that the five finalists for the new police chief position will include an University senior; adopted a plan for a committee to draft trails and regulations for snowmobiles and other recreational vehicles; voted to abolish a law requiring licenses for tag sales; announced the New England's Selectmen's Association will be meeting in Amherst this weekend; and discussed some articles proposed for action at a special town meeting planned for this fall.

Of the five finalists, one will be selected to succeed Chief Francis Hart. The UMass senior is Ronald Lewis Reid.

The Ad-Hoc Recreational Committee will meet for one year. This committee has been established to determine trails and bridges on which snowmobiles can be driven. The problems of noise and damage to the land caused by the vehicles have been great. Selectmen said this Committee is expected to help rectify the problem. Selectmen also decided that motorcycles and mini-bikes must not be driven within 300 feet of a residence unless permission is given by the property owner.

Selectmen Nancy B. Eddy brought up the point of residents having to obtain a license in order to hold a tag sale. The Board voted to abolish the law. Chairman Michael P. Sullivan, Jr. said that tag sales will be permitted as long as they do not impede the flow of traffic or obstruct public property.

The New England Selectmen's Association will be meeting at the Campus Center on Friday night. Many prominent selectmen from all over New England will be attending.

Various warrant articles were brought up by Allen Torrey. He said the list is very preliminary and other items undoubtedly will be added. Among the subjects on the list to be discussed include the redevelopment authority and water needs. At the next meeting these articles will be reviewed further along with any additional items.

Recent Graduate Handles Admissions

By JACK ALEY
Associated Press Writer

LEWISTON, Maine (AP)-Jo Ann Douglass got out of Bates College two years ago. Now she's deciding who gets in.

Named assistant dean of admissions at the four-year liberal arts college last month, Ms. Douglass, 23, said: "I'm definitely not too young for the job.

"Admissions work requires a young person who can talk with high school students and is a recent college graduate."

The first woman named to a top admissions post at Bates, Ms. Douglass is hopeful she and the several women added to the school's faculty this year "will offer a model role for women students at Bates."

"I expect our presence in top positions will increase the confidence of women students and encourage them to seek areas of graduate work and employment they previously thought were out of reach," she said.

A Portland native, the 1968 high school graduate said increasing awareness of feminism on the Bates campus is only "partially responsible" for her being hired.

Jo Ann, a top student, breezed through college in three years. She said her big job is to "insure that Bates' applicant pool doesn't decline." The college had 2,220 applicants for the 400 places in the entering class this fall.

With some colleges now having to actually seek students, Jo Ann said she will travel throughout the Northeast this fall to visit high schools in an "effort to encourage wider geographic distribution among future classes."

Ms. Douglass said it's too early to tell if her being a woman will affect the quality of the admissions process at Bates.

"At this point," she said, "it doesn't seem to matter whether a man or woman is in this spot."

Price, Energy Policies Protested

WASHINGTON (AP) — An estimated 2,500 service station operators gathered at the Capitol steps Thursday to protest the administration's pricing and energy policies.

Many of them wore oil stained uniforms. They came from as far away as Oregon and Washington. Delegations came from southern, midwestern and northeastern states.

The rally was organized by the National Congress of Petroleum Retailers.

Among the congressmen addressing the group, Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass., said the Cost of Living Council has established two sets of rules, one for the major oil companies and "one for the guy trying to make a living pumping gasoline."

Speakers criticized the council for not allowing the gasoline retailers to pass along price increases permitted their suppliers.

Amherst Student Dies In Accidental Drowning

A routine swimming test turned to disaster Wednesday night when an eighteen year old Amherst College student drowned in the Colleges Pratt Pool

Mouth to mouth resusitation efforts conducted by the attending lifeguard and the school's physician Dr. Russell Lane failed to save Gerald C. Penny, a freshman from New Orleans. Penny had been at the school one week at the time of the accident.

An autopsy will be conducted to determine whether the cause of Penny's death was drowning, heart attack, or other illness.

Penny was pulled from the water in his third lap of the hundred yard swim by Robert Kirkwood, lifeguard. The 100 yard swim is a degree requirement at Amherst.

The body was moved to Cooley Dickinson Hospital where his parents are expected tomorrow. The body will be taken to New Orleans for a funeral there.

Penny, who planned to be an attorney was graduated second in his class at St. Augustine High School. He was class Salutorian, was listed among America's Outstanding High School Students.

Nixon May Ask 10% Income Tax Hike

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon may ask Congress for a temporary 10 per cent hike in federal income tax rates with the money refunded to taxpayers later-in a forced savings plan intended to cool the economy, the White House said Thursday.

Presidential counselor Melvin R. Laird disclosed Nixon's consideration of the unusual tax plan but said no final decision had been made on it.

Laird said the proposal was not the same as a tax increase, but rather a device to remove income temporarily from the economy in an effort to fight inflation.

The presidential adviser told a White House news briefing that the tentative proposal Nixon ordered studied by his economic aides could work this way:

Each individual and corporate taxpayer would have his tax rate increased by 10 per cent. In other words, a person now in the 20 per cent tax bracket would find himself paying at a rate of 22 per cent.

The extra taxes collected would go into an escrow account and would be returned to the taxpayer at a later time when the economy cools and inflation ebbs. Laird spoke of the refunds coming in two to five years.

Presumably, the taxpayer would receive interest on the forced savings account. Laird did not discuss this point, but interest payments were one feature of such a plan presented by Federal Reserve Board chairman Arthur F. Burns.

Laird would not set a specific timetable for a presidential decision, but said he doubted Congress couls consider such a plan until next year.

Congress Reaction At First Skeptical

WASHINGTON (AP)-Skepticism and opposition were Congress' first reactions yesterday to a White House aide's statement that President Nixon is considering a refundable income tax increase.

Nearly all members of the tax-writing committees who commented opposed the idea of a 10 per cent increase in rates, with the yield to be returned to the taxpayer when inflation abates.

Presidential counselor Melvin R. Laird disclosed that Nixon is considering the plan, but has not made a final decision on it.

"My guess is that the President isn't close to making such a recommendation," Chairman Wilbur D. Mills, D-Ark., of the House Ways and Means Committee said by telephone from the Little Rock hospital where he is recuperating from an operation.

Mills said he would look at such a plan, but that it could not pass Congress this year and by next year the conomy may be flagging and need stimulation, not restraint.

"It looks like a trial balloon they are already backing away from," said Rep. Al Ullman, D-Ore., the committee's acting chairman. "I couldn't support it. I favor a loophole-closing tax bill that would raise revenue."

Cattle Market Improving More Beef Soon

WASHINGTON (AP)-More beef soon may be headed toward consumer dinner tables, according to a new feedlot inventory of cattle by the Agriculture Department.

As of Sept. 1, the department said yesterday, cattle being fattened for slaughter in seven important beef states totaled more than 9.1 million head, up 6 per cent from a year earlier.

The Sept. 1 count, however, was up only slightly from a month previous. During August, the report said, sales from the fattening pens dropped 20 per cent from a year earlier.

That was during the price lid on retail and wholesale beef prices which was removed earlier this week.

The reported provided further evidence that cattle were held back from slaughter longer than usual. During August cattle which were sold averaged up to 39 pounds heavier in weight than a year earlier.

The department said the average price for slaughter steers at major markets in August was $52.86 per 100 pounds of live weight, up $18.16 from a year ago and $5.43 above the July average.

Walpole Strikes Costly

By STEVEN A. COHEN
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) - Costs to the taxpayer of the inmate strike at Walpole State Prison are beginning to mount.

The state is paying $134 per day now that the inmates aren't working for a private company to clean up the kitchen and dining areas after the Walpole population east.

An $8,040 contract for these services was awarded in late July.

A $10,000 contract for an outside mediator to help resolve the dispute was awarded late last month to the National Center for Dispute Settlement. The contract, for 40 working days, comes to $250 per day.

The work stoppage also is costing revenue normally brought in by the prison industries and applied to the cost of prison programs.

Negotiations are in limbo. Discussions broke off nearly two weeks ago, and inmates, still subject to what the Corrections Department calls a controlled lockup, are continuing the work boycott begun in mid-July.

The new Walpole superintendent, Douglas H. Vinzant, hoped to bring the parties together but that hasn't happened, according to a department spokesman.

Vinzant, formerly superintendent at the Concord penal institution, was named to head the maximum security prison at Walpole last month. Following prison riots and the ousting of former Commissioner John O. Boone, the prison had been run briefly by state police.

The mediation contract with the National Center for Dispute Settlement runs out at the end of next month.

Gen. Auguste Pinochet Named Chilean Head

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) - The military junta named Auguste Pinochet army general as president yesterday, formed a Cabinet and broke diplomatic relations with Cuba in a sharp reversal of Chile's foreign policy.

An around-the-clock curfew, in effect since Tuesday, was lifted at noon for 6 1/2 hours so civilians could leave their homes to purchase food and other necessities.

In Buenos Aires, leaders of toppled Marxist President Salvador Allende's Popular Unity coalition said the former commander of the Chilean army, Gen. Carlos Prats, was leading troops from the south to attack the junta forces in Santiago.

There was no confirmation of the coalition leaders' information.

The leaders said they had a message from Concepcion, Chile, about 265 miles southwest of Santiago, relaying word that Prats had taken command of troops and volunteer workers. They would not say how the message reached them or where Prats' army was.

The coalition leaders in Buenos Aires included Juan Enriquo Vega, former Chilean ambassador to Cuba; Ocatavio Gonzalez, a director of the Central Labor Union and Communist party leader; and Jorge Arrata, economic advisor to Allende.

The curfew in Santiago had been so strictly enforced that civilians couldn't leave their homes. Hundreds of others in this city of 3 million had been stranded in downtown offices and hotels.

Just as the break in the curfew began, a new flurry of shooting broke out in the downtown area and only a handful of pedestrians ventured into the streets there. Troops have been fighting in the city for three days against snipers and other armed supporters of the dead Allende.

There have been unofficial reports that 500 to 1,000 people have died and many others wounded in fighting since Tuesday morning, when a coup toppled Allende's three-year-old government. The military authorities, in charge of the only radio network on the air, have not mentioned casualty figures.

Mid East Fighting Highest Since 1967

By ARTHUR MAX
Associated Press Writer

TEL AVIV (AP) - Israeli and Syrian warplanes wheeled near Syria's Mediterranean coastline Thursday in two dogfights that marked the biggest Middle East aerial battle since the 1967 six-day war.

The Israeli air force said it shot down 13 Syrian MIG21 fighters and lost one of its own French-built Mirages but rescued the pilot. Syria said its air force shot down five Israeli jets and lost eight MIGs.

Brig. Gen. Binyamin Peled, the Israeli air force chief, said 12 Israeli Mirages and Phantoms "were on a routine sea patrol" about 150 miles north of Israel's northern port of Haifa when they were intercepted by about a dozen Syrian MIG21 aircraft.

Syria claimed that the Israeli jets penetrated its airspace near Tartous, Syria's second largest port. Peled said, "We were over international waters when the battle ensued."

The Israelis said they shot down nine MIGs and suffered their one plane loss during the initial contact. About two hours later, the Israelis said, their planes shot down four more MIGs while a helicopter was rescuing the downed Israeli pilot from the sea. An Israeli helicopter also rescued a Syrian pilot.

The Syrian was reported in good condition. The Israelis did not say what they would do with him.

The downed Israeli pilot, a burly man who appeared to be in his late 20s, appeared at a news conference still dressed in his flight suit. He smiled frequently and appeared relaxed. His name was not released.

"The battle was short. Then we were ordered to break contact and go home," he said. "About 10 miles south of the spot of engagement I was hit. I had to shut down the engine and after gliding for some time I finally ditched."

Cambodians Fighting For Kompong Cham

By DENIS D. GRAY
Associated Press Writer

KOMPONG CHAM (AP)-The governor and military commander of this provincial capital, confident his forces had all but secured the city, said yesterday government troops would begin clearing Communist-led insurgents from the outer districts.

Maj. Gen. Sar Hor told newsmen that insurgents still controlled sections of the city's university, the road to the airport and severl key points in the western suburbs.

"But in the city there are only isolated enemy elements left," the general said.

Only sporadic mortar and small-arms fire could be heard in Kompong Cham Thursday, but the devastation of the weeklong battle for Cambodia's third largest city were widely evident.

Sar Hor said the government suffered 5,000 civilian and military wounded and 1,000 military and civilian dead. He said 20,000 to 30,000 residents were led off by the insurgents, whose casualties he estimated at 2,000 killed or wounded.

Entire city blocks were charred ruins. Sar Hor said there was enough food and water but inadequate medical supplies.

Chrysler, U.A.W. May Be Near Accord

By MARTIN HIRSCHMAN
Associated Press Writer

DETROIT (AP)-With a strike deadline only one day away, the United Auto Workers and Chrysler Corp. imposed a news blackout on their contract negotiations Thursday night.

Traditionally, the blackout has been viewed as a sign that the two sides are nearing a settlement.

The blackout was imposed only a few hours after a UAW spokesman said Chrysler had not made a new economic proposal and added, "It better happen soon."

The union has called Chrysler's initial three per cent wage increase offer "a mockery" and said a second proposal is essential to avoiding a strike by the firm's 127,500 UAW-represented workers in the United States and Canada.

Negotiators prepared to bargain through the night in an effort to reach agreement before the current contract expires at 11:59 p.m. Friday.

Providence Papers Hit By Strike

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP)-Members of the Providence Newspaper Guild voted Thursday night to strike the Providence Journal-Bulletin newspapers in a dispute over retroactive pay.

The strike, the first by the guild in the newspaper's history, was endorsed on a 92-86 vote after more than two hours of debate at a general membership meeting.

A spokesman for the Providence Journal Co., which publishes the two newspapers, said the company would continue publishing.

The guild, representing more than 400 news, commercial and maintenance employes, set up picket lines outside the newspaper plant immediately.

The strike vote came four days after the guild ratified a two-year contract proposed by the company May 16 that time, the company said the guild must accept the proposal by May 23 or lose any retroactive wage hikes negotiated since Jan. 31, the date the old contract expired.

In voting to accept the offer Monday, the guild said it would not "waive or prejudice its claim to this retroactivity."

The company refused to sign the contract Wednesday, calling the union's acceptance of the pact "an obvious deception."

MD. Investigation Resumes Security Is Tightened

By DAVID GOELLER
Associated Press Writer

BALTIMORE, Md. (AP)-A special federal grand jury resumed Thursday its investigation of alleged political cooruption in Maryland. The panel met amid unprecedented security restrictions enforced by more than two dozen federal marshals.

The marshals sealed off a corridor leading to the grand jury room and to a nearby elevator so witnesses before the panel could come and go undetected. Marshals also kept newsmen out of the courthouse garage. They said they did so on orders of the United States attorney.

Because Vice President Spiro T. Agnew has been implicated in the allegations of kickbacks and conspiracy under investigation by the grand jury, the unprecedented security precautions led to speculation that the panel was entering the Agnew phase of its probe.

But, in Washington, a spokesman for the Justice Department said it wasn't so.

Officials Warn Of Fuel Shortage

By JIM LUTHER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)- White House adviser John Love conceded Thursday that the nation may face temporary heating-fuel shortages this winter. But he gave no indication that the Nixon administration will require allocation as a solution.

Love, director of the White House Energy Policy Office, told a Senate subcommittee that the administration is seeking to stimulate the supply of fuel oil, but that allocation is still under consideration.

He thus disagreed with a growing number of congressmen who are calling for mandatory allocation before winter.

Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., the most persistent advocate of mandatory allocation, wrote President Nixon that the nation faces "serious power shortages and blackouts in major metropolitan areas this winter if action is not immediately taken to assist electrical utilities in securing essential fuel supplies."

At a news conference, Jackson released letters from Mayor Tom Bradley of Los Angeles and from the chairman of Consolidated Edison, the nation's largest electric utility, urging mandatory allocation.

Bradley said a fuel shortage is threatening the city's fire and police operations.

Chairman Charles F. Luce of Consolidated Edison said the New York City area faces the threat of power disruptions or sharply increased prices for power if utilities turn to foreign suppliers for the oil needed to fire electric generators.

"Home-heating-oil prices will inevitably rise to new highs unless Congress enacts legislation establishing mandatory fuel allocations," Luce wrote.

The Senate twice has passed Jackson's bill requiring the President to implement mandatory allocation. Under that bill, which is pending in the House, the President would direct the pricing and distribution of the nation's entire supply of oil and petroleum products to ensure that public-service needs are met and that each section of the nation gets a share of fuel.

Nixon already has authority to require allocation, but has relied on a voluntary program.

Catalyst Chemistry Program Helps Disadvantaged Youths

Rinzy Williams of Amherst, a student at Amherst Regional High School, is doing research this summer in the chemistry laboratory at the UMass.

He is one of approximately 100 high school students chosen to participate in Catalyst, a unique program sponsored at 79 colleges and universities in 39 states by the American Chemical Society to help motivate young people from disadvantaged families and to give them an incentive to continue their education at the college level. Catalyst is part of the Society's Project SEED, a more comprehensive nationwide effort to aid the disadvantaged in both education and employment.

Mr. Williams is working under the direction of Dr. O. T. Zajicek on a research project entitled "An Investigation into the Trophic States of Lakes."

Now in its sixth summer, the program brings promising high school students, principally juniors, into college and university chemistry laboratories where they work for ten weeks on a one-to-one basis with professional scientists. The work they do is aimed at expanding their general knowledge of the scientific environment.

The participating students were recommended by their teachers and counselors as having an interest in learning and a real potential for growth but who, because their circumstances, do not feel that there is an opportunity for their education beyond high school. The personal attention and the exposure to a scientific atmosphere means a greatly heightened interest in higher education and an increased motivation for self-development in almost every case.

Local sections of the Society help coordinate the program in their areas, working with local high schools and participating colleges and universities. Each student receives a SEED grant of $500 from the American Chemical Society; participating school absorbs any administrative expense.

The overall program, Project SEED, of which Catalyst is a part, is named after the Subcommittee on the Education and Employment of the Disadvantaged, a unit of the Society's Committee on Chemistry and Public Affairs. Dr. Charles G. Overberger of the University of Michigan is Chairman of the Committee on Chemistry and Public Affairs, and Dr. Alan C. Nixon, President of the American Chemical Society, is Project SEED chairman. Dr. Leo Schubert of The American University in Washington, D. C., heads the SEED task force group which is directing the Catalyst Program.

Other SEED task forces are engaged in projects for upgrading chemistry programs at small colleges, providing tutorial help, providing assistance to high school guidance counselors and teachers, and helping college-level science students to find summer employment in the chemical industry.

Jobs Can Kill

By HAL BOYLE

NEW YORK (AP) - Things a columnist might never know if he didn't open his mail:

If you hate your job, change it or it may kill you. Medical studies show fatal heart attacks are more common among people who have low job satisfaction than among those who are happy in their work.

At no time in later life does a human being normally grow as rapidly as during the nine months before birth.

Western foods are on the march in the Far East. A chain of pizza pie parlors is now being franchised in Japan.

In arid villages in the Atlas Mountains of Algeria, greenery is so scarce that a single tree may have several owners. Every branch is accounted for.

Are you feeling more crowded? Well, that's probably because you are. Two-thirds of all 200-million-plus Americans are packed into only two percent of the land, according to the National Geographic Society.

Kentucky Colonel's Telethon To Aid Democratic Party

By CRAIG AMMERMAN
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - The man who convinced America to eat its chicken dinner out of a bucket now is trying to merchandise the idea that consumers should pay for political campaigns out of their pocket.

"I think the American people would like to feel they own their government," says John Y. Brown Jr. Armed with that belief and the selling techniques that turned Kentucky Fried Chicken from a local restaurant into the world's second largest food operation, Brown is involved in his second political telethon in as many years.

Brown, 39, whose interests now include a professional basketball team his wife operates and a chain of $1 hamburger outlets run from trolley cars, is the driving force behind the Democratic party's telethon, scheduled for 5 1/2 hours of prime time tomorrow night on the NBC television network.

Brown borrowed money to buy the fried chicken business in 1964 and sold it two years later at a $35-million profit. He convinced his party to have last year's preconvention telethon and a network to televise it, then put up $1.5 million to back it.

It is Brown's hope that tomorrow night's extravaganza will net more than last year's $2 million and in the process serve as a basis for reform of the method in which political campaigns are financed.

FTC Investigates Skin Irritants

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Trade Commision, in response to prersistent complaints of skin irritation and infections among children, has launched a nationwide investigation of bubble bath.

The FTC investigation, initiated earlier this month, represents a resurence of concern over a problem originally tackled by the Food and Drug Administration three years ago.

The FDA said then that the major producers of children's bubble baths had agreed to reformulate their products to use less detergent ingredients.

But an FDA official said Thursday the action did not diminish the number of complaints to the agency concerning rashes and urinary tract infections among small children.

Heinz Eiermann, head of the FDA's division of cosmetics, said that of the 1,262 cosmetic reaction complaints received since January, 1970, there have been 85 involving bubble baths.

Fixin' Your Own

I have to sympathize with those underclassmen who have not yet reached the magic age of twenty-one. For it is they who must suffer the glop that those ladies call food. I know, for the past three years, I suffered too. But no more.

University regulations state that any student who is a senior or has reached the magic age can tell the Dining Commons to go screw itself and take advantage of a fantastic option left open to them. Either they can leave the dorm system and move off-campus (which ain't bad) or go and still live in a dorm and prepare your own food. This writer, having met both criteria, and having a single room in a dorm with kitchenettes on each floor, chose to stay in his dorm and fix his own.

I say this is fantastic because of the total freedom of choice for meals. Now, I can eat what I want, how I want and when I want guided by only two restrictions: staying within your budget and keeping the facilities clean.

Staying within your budget is not the most difficult thing in the world, even with the food shortage that our Big Brother Government has planned. Unless you eat enough to fill up an elephant for a week, you can get by for around fifteen dollars a week (for 16 weeks that's around $300 but if you want good quality, you have to pay for it.) Most people probably won't even eat twenty dollars worth of food in a week unless this government caused inflation and shortage gets worse, which it might. But all this is besides the point. Actually, what's better? Spending $280-$320 for a meal ticket or spending a little more money and being able to eat one helluvalot better? You seniors decide and make your own choice, everyone else, sorry!

One more thing about food shopping. A new Finast supermarket has opened adjacent to Four Seasons in Hadley and that may make prices drop because of competition. Yes, the Amherst area monopoly of Stop-and-Shop has been broken and prices may drop some. So take advantage of this and compare prices. You'll probably save a good deal of money in the long run. And forget about Munchy's. That's a ripoff,-too.

Now, about keeping facilities clean. It does involve a little work but the University does have its requirements about its own dorm kitchenette facilities. They have a right, they own the dorms, essentially. Besides, the regulations are very reasonable. Your head of residence should have a copy and if he/she does not, you should be able to get one from Environmental Health and Safety. Anyway, it's better to clean up after yourself following each meal as it, too, is easier in the long run.

One more thing I ought to mention and that is the initial investment. Cooking and eating tools can be purchased at a total cost of around $50. If it's that much higher, you are not only getting ripped off, but you are not looking for the best bargain. And you should do the same in looking for a refrigerator. I recommend buying one rather than renting one as it's better. Buying one is more expensive, true, but at least it's yours to keep.

So one not need be ripped off by Stoneham's Stoneheads if one has a little extra money for an initial investment, and a little time on his hands to cook and clean up. All one has to do is set aside some time to do what's needed which is no real hang-up. And for those of you who are eligible, I thoroughly and wholeheartedly recommend telling the D.C. to go to hell and start fixin' your own. You'll eat better.

President Nixon was treated yesterday to a taste of what the silent majority eats to keep them quiet. In response to the master of mandate's acknowledgement that he didn't know what a boybean looked like, Jerry Litton, a Missouri Democrat, mailed Nixon a five cent bag of soybeans. Careful observers at the most recent Presidential press conference saw Milhous munching the beans between subtle attacks by the establishment press.

What Associated Press failed to report was that not only has Nixon become familiarized with soybeans, but a cornicopia of other delights known only to the working peons of the U.S. Senator Barry Goldwater sent Nixon a cucumber. Senator Ervin mailed the president a bag of peanuts. George McGovern sent the man a Massachusetts bred crow to eat.

In other capitol city developments it was recently reported that Mr. Nixon has not been to church in several months. Presidents normally hold religious ceremonies in the East Room of the White House. Nixon has suspended this activity. The East Room has undergone several architectural changes, done of course by the GSA.

The once formal room is now a piggery, chicken house and indoor cattle pen. H. R. Haldeman and Maurice Stans operate the facility. The President's usual ability to foresee the future is evident again as he and Pat stock up on combustibles for the long winter ahead.

President Nixon has been keeping out of sight lately. Popular national editorialists have given all manner of excuse for his disappearance: Watergate, speech preparation, etc., etc...The real fact is that he and Pat have been at Camp David all week canning snap beans and bread and butter pickles. His trustworthy advisers are taking care of his presidential duties while he is away.

Boycott: UFW Fights For Survival

By ZOE BEST

The dining commons are feeding the UMass masses again. From the Top of the Campus to the Blue Wall, scab (non-union) lettuce salads and grapes will be part of the fare. In addition, wines, some of which are most popular among students, bear labels of companies that refuse to renew contracts with the United Farmworkers Union (UFW). Since 1965 the UFW has struggled for very basic rights: higher wages, field toilets, prevention of child labor, abolition of the labor contractor, election of field foreman, health insurance, grievance procedures, overtime pay, paid holidays, secret ballot union elections and abatement of pesticide contamination which if agreed to by growers, reduces farmworker mortality from pesticide poisoning and provides the consumer with a healthful food item. In seeking these rights, the UFW has found itself inadvertantly exposing the corruptness of the legal processes, the source of high food costs, the links between agri-business and government and the terrorism, perpetrated by the growers, their private guards, the county sheriffs and deputies and Teamster thugs. Thus with the expiration of the UFW contracts signed in the 60's and the subsequent signing of sweetheart contracts between growers and the Teamsters Union, the UFW has had to renew a campaign to engage us all in a national boycott of iceberg lettuce, table grapes and wine. This is the only available means within the confines of the Chavez philosophy of non-violence by which UFW contracts can be renewed.

In 1969 Chavez said, "We shall overcome and change the agri-business system that seeks to keep us enslaved...." Agri-business in California is not the cozy family farm; it is thousands of acres leased to growers by large national conglomerates or multi-national corporations and large ranches held by a few names. Typical California growers include: Standard Oil, Southern Pacific Railroad, the Los Angeles Times, Bank of America, Dow, ITT, and Del Monte. Del Monte sales this year are 13% higher than last year and profits are 10 percent higher. Presently they have a 15 million dollar budget for advertising and a 7-1/2 million dollar budget for research (tax deductible) which results in such benefits as developing durable, standardized "tomatoes" which are suitable for mechanical harvesting. This ultimately results in farmworker unemployment and thus an increase in welfare recipients, and for the company ends the potential confrontation with a farmworkers union that makes demands. Del Monte owns and leases land in Canada, Kenya, Phillipines, Central and South America and the Union of South Africa.

In order to sense the monopoly scale of California's agri-business, the following statistical profile may help: 7% of the farmowners own 79% of the land and employ 75% of all farm labor. California agri-business accounts for 1 out of every 7 jobs in the state. The U.S. Agriculture Extension Service reveals that 9% of the table grape farms produce 62% of the national harvest. The U.S. Department of Agriculture has calculated that the average size of the California corporate farm is 3,206 acres. In other words the UFW is fighting the California cadilac farmers who enjoy monopoly benefits such as setting prices which induces supermarkets inflation and who accept Congressional subsidy handouts which curtails planting and harvesting to create an artificial short supply of foods. This invariably leads to high prices and high rates of profit.

Besides the national boycott of grapes and iceberg lettuce, consumers are being asked not to buy Gallo, Franzia or Guild wines. E&J Gallo Co. is the largest U.S. winemaker; Gallo grossed $250 million in 1971 and made profits near to $35 million. Gallo sold 100 million gallons in 1971 which is half of all California wine and almost two times the volume of its nearest competitor. On July 12, Gallo wine officials broke off negotiations with the UFW and handed the 500 workers a memo informing them that the Teamsters would bargain for them. The workers immediately walked off the job and have maintained picket lines since, despite confrontations with private police, sheriffs and deputies, harrassment and eviction from their housing. The UFW contracts of 3 years ago had increased wages from 77¢ an hour to the current $2.40. The 14 hour day was eliminated and field conditions were improved. The Gallo wines being boycotted are: Ripple, Boone's Farm, Spanada, Paisano, Thunderbird, Carlo Rossi and Red Mountain. Other popular wines being boycotted from the other two companies are: Tavola Red, Winemaster Guild, Roma, Cribari and Mendocino.

Last month the United Farmworkers Union suffered the imprisonment of over 5,000 strikers which included clergy and notables such as Dorothy Day, Editor of the Catholic Worker. Cesar Chavez called a halt to picketing after two UFW union members were killed. A 60 year-old farmworker, Juan de la Cruz was shot outside of the Giumarra Ranch. Four days before 10,000 farmworkers had marched behind the coffin of Nagi Daifallah, 24 year-old farmworker from Yemen. He had been beaten on the head with a flashlight by a Kern County sheriff's deputy. Daifallah was among more than 1200 Yemeni workers in the San Joaquin Valley. They were brought in during the first two years of the '65 farmworkers strike and since then, along with Chicanos, Filipinos, Indians, Blacks and poor whites have become part of the UFW membership. Chavez, in the memorial service for Naji Dai'fallah said,

"Daifallah came to this country seeking opportunity and fell into the trap of poverty and powerlessness that has ensalved so many migrant farmworkers in the United States. Although Brother Naji is dead at the age of 24, the hands that struck him down tremble from fear. It too is a victim of the climate of violence, racism and hatred created by these men who own everything and who kill those men they cannot dominate."

Locally efforts are being coordinated to support the UFW strike and boycott of table grapes, iceberg lettuce and wines mentioned before. Saturday, Food Mart in Northampton will be picketed from 11:00-4:00. Sunday as declared by the Massachusetts Council of Churches (1700 member churches) will be "United Farmworkers Sunday." Last June, New England's 25 Roman Catholic bishops urged Catholics to support the UFW boycott. For those interested in working call 549-0698.

Taking A Step Backward To Go Forward

To The Editor:

With the world progressing in "civilized" manners, bringing awareness to all the problems within our global village, let me stop us to question not individual fault-on several planes, but cultural restriction. Why does the media, so omni-present since Gutenbergia and in reciprocity electric, continue to ruin events and, by so doing, perpetuate misconceptions? The answer, I personally do not have, but see resolution through an analysis of each separate event, weighing factors with different ground.Scales,andpossiblyproposingavaluabletheory which will direct us to even more educative ground. What I wish to do is bring to your attention an article that was placed on the last page of Wednesday's, September 12, Collegian, which I feel represents incorrectly a viable alternative to media that indeed often reflect this same culturization - Western man's bias.

WUMV-TV is not a football network, it is not censorable by any one individual, nor does Marty Kelley posses the role of station director. It is a television station built around a three-credit course offering work for the enthused in production, graphics, public relations, communications research, information distribution, and other accessible areas. Of paramount importance is its identity as a training ground for creative video. We, as Americans, are super-saturated with the sterility of rigid, unassimilating technical standards inherrent in over-the-air broadcasting. Fear is exhibited in digressing a step from that level of technical "expertise" to observe what we've left behind-didactic relevance! WUMV-TV is taking that step. On which ledge do you lie?

Many cable television systems around the country are complying with a Federal Communications Commission's backed-by-a-Supreme-Court's-ruling regulation tooriginate programming. Criteria must be met, but when done so one of two forms of such programming is entitled "access". It allows individuals and groups of feedback through their system and communicate to their community-in obviously better ways than a town platform would allow. The content of the program is restricted only by the operator's social sensitivity, whereas the quality is but the stylishic mode of transportation. I think one would as well get their squash to market via wagon vice trailer-especially if the wagon portrays local aesthetics, and that is your concern. Such structure has not yet been the concern of the FCC. Could the lack of technical standards for cable simply regional coordination and development-not national zeroxing? Are we so decadent that we demand our football games be filmed in color? Should we not label communication as just that and restrict it no more? These questions reflect an overt bias as do their answers. Who is to say if we can judge an outgrowth of a new stem with old branch requirements.

WUMV exists to co-operatively education all concerned with medias. To do this we request valid criticism from other interests. The Collegian should feel no blame, categorizing it bad due to one article that may have been "thrown together" would be equivalent to branding WMUV-TV incapable because it can not broadcast football. In this case, I recommend we all take a step backward to enable us to move ahead.

Looking To The Sides

To The Editor:

Steve Crowe in his recent article entitled "Banned at UMass." gave a very surface account of Marty Kelley's actions concerning the sports network. The article also misrepresented Marty as the station director of WUMV-TV which he is not, he is the sports editor. Marty tried to accomplish something unprecidented in cable TV and certainly unprecidented as far as college sports was concerned. He had very little time in which to accomplish this task and he worked quite hard at it all summer long. First he had to meet with the cable people and schedule time on the cables so that a lot would be left open which he did with a verbal agreement pending McInerney's OK. Secondly he went to McInerney and was told that any tape would have to be carefully reviewed before it would be allowed to go over cable. As far as I know he was never told that the tapes would not be allowed to go out, period. Together we wrote up a proposal to request from the senate that $1,200.00 of our $2,265.00 budget be re-allocated into an equipment fund in order to buy enough new equipment to try and meet McInerney's criteria. Throughout all of these time-consuming tasks, Marty was also looking for ways to make WUMV self sufficient, ways by which to better bring our product to the students, and he was trying to pull a sports crew together. The line that "Marty Kelley just went about the whole thing with his eyes looking straight ahead..." is a very unfair one.

As to the final comment with which all of WUMV-TV was depicted as something "just thrown together." I would ask that you inform yourself of the facts before making so sweeping a statement. Marty's field in our organization and your article were on sports and no effort was made to get any information on what the rest of WUMV is doing. Although on the surface we seem to be a patchwork of rudimentary equipment and for now few people, we are on the move and we are really striving to fulfill the goal that we set up; that being making the great potential of video available to students.

We are at this time recruiting interested students to become part of this enterprise in the fields of production, editing, public relations, sports, graphics, acting, scripting, and a number of other related aspects involved in a television station. There is credit available for students willing to make a commitment to work with us, and a very real opportunity to gain some control over a major aspect of our environment-television. We have a studio and a small but dedicated core of students. If you are interested call me at 253-5745, Bill at 545-5118 Chris at 665-3269, or leave a message at our office on the top floor of the student union.

Black Scientist Society

To The Editor:

Knowing the first week of school can be an extremely trying experience, we of the Black Scientist Society welcome you to the University of Massachusetts and offer our support and encouragement. To the new students we extend a special welcome and to those returning once again its good to have you back.

The Black Scientist Society is a relatively new organization founded at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst during the fall of 1972. The primary goal of the B.S.S. is to provide an excellent student oriented professional organization for the Third World Community. Some of the programs and actions we will take to achieve this goal are: 1. unification of the existant Black Scientist, thereby eliminating the feeling of isolation experienced by many Black Scientists, 2. recruiting more Black and Third World peoples into the hard sciences, 3. establish "Special Skills" programs originated by Black Students to increase scientific awareness in the Black Community, 4. to help provide the skills and tutors needed to survive and succeed in a chosen scientific field and 5. actively recruiting more Black faculty members in the sciences to encourage Black students by letting them know, by example, that success is not just a word to those willing to keep pushing.

What we need more than anything else is your participation. Without you there is and can be no Black Scientist Society. Get involved and give us your much needed support. The benefits to yourself, and to the Third World Community are boundless. Help us to help us all.

Bring Enthusiasm

To The Editor:

There are probably many of you out there who would like to join an organization, but you hesitate. Perhaps you think you would have little to offer, or that the rest of the group would condescend to you. Or maybe you don't know how to go about it.

In most cases, however, a group is eagerly searching for underclassmen. The group wants to be sure of continuity after they graduate (or leave), and the best way of insuring that is having underclassmen, especially freshmen, who will carry on when they leave. I was a freshman two years ago, and I only joined Program Council because I stumbled into it accidently. I felt that as an inexperienced freshman I'd have nothing to offer. But I was welcomed with open arms, and by the end of the semester I was secretary of the Movie Committee. I am now chairman. And now it is my turn to look for new people for my committee, ESPECIALLY FRESHMEN. All you need to bring with you is enthusiasm and a certain committment to Thursday and Sunday nights.

The other committes of Program Council, namely: Social (concerts), Special Events (plays, lectures, etc.), Art, and Recreation (Chess, bowling, bridge, etc.), are also looking for some people. WE know you're out there! If you would like to join us, there will be a recruitment meeting on Monday, September 17, at 7:00 in the Campus Center. The meeting room has not yet been assigned, but the Information desk will know where to find us. This meeting is for those interested in any of the committees of Program Council. Please consider it.

Knock On Wood

To The Editor:

It is the beginning of a new semester at UMass and it is the beginning of Evelyn Wood Reading Dynamics' advertising campaign. As an unsuspecting Freshman last year, I enrolled in an Evelyn Wood course. At my "free" mini-lesson I was told that if I didn't increase my reading speed and comprehension by three times I would receive my money back. I paid over two hundred dollars and took the course. I practiced speedreading for an hour a day for eight weeks with the full expectation that I would increase my reading speed. At the end of eight weeks I found out that I had not increased my speed by three times (according to achievement tests given at the beginning and end of the course). At that time I requested my money back and I was given an address to write to. After writing two letters I have not even received any indication as to whether I am getting my money back. I suspect that I will have to write more letters to find out if I have been officially ripped-off.

Most of what I was taught can be learned from any study guide. Spend two hundred dollars if you want to, but don't think that the course is guaranteed. It's your gamble.

Learn About God

To The Editor:

It is ironic that in our endeavors here at the University to seek knowledge, we can so often overlook the very source of knowledge--God.

The theme of the Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship for this year is getting to know God--who He is, and how He relates to man--as revealed through the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ.

Our purpose is to better understand the God of the Bible who created, sustained, and saved the world.

Jesus himself prayed to His Father: "And this is eternal life, that they know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." (John 17:3) In addition, He has commended us to love one another. Our concern is for each individual to understand himself by learning more about God, and to come into a vital, personal relationship with God through Jesus, and to come in closer contact with other Christians.

Our meetings are on Monday evenings at 7:30 PM in Rm. 803 Campus Center. They are open to anyone who wishes to come and share with us.

Nat'l Science Foundation To Award Fellowships

The National Research Council has been called upon to advise the National Science Foundation in the selection of candidates for the Foundation's program of Graduate Fellowships. Panels of eminent scientists appointed by the National Research Council will evaluate qualifications of applicants. Final selection will be made by the Foundation, with awards to be announced on March 15, 1974.

Initial NSF Graduate Fellowship awards are intended for students at or near the beginning of their graduate study. In general, therefore, those eligible to apply will be college seniors or first-year graduate students this Fall; in particular, eligibility is limited to individuals who by Fall 1974 will have completed not more than one year of full-time or part-time graduate-level study. Subject to the availability of funds, new fellowships awarded in the Spring of 1974 will be for periods of three years, the second and third years contingent on certification to the Foundation by the fellowship institution of the student's satisfactory progress toward an advanced degree in the sciences.

These fellowships will be awarded for study or work leading to master's or doctoral degrees in the mathematical, physical, medical, biological, engineering, and social sciences, and in the history and philosophy of science. Awards will not be made in clinical, education, or business fields, in history or social work, or for work leading to medical, dental, law, or joint Ph.D.-professional degrees. Applicants must be citizens of the United States and will be judged solely on the basis of ability. The annual stipend for Graduate Fellows will be $3,600 for a twelve-month tenure with no dependency allowances.

Applicants will be required to take the Graduate Record Examinations designed to test scientific aptitude and achievement. The examinations, administered by the Educational Testing Service, will be given on December 8, 1973 at designated centers throughout the United States and in certain foreign countries.

The deadline date for the submission of applications for NSF Graduate Fellowships is November 26, 1973. Further information and application materials may be obtained from the Fellowship Office, National Research Council, 2101 Constitution Avenue, Washington, D.C. 20418.

Experimental Lending Scheme To Be Tested

SOUTH HADLEY, Mass. -- Continuing the long record of cooperative activities among the valley libraries, the Five College Librarians, with the approval of their Presidents, are experimenting with a new policy this fall which will permit a student from any one of the Five Colleges (Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges and the UMass) to borrow in person from any one of the libraries in the group. Books may then be returned to the borrower's own library for return by messenger service to the lending library.

This arrangement will be reviewed at the end of the first semester and again at the end of the academic year. Review is essential before any continuance of this direct borrowing privilege into the 1974-75 academic year.

The Librarians, and the administrations of each institution, while willing to facilitate in this way the exchange of library resources, do not know the magnitude of the numbers of volumes which will have to be carried back and forth by the messenger service; the extent of the frustrations which may be experienced by the faculty and students of the "home" library when they find their own books not available; the difficulties attendant upon the retrieval of overdue books; the complexities which will arise in making charges for fines and for the replacement and processing costs of lost books; and the additional work load which this will mean for the library staffs.

With this direct borrowing policy, borrowers are expected to provide identification of their status and to abide by the regulations in effect in each library. There is also some limitation on the kinds of materials which may be borrowed and on access to some department libraries. These details are contained in a Five-College Library Guide which will be available to every student in the Five Colleges.

Old Passtime Goes Athletic

THE NEW JOCKS could be the name of the extra-curricular game at Los Angeles Harbor College, since the Tides newspaper has announced that the pinball machine installed in the Student Center there was a gift of the Athletic Association.

ARMED AND DISARMED is the succession of events at the State University of New York at Albany, as reported by the Associated Press. Seems that in August, the campus cops were armed after tallying an average of one armed robbery a month during the first half of 1973.

Two weeks after the cops were armed, the University Senate passed a bill limiting the use of firearms by campus policemen. The action followed disclosure by student government leaders that some security officers might be carrying firearms without the proper training required by law.

NO RESPECT for the Law was demonstrated on the Indiana University campus, recently, with a new twist, according to the Indiana Daily Student. In a page one story, ids reported the assault on a teenage high school student in the basement of the Law Building.

ARREST WARNING can't be served in the classrooms of the University of South Florida, according to a recent story in The Oracle, student newspaper.

Declaration of the sanctity of the classroom was made by USoFla prexy Cecil Mackey: "There are no legal obligations to do this, but it is highly desirable not to interrupt classes."

The regulation resulted when a professor was interrupted during his lecture to be arrested on a student's complaint of assault and battery, false arrest and defamation of character, last Spring.

Music Dept. Opens Season

• The department of music at UMass will open its 1973-74 season with a concert in Bowker Auditorium this Sunday, at 8 p.m. featuring Walter Chesnut, trumpet, and Charles Lehrer, oboe.

With the presentation of this concert the University inaugurates not only its annual series of free recitals and concerts but also two new programs of arts extension-- Up the Arts and a five-year Community Arts Development Program.

The first is designed to bring groups from community service institutions to the campus to participate in cultural activities, including workshops, classes, exhibits and concerts.

The second program will assist communities to develop cultural awareness, an awareness that can help citizens realize the joy, excitement and benefits which come from participating in and understanding the arts.

Both programs focus on the contributions the arts can make toward improving the quality and meaning of community life.

Sunday's program will include a short presentation of the works of composers Henry Purcell, J. S. Bach, Alvin Etler, Donald Erb and J. L. Krebs will be presented.

Assisting Messrs. Chesnut and Lehrer will be William McCorkle, organ; Peter Tanner, percussion; and Miriam Whaples, harpsichord and piano. This concert is open to the public without charge. Further information is available from the music department.

Bucs Stretch Eastern Lead With 6-1 Win

CHICAGO (AP) - Willie Stargell doubled home two runs in the first inning and then scored on a single by Rich Hebner to lead the Pittsburgh Pirates to a 6-1 victory over the Chicago Cubs Thursday.

The triumph stretched Pittsburgh's lead in the National League East to one game over the idle St. Louis Cardinals while the Cubs dropped four games off the pace.

Taking advantage of the first of three Cub errors, the Pirates struck for three runs in the first inning.

Gridders Clash With Villanova

By BILL BALLOU

Peil Pennington, Johnny Jones and friends had better hope the Pope isn't a football fan, because if he is, then UMass may be 0-2 after Saturday.

The Jesuits are coming again, this time in the form of the Villanova Wildcats, a team which promises to be as difficult an opponent as their counterparts from Worcester were last weekend.

The Cats are coming off an opening game loss to Mississippi by the score of 24-6, an effort which, despite the wide margin, was a very good one.

Villanova was scouted last week by receiver coach Errol Prisby, and his report, along with the Ole Miss-Villanova game films, indicates that the Minutemen will have to play very well to win.

Head coach Dick MacPherson figures his men can win. "We definitely feel our team is capable of beating them. The thing is that we just can't make the same mistakes this week that we did against Holy Cross," he said.

MacPherson classified Villanova as a "strong, solid team." He added, "Their strength is that they have a lot of outstanding football players both on offense and on defense."

One of their supposedly most outstanding players is defensive back Frank Polito, a senior who led the nation in interceptions as a sophomore. The Wildcat publicity department has been busy sending out brochures urging people to vote for him for All-America and if he's up to his reviews Peil Pennington is going to have to be mighty careful throwing near him.

Quarterback Bill Hatty, a junior, figures to lead the Villanova offense. Last year Hatty hit on 53 per cent of his passes and gained 700 yards through the air.

UMass comes into the game in reasonably good physical shape, missing only one regular, tight end Gary Mika who will hopefully be back next week. However Peil Pennington is still bothered with a hip pointer and defensive end Ed McAleney has a few aches and pains.

There's good news in the linebacking department this week, in contrast to the Holy Cross game when all the news from that section was bad. Neal Desmarais, Bill Toner, and Mike McNiff are all back and their return is certain to bolster the defense greatly. The return of McNiff is especially good news since he had left the team before the Holy Cross game. However he managed to straighten out some personal hassles and came back Monday.

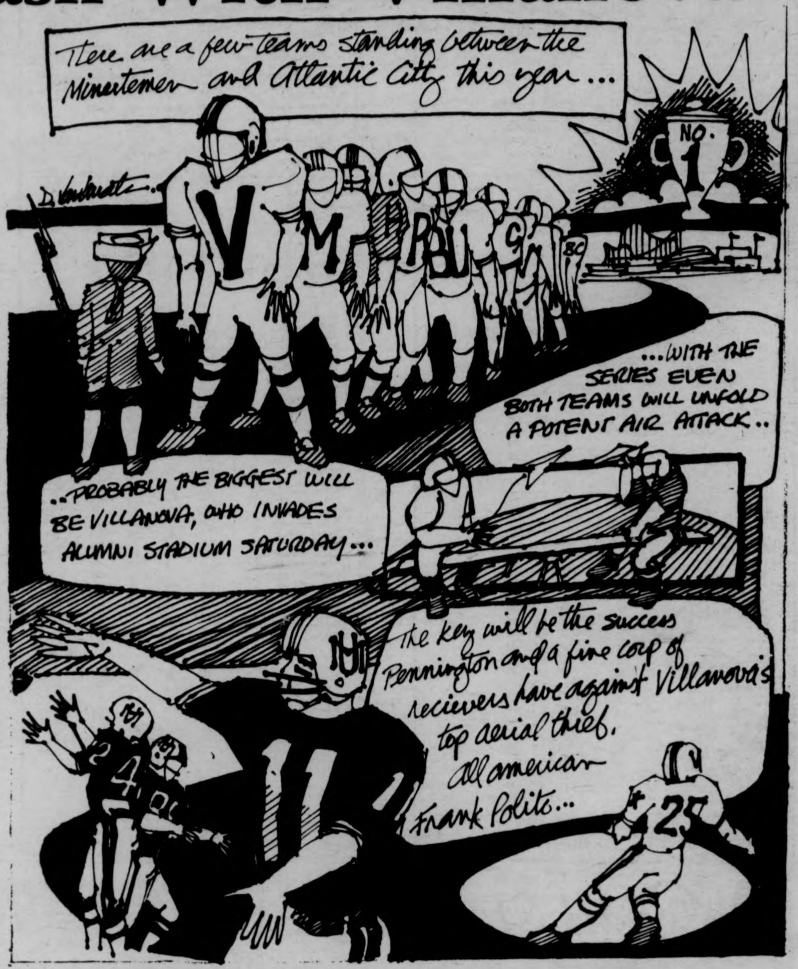
MacPherson doesn't plan any major changes in the line-up, saying "the talent we've got out there now is what we feel is the best we have. We just don't feel we can do much better with anything else."

It would seem obvious that UMass is going to have to rely heavily on its passing game, at least until it can get something going on the ground. Their running and blocking simply was not well coordinated against Holy Cross and the fact that Jerry Mondalto and Bob Wolfe, who did the bulk of Saturday's running, are sophomores, is not going to make things any easier.

This will be the first time the two teams have met since 1962 when the Redmen won 19-18. They had met the previous year for the first time, Villanova winning by 33-13.

The Wildcats, a traditionally strong team, had a disastrous (some folks would call it a rebuilding) season with a 2-9-0 record. But they play a fairly strong schedule which includes Mississippi, Delaware, Boston College and Tampa.

Game time at Alumni Stadium is 1:00 p.m.



There are a few teams standing between the Minutemen and Atlantic City this year...

His form certainly rivals that of any UMass booter. . .but could he hit from 43 yards?

Nastase!

AP - Romanian tennis star Ilie Nastase said Thursday that while he plans to pay his $1,500 fine for misbehavior at the U.S. Indoor Tennis Championships last February, he will appeal two other heavier fines.

The Association of Tennis Professionals assessed Nastase $5,000 for defying a player boycott at Wimbledon last June, and he was fined $4,500 for misbehavior in the Western Tennis Championships at Cincinnati last August.

"Go Stuff It Robertson"

Gene Mauch master of the planned and the impromptu, does not consider John Robertson, baseball writer for the Montreal Star one of his favorite people. It doesn't really matter, to John Robertson or anybody else, because young number four, the guy who kicks dirt and throws temper tantrums, will win Montreal their first pennant this year.

The Expos Manager is demanding but fair. Go out and give 100 per cent for him, and he'll make sure you get your chance to play even if you're hitting in the high 100's. Mauch played only four years in the majors, but he played every game as if he was trying to show off and make the club, and he has instilled this same dogged, hell-bent-for-leather style among his own ballplayers in Montreal. See the Expos and see Ron Hunt at 33 and with no knees slide head first to break up a double-play; see Tim Foli range deep into the hole at shortstop and not only get to balls that other shortstops would watch but also get his man with the best arm in the game. Gene Mauch has a team of weak-kneed veterans and cocky kids believing in themselves. He's acknowledged as the best manager in baseball. Gene doesn't play the game batter by batter or out by out; when the other manager is sending up his cleanup man in the first inning, Mauch is playing the seventh or eighth innings out in his head. The Expos' skipper is the best manipulator of the lineup card this side of Abner Doubleday. The American League may have the designated-hitter rule, but Gene Mauch has the designated-outfielder-for-the-outfielder-who's-coming-in-from-the-airport rule. In a game last weekend, rookie left-fielder Tony Scott made his first big league start, but it lasted only until the newest Expo. Felipo Alou, came in from the airport, in the bottom of the first.

It's not only the manager, because the Expos have the hitting, fielding and especially the pitching to win it all in 1973. Ken Singleton, Mike Jorgensen, and Tim Foli are all under 25 but as good or better than anything else in the league. Pitching?...what about that Steve Rogers with an CRA of 1:10 and a nine and three record in less than two months after a minor league career of the year and a half, and Mike Marshall the best league career of a year and a half, and Mike MarshallDELETE

It's not only the manager, because the Expos have the hitting, fielding and especially the pitching to win it all in 1973. Ken Singleton, Mike Jorgensen, and Tim Foli are all under 25 but as good or better than anything else in the league. Pitching?...what about that Steve Rogers with an E.R.A. of 1.10 and a nine and three record in less than two months after a minor league career of a year and a half, and Mike Marshall the best relief pitcher in the game with over 150 innings under his belt this year and a personal hand in 42 of the Expos' first 71 triumphs. And The veteran Ron Fairly, at 36 and hitting .300. will he have the pleasure of another Series Mondial as we call it in Montreal?

Yes my friends, he will and Gene Mauch will be recognized as the best manager in baseball. Jimmy the Greek had them pegged at 100-1 way back in April and all those guys who had haunches on the Mauchmen and didn't put down a fiver will cry all the way to another beer. They haven't done it yet, but when they do, twenty million idiots will honk their horns, Gene Mauch will shake hands with John Robertson and two hundred million Americans will say "oh, the Montreal Expos won the World Series and, by the way, in what part of New York State is Montreal?" Soon, you'll all be given a lesson in enforced geography thanks to George Patton II.

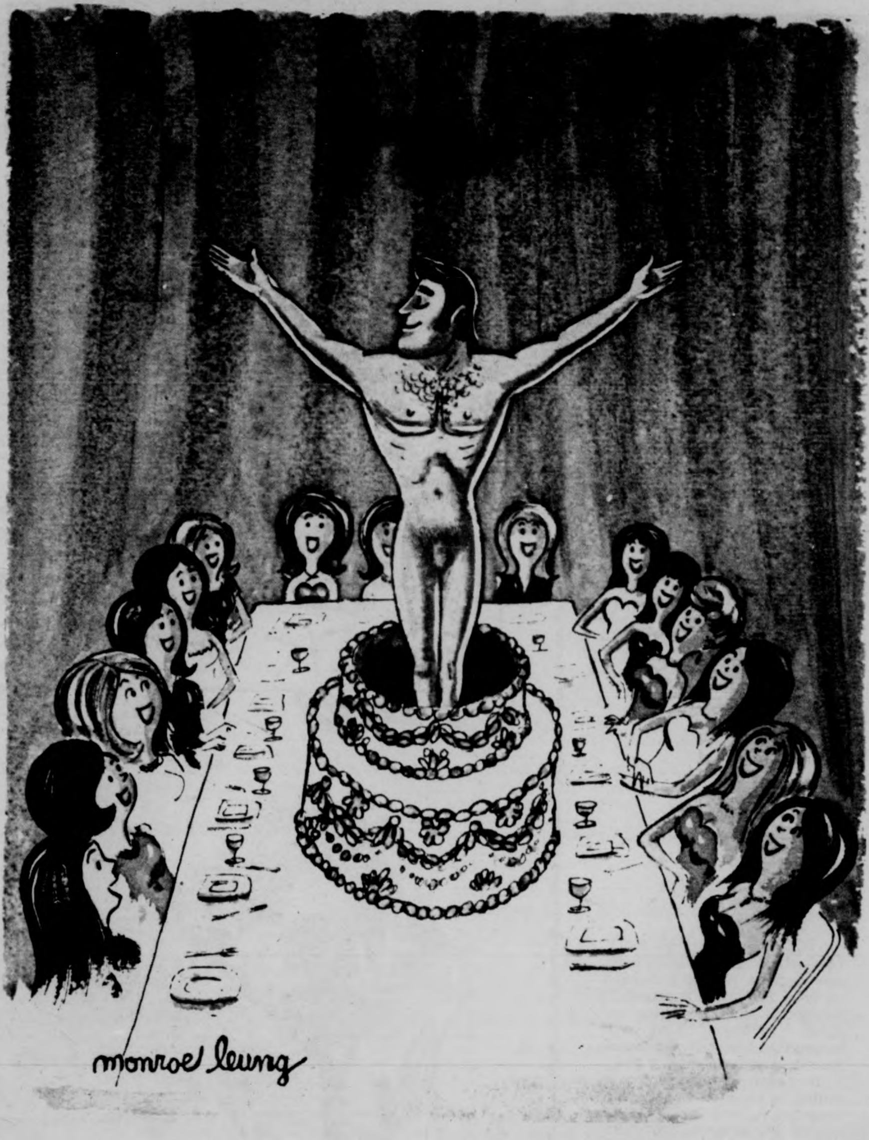
Play Girl Or Played Girl?



"It resembles a National Lampoon Parody of Playboy."

By Moe DePalma

Playgirl is the hottest thing to hit the newsstands since the Debbie Reynolds, Eddie Fisher, Liz Taylor love triangle. It calls itself THE magazine for women, offering everything from essential aromatherapy to a doctor's opinion on bladder control. It claims to be for the truly liberated women, those who not only send away for the twelve album collection of "Love Music — to blow your socks off", but even play them at parties. It seems only natural that Playgirl should emerge at this time, after all, those women who are buying it are the same ones who started off faithful to Teen, graduated to Seventeen and progressed to Glamour and Cosmo. These women are no longer content with beauty hints and fashion, they want flesh. Playgirl breaks down the double standard, unzips the fly and gives women what they want.

In style, form and content it resembles a National Lampoon parody of Playboy, but the knowledge that it is for real, that in five editions one million six hundred thousand copies have been sold, is no joking matter. Playgirl exploits women as sex objects as much as Playboy in a more subtle way. The articles tell women to be beautiful, to lose weight ("Fatties Arise! You have nothing to lose but your stored fat deposits"), how to fix the eyes, the fingernails, the hair, the cleavage and more. The products advertised subject the reader to the new fifteen minute beauty renewal plan, exercises which increase the bust four inches in two weeks, and ultimate information on how to pick up men and keep them. If Playboy has any worth at all it can be seen through the articles written by somewhat bright people that are informative and interesting. Playgirl offers nothing. The most interesting and well written topic covered in the October issue is "Women and Taxes: Inevitable Rape", which is written by a man. It is not surprising then that Playgirl Inc. consists of an all male (no doubt white male) staff. This is perhaps the best thing about the magazine. If it was solely a woman owned and operated magazine it would be totally disgusting. The popularity of it thus far rests with the ideal of taking male nudity out of the plain brown wrapper and putting it onto the supermarket shelves. The novelty of seeing a naked man is worn off by about page fourteen. All the men are physically huge and pictured as overpowering. Any photographs of men and women together focus on the male either being on top in erotic love-making or showing his macho body-beautiful to adoring female eyes. It is curious that out of the seemingly endless pages of naked men very few show the penis. Are men ashamed of exposing themselves totally, are the truly liberated readers not yet ready to be turned on (or turned off) by the actual machine or is the penis, like the Poor Richards welcomes manuscripts, photographs, and sketches. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all manuscripts must be typed double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line.

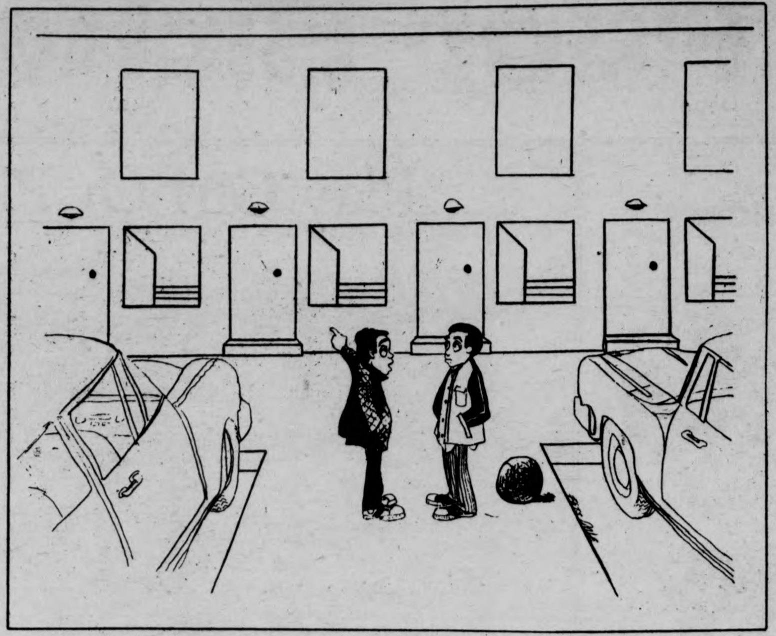
All manuscripts are subject to editing, for either content or space, according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all material will be printed.

Letters to the editor are accepted for perusal and or publication. Sometimes we need a good chuckle.



"That's my dorm, no that's my dorm, no wait a minute that's my dorm."

BACK TO SCHOOL

"Rumor has it that Dustin Hoffman is now enrolled as an undergraduate at UMass."

"Would you believe . . . Kris Jackson, of Campus Caper fame."

I would like to dedicate this first issue of Poor Richard's to my friend Rich Abaid. Without his help, this wouldn't have been possible.

Mau-Maued By A Radical Shiek

By Barbara Voorhees

Heeeeeeeeeeeeeeewack! Tooooooooooooofreaking much! Tom Wolfe here at UMass.

I guess everybody's got a hero or two. At least someone they admire. And then you get the chance to meet that person and Bleck! He's real. He just doesn't live up to the old expectations.

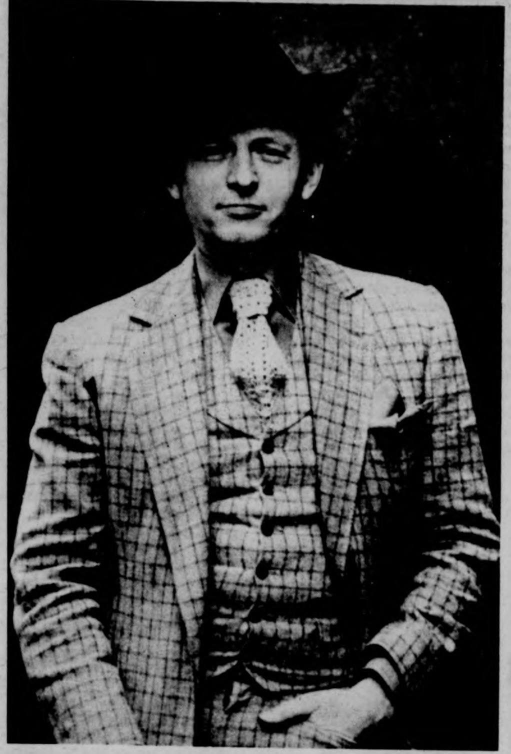
On Monday I spent the day with Tom Wolfe, a journalist whose work I admire. He sure wasn't what I expected. He was one hell of a lot better.

I mean you read all the guy's books and see a couple of photos of him and you figure that this character is a real dude. A real hip character. An outspoken, outrageous dude.

Well, he's got the clothes all right. He comes on with that smooth, hand-tailored, white, silk suit with vest and a lavendar shirt, black and white tie, and teal blue handkerchief in the suit-coat pocket and matching teal blue socks and white wing tips. But no jewelry. And he changes his clothes twice a day and his second suit is just like the first only it's made of white gabardine.

And underneath all this possible dude regalia is this quiet, retiring guy who looks like any minute he's going to bow his head and start reciting you a poem.

And you talk to the man awhile and you realize that he's an absolutely sensitive person who says that he's not really alienated by anything he's run into, but is just content to sit back and watch the carnival.



A guy that likes salt in his Blue Wall beef and felt at home in the Dukes Room in the Student Union cause it reminds him of his living room.

Every once in awhile he gives himself away though and punctuates his sentences with a wooooooooooooo! or a geeeeeeeeeeeee! and he shakes his head and this is Tom Wolfe.

Question: In your latest book, "The New Journalism," you more or less gave a history of the new journalism. Where do you feel it will go from here?

Wolfe: One area that I think people will try to get into more is the really personal psychological life. This is something very difficult. It takes cooperation from the person you're writing about. Already there are some of us who have tried to interview people about their thoughts; what they were thinking at certain times.

Question: Do you feel that the new journalism will be accepted in the future?

Wolfe: It probably will be. In a way that is bad. It's probably bad for the whole thing to have written a book like that. It tends to isolate certain traits and tends to set up certain standards. As soon as you set up standards people tend to write in a certain form. They think they are violating rules. This is what happened to poetry and the novel.

Question: Some journalists shy away from actually defining the new journalism. You gave it a definition. Do you feel that you really can define it?

Wolfe: I think that you can say what it is as long as you understand it has to do with certain specific techniques. There are really just four of them.

These techniques are: scene-by-scene construction, use of extended dialogue, point of view and notation of status detail.

Scene-by-scene construction: In this form of journalism you tend to end up spending days, weeks, even months reporting so that you actually see these things happening in front of you. It seems trying to tell the story through scenes rather than sheer, stark narrative.

There's nothing else that a reader finds so absorbing as dialogue. There's no other device that so quickly recreates reality.

Point of view means looking through somebody else's eyes besides your own. By interviewing people about their thoughts, you can tell how they felt about various scenes.

The last technique is what I call notation of status detail. The author Balzac tells you about a character by the house he lives in. You look at the rug and you know it was very expensive three years ago but now you can see the cotton. The curtains which are fake damask. The sculpture which is supposed to be marble turns out to be plaster cause its chipping. It shows you a picture even before you meet the people that these people are social climbers.

Like the "Man in the Grey Flannel Suit," the title of a novel in the 1930's. That image of the grey flannel suit summed up a whole generation of commuters coming into New York City from New York state or Connecticut.

These little details which are just physical details of dress, furniture, sometimes speech — all of these things really are comments on a person's rank, how he fits in socially. This gives an incredible sense of reality. Everytime we look at somebody, without even being conscious of it, we do a quick take and we try to fit the person into a slot.

Question: When you hear the term, the new journalism, you tend to think of young men, are they?

Wolfe: No, new journalists usually got started pretty late. The only exception I can think of is Hunter Thompson who started in his late 20's.

I don't even like the term, the new journalism. Anything that is called new is controversial. The term really describes changes in writing non fiction and discovery by non-fiction writers of devices which make non-fiction as gripping and rich as the best novel.

Question: Do you feel that newspapers are changing at all or should they?

Wolfe: Newspapers are not changing nearly enough. To me, newspapers are dead. The newspaper business is like the railroad business — both of them got rich during World War II and instead of putting the money zack into the business to keep up with the times, they put it in the bank.

During the 60's, some of the biggest changes came in the way people lived. This was great for the kind of magazine journalism I got into.

All these things about the way people's lives were changing — religious views, attitudes towards sex, towards women's rights. They weren't recorded in novels nor in the daily press.

Question: Do you draw the pictures in your books?

Wolfe: Yes, I think I'm more vain about those than about my writing. I first started doing them for the Springfield Union Sunday magazine in sepiatone.

Question: What are you working on right now?

Wolfe: I'm writing a book about the astronauts.

A Blink Is As Good As A Nod

By Kevin Kittredge

The first weekend has passed and the security of routine will soon calm nerves and the blink, blink, blink, blinking of impatient eyes. People standing in a coffee line with two minutes to make a class tend to blink a lot. People standing in line anywhere in Whitmore also blink a lot. Awhile back, the "Fun Facts" section of the Sunday comics said New Yorkers blink forty times a minute when tense. Hmmmn.

Blinking is only one sympton of September shock. Tearing at pockets and notebooks when you think you've lost your schedule card is another. Picking up the phone and dialing your student number is a dead giveaway. How about the guy in the Dining Commons who left a tip? Should have known there was something fishy when he ate everything. Or that deranged freshman writing "I like OSCAR" on the wall (with a NO. 2 pencil of course.)

Oh well, soon the hassles will end and you'll be seasoned enough to function with a hangover. The campus will be as comfortable as your favorite jeans. And everyone knows that it's like to break-in new jeans f'er chrissake. You'll even laugh about these days. You'll walk into the Blue Wall, order a beer and say to friends, "Do you remember when we . . .", and everyone will laugh and nod and feel warm because everyone remembers.

Galloping Gastronomy

By Cindy Gonet

If you're eating at the dining commons, or are one of the many who can cook spaghetti in one pan, you'll probably want to trudge into town looking for something to eat. Before you thumb out of the womb, remember that the Bluewall, Whitmore Coffee Shop and Little Hatch at Worcester dining commons are nearly always open. They don't offer a gourmet meal but at least you can pick up a hamburger-type meal, pizza or beer. If you want more than a sandwich, or just want to get out of here, here's a list of some notable area restaurants frequented by UMass students.

PAPA's IV — The closest restaurant to campus, located just across from Southwest on the corner of Sunset Avenue. The pizza is fair, grinders are okay. Average juke box, four pinball machines and average to slow service.

BELL'S — Probably the best known pizza place in town, located beyond the Stadium on University Drive. Cheese pizza with extra cheese is great, grinders are also good. Service is a lot better than PAPA'S IV, but Bell's has no juke box or pinball machines. This is the kind of place you can get used to going to every night without knowing why.

MIKE'S — Many fraternity and sorority members go here just to drink. Located in North Amherst, about a mile past the School of Education, MIKE'S is crowded every night during regular season.

THE PUB — This is a class bar, for Amherst. It is also a very good lunch restaurant with expensive-type sandwiches. The cheapest time to go is on Thursday nights, when beers are only a quarter. It's also a good place for a quiet drink in the late afternoon before it gets crowded.

GAS LITE TWO — A mediocre sandwich shop on North Pleasant Street, across from the Mobil station. It's a good place to get a quick lunch.

GAS LITE ONE — A carbon copy of G.L.II, this is located around the corner on Main Street has about the same menu, and caters to a slightly older clientele than G.L. II. Number one closes in the early afternoon, but Number Two stays open til 10:30.

Friendly's — Swinging down to Route 9, right across from Zayre's shopping center, this is no different from any other Friendly's on the East coast. Open after midnight, this is a good place for an after-movie snack.

McManus — Located in the Zayre's shopping center, this is almost identical to Friendly's. Open late and have good breakfasts.

Colonel Sanders — Kentucky revisited.

Hardee's — Cheap burger place that is above average. It's located on the fringe of the shopping center. Chili dogs are mediocre.

Aqua Vita — Poor juke box and even worse service. Very Italian atmosphere.

Joe's — In Northampton, about 20-minute ride from campus, Joe's has some of the best pizza around. A lot of Smithies eat here.

Carlo of Naples — Right around the corner from Smith, this place is very homey inside with great Italian food.

Howard Johnson's — Take a giant step back toward Amherst on Route 9 and you'll bump into HoJo's. You know what it's like.

Flavortowne — Right up the street from G.L.II, this is the same kind of place, although much smaller. It closes about 5:00 p.m., but performs a public service to those people who are awake at 6:00 a.m., because that's when it opens.

The Hungry U. — "Boston-style subs" and pizza, located just off North Pleasant Street in the same block as the Dangling Conversation. This is a high-school place, which is too bad, because the juke box is above average. Pinball game cannot be played after midnight.

Quicksilver — This is the official Freak Bar on North Pleasant Street, just below the traffic light. It caters to the Free University Set, and has a band playing quite often. This place is not quiet, but it offers the cheapest draft in town.

The Drake — This is the bar that made Amherst famous. The original college hangout in town, it is the rathskellar in the basement of the Village Inn on Amity Street. Excellent drinking, excellent juke box. two pool tables, popcorn, peanuts, two color TV's which get Channel 38 and the Bruins Games and has the best pinball games in town. The Drake is loaded with personalities galore and is a great place in which to make both friends and enemies. It is a place for many different kinds of University people. Frat guys watch TV, freaks play pool and dance, intellectuals drink Rheingold and eat peanuts and young faculty members talk to and drink with their students. The Drake is Amherst.

(The Drake, Upstairs) — It's food and beer and a fair juke box. A lot of freaks and obnoxious people tend to make it their hang out.

Chequers — Menu includes excellent, moderately priced Italian food that is served at lunch and dinnertimes. Still a cocktail lounge and late-night entertainment spot for some of the Amherst jet set. A nice quiet place to bring a date on a week night.

Kalihi Kai — Decent Chinese-Polynesian food, but rather high priced for what you get. In the lounge, many subtle exotic drinks are offered. Service excellent.

McDonald's — On Route 9 towards Northampton...You can still get change back from your dollar.

Rusty Scupper — A renovated barn near Colonial Village below town that combines a nice setting, quiet music and good food and drink. Relatively expensive, but sometimes its worth it.

Rusty Nail — A renovated barn in Sunderland. It's a relatively new place with good entertainment you can dance to.

The Lord Jeff — A history-laden place that has been recently renovated. Right in the middle of town, has fine dinner and luncheon offerings and good cocktail lounge. Fairly expensive...get your parents to take you there.

Florence Diner — Located in Florence, which is past Northampton. It's an area legend, with its cheap chefs specials, prices and atmosphere.

The Jolly Bull — This is a favorite of some administrators. A pretty good night spot, a meal here runs about $5. During the afternoons, Top of the Campus style lunches are served with a salad bar.

The Top of the Campus — High atop the Campus Center at UMass, this is best for lunches, with the $1.75 sandwich specials plus salad bar offerings. At night, it's not all that expensive (about the same as the Jolly Bull). One note about this place — you need a Top of the Campus Card before you can order a drink. A cocktail lounge in this restaurant opens at 11:30 a.m.

Wiggins Tavern — In the Hotel Northampton, this has a rustic atmosphere and the food is pretty good. The check for two could return a little change from your $20.

The Grist Mill — Drive down through the center of town and past Amherst College for a mile and you'll hit this place. It has that old colonial atmosphere, good food, and is moderately expensive.

Steak Out — A new restaurant in town. Excellent dinners, but rather expensive. You get what you pay for. On University Drive.

Wine Chariot — On Route 9 in Hadley, not too many student-types go here. Everything is delicious but much, much, much too expensive.

Domino's Pizza — Free delivery, fairly good pizza.

A Little Review, Reviewed

By David Hoffman

Imagine a tangled swirl of brown curls topping a pair of literary blue eyes, and fringed with an underbrush of bristling beard. Then imagine a sizable obsession with becoming a literary editor. Throw in a fair dollop of nervous energy, and you've got Richard Abaid a 22 year old proud father of his new creation, The Little Review.

Founded last spring with a helpful grant of money from the Southwest Residential College Assembly, the first issue of Abaid's Review is being published this week and distributed free throughout Southwest.

"It's frankly an experiment," he says, "to see whether a magazine like this can continue to exist in one of the residential areas. Just to start it isn't enough, we want to see it continue."

Abaid, who served for three years in the Army in Korea, last year worked as assistant fiction editor of Spectrum. In the spring the budget for Spectrum, the campus literary and arts magazine, was halved by its sponsor, the Student Senate.

Abaid, who had already been working as the managing editor for the Central Area paper, and begun to think that the future for literary publication on campus should become centered in dormitory area magazines.

His editorial disagreements with Spectrum had begun to increase in "artistic arguments" with the other editors over specific manuscript submissions. Abaid constantly argued for publishing people who had never seen their work appear in print before, even to the extent of seeking out such people and allaying their timidity about publication.

"What I was trying to push for was to give an opening to the sort of people who are curious to see what it's like to publish, but who need some encouragement on it, to plant the seeds of interest in them."

In Abaid's view, Spectrum should only print UMass. students "since they're the ones paying the bill for it." It's less important, in other words, to win national awards and aim to publish only "excellence."

A particular gripe became the willingness of Spectrum to republish articles which had already appeared elsewhere. "What's the point of that?" he asks. "Anybody can take stories from The New Yorker and win awards that way."

The Massachusetts Review, published by the five Colleges, is the place to emphasize established authors and already-published writers, he adds, arguing that the money used for Spectrum could be better used to promote area magazines, the best stories of which might then be published by a Spectrum.

"The people in Southwest and in Project 10 were very helpful, and the magazine really came out well." It includes a short story, an essay, a number of poems, and art work. Most of the first contributors were from the Project, but Abaid is convinced that will begin to change this year, as more people in Southwest hear about the magazine. Interested people should contact Dave Hoffman in 334 Pierpont.

A new editorial group is being formed this year, and many new people are needed. Abaid will be absent from campus for the year, pursuing his studies in Boston, where he will occasionally write a column on Boston life for Poor Richards, and will be one of the editors of the UMass-Boston weekly paper, Mass Media.

In the meantime, The Little Review is on the newsstands, and it's well worth a second look.

Everything Is Going Up (But How Do I Get Down?)

By Denny Matteau

There is a bizarre new way to trip on the UMass campus . . . TAKE ELEVATORS! I discovered this gate to the other reality today, in the new library.

I had decided to study in the library, as I was wont to do in the good ol' days of Goodell. I entered the main lobby, and saw a sign over a door that said "East Lobby to Central study areas". I went through the door, and there was a small brickfloored room with a staircase. A sign over the staircase said, "Central Study Areas, 4th and 5th floors". I decided to take the elevator.

When I got there, an elevator was already standing open, so I thought "Lucky me!" and started to get on. Nearly lost a hand and a foot. The doors shut, and I heard the sound of a motor, but no floor numbers lit on the indicator. I wonder where that one went? Still optimistic, I pushed the button for "up".

Within a minute, another elevator opened its doors. This time I was ready. I jumped on in time to hold the door for a person behind me. He pushed button "15", which immediately lit. I pushed button "5", and button "11" lit. I pushed button "5" on the other side, and nothing lit. Over the door, as we rose, floor "3", lit, and then floor "8", where the elevator, for no human reason, stopped. I got off, and pushed a "down" button.

Almost immediately, an elevator opened. I got on, and pushed the button labeled "5". Again, it did not light. Instead, the elevator plummeted downwards, and a light, "m" appeared. I disembarked at 'M'. A sign on the wall identified 'M' as the main floor, but it is not the floor where one enters the building.

I was a man with keys who looked official, so I said "Sir!", and he continued walking. I said "Sir!" again, and he spun on his heels, and glared at me. I said "UH . . . UM . . . do you know anything about elevators?" He continued glaring. I shuffled a bit, and said "Aah . . . UH . . um . . do you work here?"

Yesofcourselworkhere!" He answered, like a speedy tape recorder.

I said: "Oh. Well, I thought you might, I mean, you could be just anyone or no one just using this place, which is why I asked. Uhm, . . . I, ah, do you have anything to do with these elevators?"

"Why?"

"They're Broken."

"They're not broken."

"Well, they don't work. I mean this one doesn't, and that one doesn't, and thaone . . .

"What do you mean, they don't work?"

"I mean I tried to get to the fifth floor, and when I pushed number five, I got to the eighth, and . . ."

"Did you try this elevator?"

"No."

"Well, you see there? This elevator goes to the fifth floor."

"But, there's no sign, and the other elevators have buttons for the fifth . . ."

"Take this elevator. None of these are broken, they just don't work right. They're not supposed to."

I used the elevator he pointed out, and IT WORKED!. But I had to use the stairs to come down.

A Program Council Presentation

ELEO POMARE DANCE COMPANY

By Jennifer K. Arthur

(Editor's note: The Eleo Pomare Dance Company will be in residence from Sept. 18-20th. Performances on the 19 and 20th in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. Master classes conducted by Mr. Pomare in W.O.P.E. at 2 p.m. on the 18th. Anyone interested should call Barbara Aldrich at the Fine Arts Council Office, 545-0202. Class will be limited to 50.)

The Eleo Pomare Dance Company, an intergrated but predominantly Black dance company, was organized in New York City in 1958. From the outset, the company took as its purpose "the creative utilization of Black talent and ability in contemporary modern dance in an effort to break away from confining stereotypes of Black or primitive dance."

Mr. Pomare is a man of the theater with refreshing ideas. There is a humor and sharpness in his bite that are rare. Sometimes his ideas, the conception behind a piece, are better than his choreography simply because he relies on all all-purpose, modern dance technique that does not convey a distinctive movement signature for him.

Yet the point is that choreography is only one element in his theater pieces with his dancers being used to dramatic effect rather than for technical display.

But it is also a broader range, based upon its sound track of songs by Roberta Flack, Judy Collins, and Laura Nyro as well as an extraordinarily beautiful lyric and duet.

"Nigger!" a lithe pretty, Afro'ed dancer called out to the crowd. The daacer, Cynthia Ashby, stalked up and down the Dancemobile stage. With shrill anger and disgust, she shouted: "Nigger, Nigger, Nigger, Nig-ger, NIGGAH!"

"Yeah, yeah, yeah," a male voice in the audience called out, loud enough to be heard by the hundreds who watched on the street and from the tenements, "I'm a nigger, I'm a 'bad' nigger!"

In 1969 the New York Times said that Pomare's work in both Europe and America has been exciting, powerful, innovative and undisciplined. "I am not about show business, I'm not an entertainer. I consider myself a teacher, an interpreter of the black art of black dancing. The very existence of Black people is an art, and the things we create on the stage come out of this art, this survival.

"I'm labeled undisciplined, angry, and I know the State Dept. has forgotten my behin — if they ever even considered sending me overseas to represent the U.S. as an artist — because I will not do what they want from a black dancer. They want black exotics, they want you to get up and shake your behind for white people. I have something to say and I want to say it honestly, strongly, and without having it stolen, borrowed or messed over."

"I don't create works to amuse white crowds, nor do I wish to show them how charming, strong, and folksy Negro people are. Negroes dancing in the manner of Jerome Robbins or Martha Graham. Instead I'm showing them the Negro existense from inside: what it's like to live in Harlem, to be hung up and uptight and trapped and black and wanting to get out. And I'm saying that in a dance language that originates in Harlem itself.

Pomare expects his company to be versatile. The eleven dancers must be happy and gay, or deep and thoughtful: crying aloud with hate or laughing with joy, bold in strolling around the auditorium chatting up the audience or remote in a trancelike state on the stage.

Certainly the Pomare repertoire abounds in histronic strokes, beautifully executed. The lighting for example, is imaginative as any seen in the theater. But the movements remain the primary agencies of communication. And while Pomare's choreography may be eclectic in its sources, it is also inventive, stylistically coherent and richly expressive.

His choice of themes, music and movement styles would suit the promising young troupe and such an addition to the troupe would be apt to find the favor with local audiences. And a Pomare item on the program would be not only a point of strength, but an element of the diversity of a repertory company ought to be cultivating.

Women's Rights

By Susan L. Bergeron

When the Equal Rights Amendment was passed in Congress, an easy passage through state ratification was foreseen. Now, a year later, it has been ratified in twenty-eight states and it needs at least thirty-eight. What seemed to be a shoo-in has come up against massive opposition from mainly right-wing groups. It seems anti-abortion forces have regrouped to stop this new affront to male supremacy. In good company we find: at the forefront and leading the attack, the John Birch Society followed by such various groups as the Ku Klux Klan, National Council of Catholic Women, Happiness of Women (HOW), Humanitarians Opposed to Degrading Our Girls (HOTDOG), and, bringing up the rear, the administration of the AFL-CIO (that is to say, George Meany).

This is the old trick of making the most oppressed sections of society appear to be the most priviledged, previously applied when women tried to gain the right to vote. Horrible images of drunken women staggering to the polls was conjured up. Now we have Phyllis Schafly, a well-known wealthy rightist, bemoaning that equal rights will lead to our loss of "the right not to take a job", exemption from the draft and the tradition of child custody and alimony in divorce cases. This "right" not to take a job seems to be forced upon us pretty heavily. There are laws prohibiting women from working at certain occupations. Laws discriminate in hiring for local and state government positions. Laws establishing dual pay schedules. Legal restrictions on the rights of married women to engage in business independent of their husbands. Two laws have been passed challenging sex discrimination. The Equal Rights Act of 1963 came out of hearings on widespread wage discrimination, establishing penalties on employers who paid workers of one sex less than they paid workers of the other sex who were performing equivalent jobs. And yet, as late as 1970, women earned only 59.4 percent of what men earned even though thirty million women in the labor force represented 44 percent of the total work force.

In 1964, a rider prohibiting discrimination in hiring and promotional practices not only on the basis of race, creed, religion, or national origin, but also on the basis of sex, was attached to the Civil Rights Act in an effort to kill it. The provision was quite a joke to the senators and congressmen who voted on it but the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission reported that in its first year over one-third of the charges brought forward were on the basis of sex discrimination. The joke has backfired. Another significant ruling by the Supreme Court declared the practice of not hiring women with pre-school children (with no such restrictions on men) was a violation of the Civil Rights Act. But when the court returned the case to the trial court, it left open the loophole for discrimination on the basis that women traditionally take care of children. For the first time, the 1972 guidelines from the EEOC states to deny a women a job because she is pregnant is also a violation. The United States is the most backward country in regards to maternity rights. State legislation penalizes pregnant women by forcing them to take extended maternity leaves, often resulting in loss of seniority and not compensated by temporary disability payments. Not one state guarantees job security to pregnant women although many other countries not only guarantee it but also provide paid maternity leaves. This lack of maternity rights is an indication of the inadequacy of laws that affect working standards today. This is the type of protective legislation that holds women down. Opponents claim the ERA will take away all benefits. But court cases have proved the opposite. The case of Potlatch Forest Inc. v. Hays is a good example. Arkansas state law provided that women be paid time-and-a-half for working more than eight hours a day, and the employers argued that federal anti-discrimination legislation superseded state law, allowing them to cease paying the women an overtime bonus. The court dismissed the complaint, pointing out that the state law did not require women to be paid more than men. The employer could comply with both state and federal law by paying overtime rates to both men and women. Certainly this sort of victory can be the only legitimate goal of a struggle for equal rights. Obviously women want to increase their wages to the level at which men are paid, not to drag the paychecks men earn down to the pittance paid to women. Women will use the ERA as an effective tool against the variety of sex discriminatory laws that exist. They will not accept formal equality with worsened conditions.

The Equal Rights Amendment states simply, "Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied on account of sex." The fact that in 1973 such a constitutional amendment has still not been adopted is itself a commentary on the depth of the oppression suffered by women in this society. To vote it down would demonstrate contempt for the basic human dignity of more than half the population. The Equal Rights Amendment has been raised in Congress every year since the National Women's Party first proposed it in 1923. The serious consideration and publicity it is receiving today is a reflection of the rising sentiment and struggle for women's liberation. As it now stands, the Constitution does not even register the fact that women have a claim as citizens to equal rights and treatment under law. Ending this situation will be a step forward in the struggle of women to end their oppression in all areas of society.

Retail Krishna

By John Carr

Penguin Books has made its attempt to cash in on the growing demand for metaphysical literature with the publication of The Yoga of the Bhagavat Gita by "Sri Krishna Prem". Prem, an Englishman named Ronald Henry Nixon before his attainment of guru-hood, has made the final step toward immortality: he has followed the lead of the great Hindu teachers and produced a commentary of the Gita. Unfortunately, Prem's book just doesn't make it.

By "yoga", Prem means path. He adopts the view that the primary purpose of the Gita is as a spiritual handbook for the individual seeker. He is unconcerned with the historical reality of the battle of Kurukshetra, the setting of the Gita. The main characters are consequently reduced to symbols: Krishna becomes the universal oversoul, Arjuna the individual soul seeking guidance, Prem even robs Krishna of his humanity by asserting that "Sri Krishna is a direct manifestation of the Supreme in a form apparently, but only apparently, human."

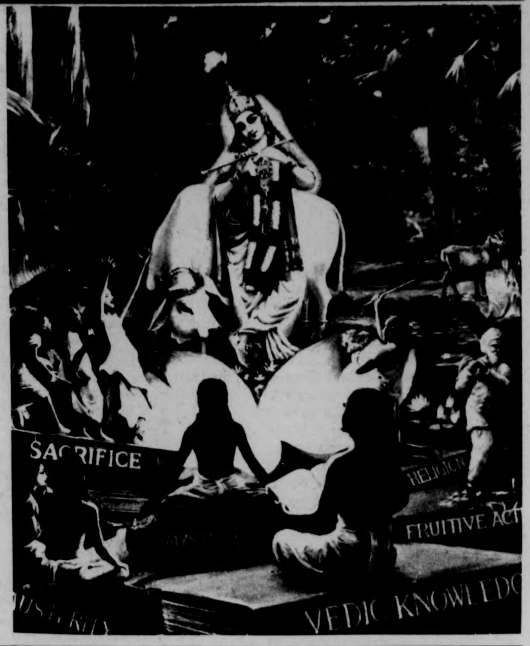
To claim that Krishna is but a manifestation of a Higher Power is contrary to the actual text of the Gita in which Krishna proclaims himself as the supreme being. It is Krishna who is worshipped by His followers, who believe in no Higher Power beyond Him.

Prem not only fails in his interpretation but also in his style. The book is full of terms like "nirguna" and "tapasvi" which he often fails to footnote or define. Instead of clarifying difficult concepts, the use of such words only adds to the confusion which is great enough already from Prem's attempt to force his own limited interpretation on the Gita.

Sometimes Prem doesn't use his terms correctly, which can't be excused in a book which claims to be a serious study. For example, he spends two pages defining the word "bhakti", which is a general term for "worshipper", as a special type of mystic. Prem also neglects to mention that he is drawing his Indian vocabulary from different languages and time periods, leaving the impression that his own homogeneous interpretation is consistent with orthodox Hindu thought.

Much of the book is devoted to a repitition of spiritual cliches. He warns that each man must maintain his own independence in spiritual matters, a lesson with which I can't disagree, but which is incompatible with the personal surrender which Krishna demands.

Buy the book, read the introduction, and get the supreme satisfaction which comes from the knowledge that despite the hardships we must endure on the material plane, the Infinity of the Parabrahman makes everything all right, and sleep well tonight.



RENDEZVOUS AT
a novel
by Foster Furcolo

TITLE: RENDEZVOUS AT KATYN
AUTHOR: FOSTER FURCOLO
PUBLISHER: MARLBOROUGH HOUSE, INC. BOSTON, MASS.
PRICE: PAPERBACK $2.00

By Bob Estelle

This book is a historical novel based on one of the most shocking events in history. It is based upon the Katyn massacre of 1943. This was the genocide murder of many Polish officers by the Russians that occurred during the height of World War II. The author was a United States Congressman who was a member of the Congressional Committee that investigated Katyn in 1951. He also served one term as the Governor of Massachusetts (1957-61). Not known as a conservative, Furcolo still felt that the American people had a right to know what happened at Katyn. His novel is based on the investigation of which he was a member (H.R. 390).

The book deals with the Katyn story from two points of the Katyn incident. The first point of view concerns Josef Kozlowski, a reporter who is a native of Poland who is taken prisoner-of-war by the Russians, the other concerns Adam Soleski, a Polish farmer who becomes an officer in the army, and who is also taken prisoner by the Russians. The two, along with many others, are taken to the Russian P.O.W. camp at Kozielsk. After years of imprisonment, prisoner of war releases are to come about in 1943. Some are taken to the Katyn forest and murdered. Adam is one of those killed. Josef, the reporter, is lucky. He escapes.

The Katyn massacre would probably be unknown today except that the Nazis reconquered the forest and discovered the bodies of the dead officers. They held an investigation that proclaimed the Russians guilty of this horrible crime. But the Russians got back Katyn and held their own investigation that pinned the rap on the Nazis. Josef, our hero, was able to persuade the U.S. Congress to conduct its own impartial investigation which found that, indeed, the Russians were responsible for this killing.

But this novel tells more than the story of a horrendous crime. You remember that the officers killed were the most anti-Communist of them all. They all had the ability to resist a Communist takeover of their country. Thus, the Communists eliminated them. The message author Furcolo gives is that the Communists will do anything to keep anyone or anything from resisting them. To them, killing a few hundred Polish officers was nothing.

Ultra-Urban Life/Death

PROJECT FOR A REVOLUTION IN NEW YORK
A NOVEL BY ALAIN ROBBE-GRILLET

By Jackman Wilson

Alain Robbe-Grillet is easily the most notorious of all living French novelists. His books are angrily ridiculed and enthusiastically admired. All that is controversial in Robbe-Grillet's novels may be found in his latest, Project For A Revolution In New York.

Robbe-Grillet's descriptive technique is the most striking feature of his writing. A scene is described in minute, geometric detail in a style that is measured and precise. The effect is highly visual; it is as though Robbe-Grillet were trying to force a photograph onto the printed page. One scene shifts to another without warning or transition. The succession of photographic images becomes filmic.

Imagine a series of loosely related photographs in which several are identical, or nearly so. These repeated images will vary in significance according to their placement in the series, or a minor change in detail will assume a larger, perhaps even symbolic meaning. This is the feel of Project For A Revolution In New York a

This is a novel for speed-readers. Seriously: the faster you read this book, the more you'll get out of it. The individual frames of a movie must flicker past at a certain rate before the illusion of motion is achieved. Similarly, the objective descriptions in Robbe-Grillet's novel form a continuous, subjective whole with a rapid reading.

Robbe-Grillet's preoccupation with sado-erotic themes and images, together with his unique narrative style, makes Project For A Revolution In New York a fascinating glimpse of life and death in the ultra-urban complex. Anyone who is dissatisfied with-time-worn conventions of expression, character and plot should look to Alain Robbe-Grillet for a new experience in literature.

Living Time
Bill Evans — George Russell Orchestra
Columbia KC 31490
Total Playing Time: 44:19

By Gary Gomes

Personnel: George Russell — composer, arranger, conductor; Bill Evans — piano, electric piano; Eddie Gomez — acoustic bass; Marty Morell — drums; Snooky Young, Ernie Royal, Richard Williams — trumpets and fluegelhorns; Stanton Davis — trumpet; Howard Johnson — Fluegelhorn, tuba, bass clarinet; Dave Bargeron — trombone and Tuba; Dave Baker, Garnett Brown, — trombones; John Clark — French Horn; Jimmy Giuffre, Sam Rivers, — tenor sax and flutes (and, respectively, clarinet and oboe); Joe Henderson — tenor sax; Ron Carter,Stanley Clark and Herb Bushler — Fender basses (on various cuts); Sam Brown — bass guitar and electric guitar; Ted Saunders — electric piano and clavinet; Webster Lewis — organ and electric piano; Tony Williams — drums; Marc Belair — percussion.

Although this is theoretically a Bill Evans album (his second thus far for Columbia), this is one of those albums that has the leader (or featured artist) playing as a soloist beneath the massive machinations of the guest star, in this case the awesomely talented composer George Russell. Although Evans is a topnotch pianist, and innovator of no small account, it must be said that it is George Russell who breathes the life into this.

For reasons I've stated before, it's very difficult, if not impossible, for Black musicians to get a fair break in the record business. And, of course, if an individual is presenting something new, the outlets are even more closed. Thus, it behooves me to tell you that this album is something special, because after years of putting out excellent (but difficult to obtain) albums, George Russell's ideas have an opportunity to reach a wider audience.

The way Bill Evans explained it in the liner notes. Columbia wanted his second venture on their label to be a "big band" or "orchestra type" thing. So, in order to pay his way, and get some fine music outside, he asked George Russell to provide the orchestra. As it turned out, Russell gathered together some of the finest musicians to make the orchestra: among these are Eddie Gomez, one of the finest acoustic bassists around, tenor saxophonists Joe Henderson, Jimmy Giuffre and the outstandingly original Sam Rivers, who has played with pianist Cecil Taylor, one of the prime innovators of the "New Jazz". Rivers' saxophone and oboe moments on the first side are lovely excursions into the farthest reaches of the instruments.

ORCHESTRA

The format of the album itself is organic and dynamic, divided into eight "events", some of the "events" merely being the statement of a theme, while other events restate the themes presented earlier, with the exception of solo passages, or freely improvised ensemble passages. "Event II" is a good example of the interplay that can occur in a large group format, expecially the musical dialogue that Williams and Rivers enter into over the rock-like bass line.

The album does have its weak spots, however. Some of the things on side II sound like definite Sun Ra rip-offs, and toward the end of side one George has Webster Lewis playing a typical blues riff, which is far below the capabilities of Mr. Lewis' organ fare. I mean, Webster's name hasn't been heard that much, but he is one of the finest organ and piano talents around, and it's a shame to bury him in the ensemble passage and then have him play some used Al Kooper riffs for the spot that he's going to be appearing in. "Tain't fair".

Evans himself has a few good spots, particularly on side two, even though side two seems less forceful than side one.

In the long run, however, these are only minor complaints. Perhaps Mr. Russell felt compelled to throw in some crowd-pleasing effects to appease the company. And Columbia must bear blame for not having as good production on this album as it should have had. Fortunately, once one gets through the filmy quality of the recording, one hears the power of invention that George Russell possesses. And that's no small potatoes. Living Time actually breathes.

Quick Cuts

By Mike Kostek

Fillmore East — The Who (Pig) Yes, another bootleg, but a good one with suprisingly functional sound. Recorded about 1967-68 at the then new Fillmore East, this catches Townshend and mates doing tunes from their latest release at the time, The Who Sell Out. From the beautiful versions of "Tatoo" and "Can't Explain" to the awful "Fortune Teller", you can hear a young mod band that sounds quite working-class. This is further brought out in the version of "Happy Jack" which is oh so nice during the verses, and brutal as can be in the chorus. "Relax", "Boris The Spider" and "Shakin All Over" are done in a manner hot, hard and furious, enough to rip your leg off. There's also a finely-wrought "Quick One While He's Away" and two unrecorded, unremarkable songs, "My Way" and "Little Billy", which is a song about a fat Little Billy who's left in charge of all the children whose parents have died from smoking.

This is a priceless look at an important period in the musical history of this best of all rock bands. Grab it. Aminus.

The Who (Pig) Another bootleg recorded at the same time, place and show as Fillmore East, and is a stupid duplication with only rather perfunctory performances of "Summertime Blues" and "My Generation" to differ it from the other. Seeing as this doesn't have "Quick One", "Shakin" or "My Way", it's for addicts only. B

Last Train to Hicksville...the home of happy feet — Dan Hicks & His Hot Licks (Blue Thumb). Glad to say, this is their finest yet. Sad to say, they've broken up. All of their far-flung musical tastes are well-done here, and are considerably bolstered by the addition of fleet Bob Scott on drums. For the best in surreal swing - jazz - rock - bebop and nude joy, take the Last Train. A

Prepare Thyself To Deal With A Miracle — Rahsaan Roland Kirk (Atlantic). An awesome album that is Roland's personal tour through black music, from the sublime to the "free", all of which is powered by the man who plays duets with himself when he solos, Rahsaan Kirk. Kirk plays some of the best solos he's recorded in a long time. The real treat is the second side, a "Saxophone Concerto", 21 minutes long which Rahsaan zips through without pausing for breath. Aminus (Don't miss him Sunday at Amherst).

Martin Mull And His Fabulous Furniture In Your Living Room — (Capricorn). Martin Mull proves for all time that truth is funnier than lies. Which makes for a walleyed 51 minutes of bovine Mull wit, humor and Cleveland Delta Blues, ingested with some stirring songs ("Dueling Tubas", "2001 Polka"). "But I'd better stop now, or Carly will write another one about me." B-plus.

Grand Funk

WE'RE AN AMERICAN BAND
SMAS 11207

By David Sokol

What makes Grand Funk Railroad so intriguing is their all-encompassing sound, a musical density which falls somewhere between the heavy metal of Blue Oyster Cult and the inane boogie of, say, Savoy Brown. You don't put on a GFR record and expect to do anything other than shake your ass or toss your cookies. Though they've never made an entirely good album, every one has sold over one million copies, an indication of their wide appeal. Both E. Pluribus Funk and Phoenix showed definite signs of maturity, and Grand Funk fans keep coming back for more, although pretentious packaging of both the musicians and the albums is enough to scare off the uninitiated.

We're An American Band seems to represent another step forward, away from the primitive, power trio days of the Terry Knight-managed, cover-version, anti-taste Funk. Todd Rundgren is now the producer, keyboardist Craig Frost has become a band member rather than a GFR sideman, and hard driving drummer Don Brewer is doing a good portion of the writing. He is in fact responsible for the title tune, a song which sure sounds good on AM. With these changes, we shouldn't be out of line in expecting something new, but no dice. Same old Grand Funk formula: some good stuff, some drek. After the title track, the album revolves slowly downhill. The alluring beat of the Funk makes their appeal a gut reaction, but the boys keep on hitting us in the same gut. Despite the changes, it's really quite the same, which is the chief disappointment with We're An American Band.

As a transition album, nothing has really evolved. This makes three consecutive GFR albums that I've finished listening to with the thought that the next one is going to get it all together. C'mon guys, I'm getting tired of waiting..

Stevie Wonder's Beautiful Search

Stevie Wonder
Innervisions
Tamla T 326L
Time 45:04

by Joe Kelley

In little less than two years, Stevie Wonder has released three albums. He has, at the same time, risen in stature from one of the better, and more reliable, hitmakers in the Motown family of soul performers to a completely individual black artist of compelling and challenging genius. In his new album. Innervisions, Stevie Wonder reaches a state of self-assured intellectual and musical adulthood, no longer finding himself hampered by insecurity-based false starts or moments of overzealousness which he has encountered in previous albums.

In Music of My Mind, the premier album by the "new" Stevie Wonder, he took on the guise of the wizard of the recording studio (à la Todd Rundgren). Though that album was the most exciting thing to emerge from Motown since Marvin Gaye's incredible What's Going On of the previous year, some critics felt Stevie's album was a bit flamboyant; his use of electronic tricks seemed almost too facile and gimmicky to be taken seriously.

As if in answer to this adverse criticism, Stevie's next album, Talking Book, was a very restrained effort. Apart from the monster single, "Superstition", there was nary an electronic bleep or squeeking tape loop to be heard. The production was so toned-down that the second single from that album, "You Are the Sunshine of My Life", had to be beefed-up with an added horn track to make it sound well on the typical tinny-voiced transistor radio.

As usual, everyone was not pleased. Those critics who received Music of My Mind with complete adoration sensed in the new album a stifling air of restraint that interferred with the potential of the music. They regretted that Stevie had not "let himself go" more, preferring the merits of brash and intuitive freshness to those of calm and deliberate reflection.

Innervisions is the album which should satisfy everyone, as it consistently achieves a delicate and difficult balance between full-out soulful strutting and the thoughtful exploration of the goals of Man's inner being, and the ways in which the workings of the real world make it difficult for him to successfully achieve these "inner visions".

It is true that Innervisions is a concept album, but I hesitate to label it as such, as that term tends to conjure up visions of the Moody Blues'-type of ham-fisted belaboring of trite philosophical "messages". The conceptual structure of Innervisions is not inescapably thrust upon the listener's attention, but is there if one wishes to avail oneself of it.

The album discusses the eternal Search, exploring the ways in which man seeks to sustain his internal ideals in the real world. We glimpse an array of attempts to gain one's inner goals, but never are heavy-handed judgments put forward as to which goals are more important than others. Stevie recognizes the fact that Man will always be dissatisfied with things as they are, and that he will continually attempt to reshape his moral and physical landscape to suit his widened consciousness. The idea of an ultimate goal which would solve all of Man's difficulties is, therefore, never discussed.

Every search, whether physical or intellectual, is dealt with as equally important to Man's growth, as every search moves Man further along the continuum of moral progress. It is not unusual, then, for the album's opening song of drug-centered non-fulfillment, "Too High", with its chorus of

"I'm too high,
I'm too high,
I hope I never reach the ground" to be followed by the philosophical "Visions" with its question

"But what I'd like to know
Is could a place like this exist so beautiful
Or do we have to find our wings and fly away
To the vision in our mind?"

We move back and forth easily between searches based in revery and those based in reflection.

Innervisions could be discussed endlessly, but its merits will be more than evident to you when you play the album. It will delight both those who loved to dance to "Superstition" and those who liked to thoughtfully listen to "Evil". I only hope that I haven't given the impression in my discussion of the album's lyrical content that Innervisions is too "intellectual" to be enjoyable. Even if you don't pay attention to the lyrics, Innervisions will set you dancing for days, and that is no small feat.

NRBQ AT THE RUSTY NAIL
Sept. 7, 8 & 9

By Mike Kostek

Ah, the band was hot. At the Rusty Nail last Friday, Saturday and Sunday was the spectacle of NRBQ taking 100-200 young humans and cooking and flailing them in the sauna-like Nail for about four hours with pummelling rhythms and irresistible excellence.

It was more than a bit cruel to watch the battered yet game troopers on the floor for the final 12 to 1 stretch trying so very hard to dance, unable to ignore the naked beat that had successfully enticed them all night. Marty Kelley himself couldn't have withstood the mean celebration of life fostered by these down-home 'rockabillies'.

Even the much requested "Rocket Number Nine" in all its strangeness couldn't relieve the high spirits. Special kudos to clavinetist Terry Adams for fine work in the face of a three-week old sprained ankle, and to Al Anderson, a special lead guitarist for keeping on like he did, even after about $5.00 worth of 10¢ draughts.

You too can learn how to dance, sweat and live. NRBQ will be back in early October.

Some quaintly ethereal music on saxophone and overdubbed violin. A little voice: "I don't see anything." Then, "You are watching ScrambleVision, a free service of Charger Card. Is this the time to punch up the channel of your choice? . . ." So begins TV OR NOT TV, a saga of free and not-so-free airwaves, a "Video Vaudeville" by Philip Proctor and Peter Bergman, one half of the Firesign Theater (and no point in speculating as to whether or not this means the group has broken up).

Last winter, as the Nixon Administration sought increasing control of the press, Clay Whitehead announced a set of proposals for dealing with what he called "Ideological Plugola" (i.e. nightly news broadcasts) in the networks. These proposals scared people for awhile, but then came Watergate, and suddenly Nixon was on TV commending the press for the fine job it had done, you know. In any case, just as Kent State was part of the stimulus for Don't Crush That Dwarf, Hand Me The Pliers, so Mr. Clayhead undoubtedly had something to do with this album.

Like Dwarf, TV OR NOT TV has an outer plot, an inner plot, and a lot of useful digressions. The two main plots complement each other. The outer tells the story of Clark Cable and Fred Flamm, co-owners and co-operators of Channel 85, a local TV station which is pretty decentralized but perhaps not enough, and their battle with the Pirate Kids, a bunch of technolofreaks who keep cutting in on 85's broadcasts. The inner plot, an NET — like spectacle entitled "Escaping From the Declining Fall of the Roaming Umpire", details the efforts of Flatus Prolongus and Mucus Bruto, two Roaming Senators, to oust the tyrannical Umperor Caliuga. The Ump, a petty dictator, has been dominating the local lifestyle and media, and is obsessed with the world of professional sports, not unlike a certain contemporary public servant known to us all. Both stories resolve with technology for the People, all of them, that is. The digressions are many and fill out the overall Channel 85 story. They include editorials, public service spots (Our Lady of the Torch, Police Lineup), The Mz. Information Show, Cirque Internationale, Give Up This Day (sermonette), etc.

One digression worth expanding on here is the "Salute My Boots" sequence. On the surface, this consists of the Former Member of the Former House of Representatives, Bosco Hearn, giving the consumers some tips on the changing values of money. He reminds them, "Don't you remember? What was 5, is 2/ What was 2, is 1/ What was 1, is nothing. Now I'm going to repeat that for those of you on drugs. . ." So? Keeping technology in mind, let's translate those values into base 2, what computers use, folks. We get:

DEPT. OF PERSONAL ELECTRICITY
charger card.
FREDERICK FLAMM
DEPT. OF PERSONAL ELECTRICITY
charger card.
CLARK CABLE

What was 101
is 010,
What was 10
is 01,
What was 1
is 0

A rather complete change in values! This portion of the record has importance greater than its length would indicate; it's repeated several times, and the "change in values" it points to is what causes the Senators to Dump the Ump, and shows Clark and Fred the value of Braodcasting From Your Own Home.

Although the whole Firesign Theater group is not present on TV OR NOT TV, the style of the album is very much the same as previous efforts (and a good deal less dense than last winter's Not Insane). It has all of the convoluted stream-of-conciousness punning, juxtaposition of incongruous archetypes, masterful use of the recording studio and the Power of the Spoken Word which made those four moptops from Los Angeles famous. One important departure from previous albums, however, is in the use of music on the album. On past Firesign albums, the music didn't stand out on its own; it was purely functional. TV OR NOT TV is an improvement in this respect — not only does the album contain two fully developed musical numbers ("Communist Love Song" and "Nasi Goring"), but the background and incidental music is much better realized than previously.

Nothing more to be said here — TV OR NOT TV successfully mixes entertainment with utopian technology, politics and just the right touch of dangerous internationalism. And of course it's hysterically funny. So just remember — "This is no movie. This is real."

Beach Party Beatitudes

By Robert Nesti

Jesus Christ Superstar

"And Now the Film," the ads proclaim as if fulfilling the prophecies. "Jesus Christ Superstar" has the charm of a hippie curio and the fascination of a beached whale. There's something hopelessly determined about the picture. It has the drive and rhythm of a pneumatic hammer and, is after the initial shock, about as enjoyable. Director co-scriptwriter Norman Jewison makes films which disguise themselves as disposable entertainments which covertly dissolve into glossy message films. Characters aren't just pieces of furniture in Jewison's films, they think, they know what "angst" is. Whipped before a public tribunal this hippie Jesus knew suffering — a bit of Bactine and this Christ would be back boogieing in the desert or knocking over picture postcards in his local temple. Jewison, a minor talent with mighty intentions, finds his artistic complement in "Jesus Christ Superstar", a desert operetta with Almighty intentions, and believes he's rediscovered the Holy Grail. (It can be seen, by the way, as a paper cup in the Last Picnic sequence).

Jewison makes films in the style of extended television commercials. You keep expecting a bottle of Coke will be thrust in your face. He skirts the surface of the material quickly capturing an impression. With "Superstar" he whizzes above the story of Christ as if he were taking traffic reports for some Skyway patrol. It's a hippie musical travelogue of the Holy Land whose only depth is of focus. Christ and hippie dom were destined to join forces; the Savior could use the new image and the kids could use the prestige. Released around Christmas, the album proved the irresistable attraction overwhelmingly profitable. Jewison is reported to have heard the record long before it was everyone's least favorite holiday trinket and immediately secured its film rights. Let's keep him away from "The Messiah." He believes in Andrew Lloyd Webber and Tim Rice's bubblegum charade. His camera sweeps about the Israeli desert at a fevered pitch of a religious zealot who found the Lord at $9.98 a double album.

The film is dribbly choruses and numbing recitatives in stereophonic sound which have the effect of being locked in the back seat of some creep's Camaro who plays his eight track with too much treble. Noise is meant to clobber you into submission. The music has little going for it aside from supplying a pounding accompaniment to a bizarre libretto. Jesus, young, gifted, and Messianic, begins to gain a substantial following. His newfound success upsets an old croney, Judas, who plots with Christ's religious enemies. The witless public bureaucracy puts it before the people who do the Lord in. It's all most trashy. No one is more than thirty years old, which leaves Jesus's mother out of her own son's Crucifixtion. His "old lady" Mary Magdelene, the ex-hooker with the heart of God, takes his Crucifixtion very badly. His disciples, a scattered group of hippies, look dumbfounded and sing "What's the buzz, tell me what's a happenin'." Judas, black, deeply troubled, and driven by heavenly forcew, hangs himself after singing an embarassing reprise of "I Don't Know How To Love Him" while groveling on the ground. Mary Magdelene had sung the song earlier, but really wasn't all that convincing. She looked as if she'd had been more comfortable milking cows. She dolts over Christ, and her concern for him is that of a good scrubwoman dusting her favorite artifact. Ethel Merman meets Michaelangelo's David. The film's villians, mostly religious figures, effate bureaucrats and kinky dregs in purple wigs, are played as deep based drag queens or lecherous fags. Jewish organizations have been screaming about how outrageously they're being passed off as the new New Testament villians, gay groups should scream just as loudly at Jewison's nasty use of convenient stereotypes.

The picture is meant to say something against certain traditions, it attempts to wipe out one set of assinine values with another. But does it really need leering homosexuals to do so? Jewison covers his film with so much glitter that it doesn't even make sense as a social parable, as an outrageous thumbing of traditional values or as anything. It's a beach party picture without the water or Annette.

Little can be said for Ted Neeley's macho Christ, except that he seems to have studied acting under Clint Eastwood and really isn't as pretty as the portraits Jewison uses, like thunderbolts, during the crucifixion. Yvonne Elliman looks as if she has snacked on too much breadfruit while growing up in Hawaii and her singing is milky, like lousy mashed potatoes. Joshua Mostel as Herod has one big number sung on a floating throne in the Dead Sea which looks like Fellini/Miami Beach, and the big title number is staged like a Las Vegas floor show routine, kicking chorines and all.

Words like "surreal," and "profound," and "deeply moving" have been loosely dropped in reference to this film. Yet it never rises above being hopelessly vulgar to being anything worth watching. It's so appallingly conceived that you really wonder why it was made, until you realize that aesthetic considerations have had little to do with the greening of Christ this film. Like magnetic statues for the dash, "Jesus Christ Superstar" makes huge grosses out of a gross idea.

vagina still a "private part" that is exposed only under the sheets in darkened bedrooms? That Playgirl does not want to show all to save itself from the new Supreme Court ruling on pornography seems to make more sense than not placing emphasis on the esteemed rod. A Sears catalogue shows as much in the men's underwear section.

Playgirl does cater to a wide range of interests, much like the Readers Digest. There are movie, record and book reviews that are offensive to almost anyone who has ever seen a film, read a book or listened to a record. The beauty and health hints are exact replicas of every other column ever written. This being the age of Aquarius also accounts for the sexually oriented five page spread of astrology lessons, horoscopes and zodiac charts. There are the basic two mediocre short stories, photo essays which resemble "the warm touch" greeting cards that present profound cosmic thoughts such as — "your faint aroma, is it green grass and desert honey, or the thang of the Arabian scent". Human interest stories also abound.

There are topics such as, save the gray wolf, nudist reverie and above all the human behind the centerfold. In one issue Fabian Forte is presented as the kid pop idol of then and the man husband father entertainer of now. There is a questionnaire at the end of each issue concerning the type of woman who reads Playgirl. It asks such pertinent things as — "do you own a motorcycle, what major credit cards do you hold, and did you feel our male nudes were too conservative?" It will be interesting to learn the results. If it is the truly liberated woman who does read and live the message of Playgirl it will be a horrible setback for the Woman's Movement. Yet it seems almost impossible that any woman (or man) committed to the ideals of the movement would be pleased with Playgirl. It is absurd to believe that someone liberated must be concerned about breast size or tummy control. Survival in this society does not rest on the big challenge of picking up a man and keeping him. The goal of Women's Liberation is not to have naked men jumping out of cakes at bridge clubs yet this is what Playgirl thrives on. This magazine is in no way a breakthrough for women, rather it is just another male controlled portion of the media which exploits women.

Famous Beauties

By Leslie Freschet

Were they stereotyped ideals or strong personalities? Were they manipulated objects or individual characters? Were they sex goddesses or prepursors to Women's Lib? Women in American films of the thirties often present such contradictory images.

On the one hand, one can say that the early films is where certain aspects of sexism gained much of their present strength. The attitudes of this society which still expects certain ideal qualities in it's women, were probably as much a result of the Hollywood "dream factory" as anything. Of course women have always been subject to restricted definitions of beauty and appeal, but the ideal was never stricter, never more distant, never more ideal than the one presented by the bleached, plucked, beauties of Hollywood. These women had the extra advantage of specially made, flattering lenses, and directors and cameramen who could capture their "best side". While this produced some of the most constructed archetypes of beauty and womanhood found in history, at the same time the power of the camera could magically create the illusion of the "realism" of it all...resulting in qualities which were largely artificial seemed real and obtainable at the same time. Perfection in the appearance of women on the screen became a seemingly necessary standard, since now close-ups would expose the minutest flaws. Of course that perfection could not help but instill similar standards among women in their own struggle for beauty, and attractiveness, or men in their search for it. However, the newness of film as a medium, and the added novelty of "talkies" in the 30's made the entire area a tremendous frontier. And as a frontier there was a freedom, a lack of definition and limitation which characterizes the thirties, and which almost always characterizes the women in films of the thirties as well. There is a freshness and a strong sense of individuality among the female stars of this period which emerged partially out of the naivite of a Hollywood still young enough to be willing to experiment, and partly from a genius that realized the success of the industry lied with allowing their stars to expose their full range. While the distinctions between Kim Novak, Jill St. John and Carol Baker might not be very obvious, it would be impossible to include Mae West, Marlene Dietrich, Jean Harlow and Gretta Garbo in the same category. Though "sex goddess" might be thought of as the one common denominator for each, the individuality of the sexuality each transmitted, seems to argue against even such a basic generalization. True, Mae West had a certain "look" which was widely imitated. But she also had a character, a vivid personality that was integrated with that appearance and which was unmistakably hers. There is an unpredictability about her and many female stars of the period which includes the stereotype, but is not confined by it. Famous for such unexpected lines as "Is that a bannana in your pants or are ya just glad to see me", her sexuality is inseparable from her own very individual personality, speech, movement and mannerisms. The same integration of sexuality and personality is true of Garbo, Hepburn, Harlow and many others.

The films presented in the "Women in films of the thirties" series, offer an excellent opportunity to explore the contradictions of the birth of the Hollywood "super-ideal", and the era out of which grew some of the strongest, most individual female characters that exist on film. But more than that these films offer a wonderful opportunity to enjoy a wide range of experiences. Delight in the opulence of Cecil B. DeMille's Cleopatra, the camp mythology of King Kong, the zany originality of one of Hollywood's most famous comedies, Bringing Up Baby, and the magnitude of the adaptation of Pearl Buck's The Good Earth, which features one of the strongest female characters on the screen. The series includes individual performances that are unmatched, including the electricity of Bette Davis in Dangerous, the mystique of Garbo in As You Desire Me, and the pure celebration of Mae West in what many consider her best film, Go West Young Man. Decide for yourself whether women in films of the thirties created stereotypes that our society still embodies, or whether they expressed and individuality among women's images on film that has since been repressed.

Film Series:

Famous Flatfoots

By Joanne Iorocci

Since the introduction of Philip Marlowe, private investigator, in the film The Big Sleep the image of the detective in films has undergone an almost antithetical change over the past 30 years.

The Philip Marlowe played by Humphrey Bogart became the prototypical private eye for the modern detective film. He was a romantic hero. Independent, tough, cynical, witty and attractive. The list of adjectives could go on.... This individual worked independently of the law using his cool and diplomacy to keep himself on their good side when the going got rough. Ultimately it was his clear thinking and decisive action that resulted in restoring justice. Implicit in his attitude and dealings with the law was a subtle sense of superiority. Bogart's environment and criminals dealt with were very obviously exhibiting the classic good vs evil syndrome. By staying on top of the case, Bogart came out ahead — he was a winner in every sense of the word.

Over the past thirty years the image of the detective has assumed that of detective as anti-hero, as personified by Gene Hackman in The French Connection. He is a weary and unglamorous man, one of several replaceable men working on a case. Not on the side of the law and working for an organization, he is often put in an awkward credibility gap which by its nature is a degrading position. The cases themselves are far more complex and good or bad not so easily defined. Ultimately in the 60's detective film he was a loser — after much mental aggravation and physical exhaustion the law remains unenforced.

The series of detective films to be shown this fall offers an excellent opportunity to get a feeling for this tremendous transformation from the idealism so stark in the 40's films to the rampant disillusionment the 60's material and the social implications involved. It's an exciting series including some of the best films from the Detective Genre. Orson Welles in Touch of Evil, Otto Preminger's classic, Laura and James Garner in Marlowe pick up nicely on that slick Bogart type of character. Steve McQueen in Bullitt and Frank Sinatra in The Detective provide further examples of the disullusioned contemporary detective as well as some gut excitement in the notorious car chase scenes in Bullitt and The French Connection.

THE BIG HEAT (1953)
A late Fritz Lang gangster film. Much coarser than films of this genre which came before, the film has a striking realism. The violence is front center, in full view, the effect is disturbing. Playing with Touch Of Evil. Student Union Ballroom, Wednesday, 9-19, 7,

LE BOUCHER (1969)
The most important film by New Wave French director Claude Chabrol. The story is simple and drawn along Hitchcockian lines: Helene, a young schoolteacher in a small French village becomes involved with the town's butcher, a war veteran who has just recently returned to the village of his youth. A number of grisly murders occur in the town and Helene discovers circumstantial evidence which indicts Popaul, the butcher. This is Charbol's simplest and most beautiful film. With its extremely long takes and flashes of dramatic intensity it brings to mind Hitchcock, but Chabrol is more of a misanthropic romantic and his film is tinged with a tragic pathos that would seem intangible to Hitchcock. Sage Hall, Smith College, Saturday, 9-15, 7:30 and 9:30. Student Union Ballroom, Thursday 4-29, 7 and 9.

CARNAL KNOWLEDGE (1970)
Mike Nichol's rude awakening of the American male ethos. A brittle and not too likeable film, with a dimestore persuasion by scriptwriter Jules Fieffer who has a good sense of prototypes but little compassion in his indictment of his generation's sexual wasteland. Nichol's directs as if Godard were his teacher, but his stylized realism really hasn't any bite or wit. With Jack Nicholson, Arthur Garfunkel, Ann Margret, and Candice Bergen. Playing with The Graduate. Amherst Cinema, Amherst.

LAST 1 DAYS
Enter The Dragon

ENTER THE DRAGON
The first Hollywood studio financed film to cash in on the Kung-fu craze. The plot concerns the international maneuverings of a corrupt Kung-fu academy. What again? The last film of the late Bruce Lee, whose widow resides in Sunderland. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

THE ILLUSTRATED MAN (1969)
Rod Stieger in the tatooed buff in an unhappy adaptation of Ray Bradbury's science fiction novel, with Claire Bloom, Campus Center Auditorium, Saturday, 9-15, 7:15 and 9:15.

THE KID (1920)
Chaplin's first feature length film in which he and Jackie Coogan play a pair of con artists (plot sound familiar?) in a city slums. As delightful as Chaplin film can be. Thompson 104, 9-17, 6, 8, 10.

OKLAHOMA CRUDE
Faye Dunaway discovers oil in the early years of this century deep in the heart of Hollywood. Director Stanley Dramer attempts something novel for his platudious career — a picture of stock entertainment values with little social frills. Still its difficult to keep an old liberal dogmatist down and this sprawling epic about one woman's rise in the male controlled oil world has a ludicrous profundity to it. Faye Dunaway, not quite our favorite actress, is unbearably vulgar as the woman who sacrifices her feminity for success in the man's world. Frigidity is equated with ambition. George C. Scott, usually our favorite actor, plays Dunaway's oil baron rival and really tarnishes his fine career. With Jack Palance. Palace Theater, West Springfield.

FRANCO ZEFFIRELLI
ROMEO & JULIET
OLIVIA HUSSEY
LEONARD WHITING
PG

ROMEO AND JULIET (1968)
Franco Zeeffirelli liberates the young tragic lovers from the likes of overaged prima donnas like Norma Shearer and John Barrymoore, unfortunately he doesn't liberate Shakespeare's text which sounds as if it is being recited by a junior high school reading group. The picture has great drive and some interesting effects — it would be a great deal of fun to watch if you didn't feel as if Leonard Whiting and Olivia Hussey receives the leads because of their pretty looks. The text, also, is badly tampered with. Sweeping kitsch, the romantic ardour is stifling. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

THIRD WORLD FILM SERIES
A series of short, political films. Campus Center, room 165, Friday, 9-14, 7:30.

SOME LIKE IT HOT (1959)
Billy Wilder's farce about two musicians on the run from Chicago's seedy underworld, who dress in drag and hide out with an all girls band. Anything goes; the film is a comic feast of slapstick gags, way out one liners, in joke Hollywood impressions and references, and everything works perfectly. With Marilyn Monroe in her most charming role, Tony Curtis, and Jack Lemmon. The Globe Theater, Northampton.

FUNNY GIRL (1968)
A thrilling example of how a simply mesmerizing talent can turn a ramshackle and sloppy vehicle into something overwhelmingly entertaining. It's dynamo is Barbra Streisand, and how glorious she is as she throws off a sassy one — liner and sings with a determination that's almost frightening. William Wyler puts her through her paces, luckily she's on screen nearly 98 percent of the picture. When she's off screen, this musical biography of Fanny Brice has a stale musical comedy taste. With Omar Shariff, Kayx Medford. Playing with The Owl and the Pussycat. Academy of Music, Northampton. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

INGA (1967)
A voguish Swedish sex film of the middle Sixties. Steamy is the word that was once used to describe this sort of tale. Mahar, Friday, 9-14, 7 and 9:30.

ZORBA THE GREEK (1965)
A zestful, uncontrolled, open-air film, written and directed by Michael Cacoyannis from a novel by Nikos Kazantzakis, about a huge peasant who persuades a timid Englishman to share his joy in life even when surrounded by disaster. Marred by over-indulgent writing and an unnecessary sub-plot about a widow who is stoned to death by Cretan peasants, the film remains a pleasure to watch by virtue of Walter Lassally's photography, Mikos Theodorakis' music, and the performances of Anthony Quinn, Alan Bates, and (in moderation) Lila Kedrova. Gamble Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke College, Saturday, 9-15, 7:30.

TOUCH OF EVIL (1958)
Orson Welles's only American film in twenty-five years; some regard it as his greatest, even superceding Citizen Kane. The story is of a Mexican narcotics officer who comes to a seedy Mexican border town to investigate the automobile bombing which killed the town boss. He receives the reluctant cooperation of the corrupt American detective in charge of the case. They spar off, against each other and against the suspects. An often complicated and banal plot which Welles uses as a personal vendetta against police authority. Welles has said: I firmly believe that in the modern world we have to choose between the morality of law and the morality of basic justice. That is to say, between lynching someone and letting him go free. I prefer to let a murderer go free than to let the police arrest him by mistake." The film is heavily ladened with Goya-like imagery; the seediness is that of an infected universe. Welles twist, reality with culmitative technical mastery. Student Union Ballroom, Wednesday, 9-19, 7.

PAPER MOON
A charming story about a pair of con artists in Kansas during the Thirties. He's Ryan O'Neil, she's his nine year old daughter Tatum. Peter Bogdanovich does a superb job of keeping the material from becoming cloying and the film has a freshness usually reserved for watching old Thirties Freddie Bartholomew pictures. A sort of restrained professionalism that keeps things moving without sticking for too long. Tatum O'Neil gives a remarkable performance as the wily cigarette smoking girl who bribes her dead mother's one time lover into taking her on his Bible selling route. Campus Cinemas, Hadley; Calvin Theater, Northampton.

A TOUCH OF CLASS
Glenda Jackson and George Segal play a pair of bewildered lovers he's married, she's divorced, obviously in love they can't work things out. Their affair is like skew lines. Melvin Frank directs this romance in the style or comedies which flourished in the mid-Forties, amusing but really not much fun. The two leads are stereotypes — current ones so deceptive and palatable, but stereotypes nonetheless, and Frank's maneuvering of them gives the picture a social conscience that undercuts the comedy. The leads do fairly well with what's asked of them. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

The Owl and the Pussycat

THE OWL AND THE PUSSYCAT (1970)
Barbra Streisand and George Segal play a pair of New York weird lovers in this cheery and raunchy adaptation of Bill Naughton's romantic comedy. She's a crude, fast-talking hooker, he's a would-be writer — they have a temperemental affair. Although the adaptation of Buck Henry is a bit sketchy, the comedy has a tone which recalls the screwball comedies of the Thirties. Streisand and Segal are a joy to watch together. In its own way, the picture is a screaming success. Playing with Funny Girl. Academy of Music, Northampton; Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

LET IT BE (1970)
The Beatles last film; a simple filming of the recording of the quartet's final album. The kind of picture audiences talk to. Your enjoyment of it pivots on your appreciation of the group. Some attempt at hitting the zany ground touched in the early Beatle comedies, but the film only faintly skims that surface. Student Union Ballroom, Saturday, 9-15, 7:15 and 9:15.

THE PALM BEACH STORY (1942)
Preston Sturges's sophisticated, screwball comedy. Sturge's films move from slapstick to elegant farce with exceptional ease — this wackiness makes his early Forties comedies amongst the best to ever be made in Hollywood. This certainly has claims to being one of the most superbly crafted comedies of its type. The story concerns a young woman bent on divorcing her rich second husband and has probably the fastest dialogue ever filmed, except for the ridiculously quick banter of His Girl's Friday. With Claudette Colbert, Mary Astor, Joel McRea, and Rudy Vallee. Hampden Student Center, Southwest, Sunday, 9-16, 7:30 and 9:30.

LIVE AND LET DIE
The latest of the James Bond films, this time with Roger Moore playing the Ian Fleming spy. Gimmicky, ludicrous, and some fun. The film culminates in a huge, destructive chase across a Louisiana boyou in which speedboats crash a genteel wedding. Moore is uncomfortable as Bond, although the picture has enough clever action to sustain interest. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

Film Strips

HEAVY TRAFFIC. A scurvy mess, thoroughly unfunny and it's not even good pornography. Borrowing freely from Hanna-Barbera, Gahan Wilson and Elia Kazan, not-so-sensitive cartoonist Ralph Bakshi takes us into the world of a sensitive shy young animator who can't get laid. Supporting characters include a leglessman, a masochist transvestite, a "black chick," a gang of greasers, and God. God is horny too, just like everyone else in the film. Take our word for it. the wholething's absolutely vile.

I COULD NEVER HAVE SEX WITH ANY MAN WHO HAD SO LITTLE REGARD FOR MY HUSBAND. We said it was going to open, we promised you, and we were wrong — sort of. It's still coming, only nobody's quite sure when

STATE OF SIEGE. Exciting in a terrifying immediate way, but its methods are not to be confused with those of the far more direct Z. Costa-Gavras' unabashedly propagandizing portrait of an American A.I.D. traffic expert, and all his behind-the-scenes trafficking, is presented without benefit of a conventional suspense-story structure. Yet it's as compelling as any more sensationalized version would be, thanks largely to Yves Montand's brilliantly controlled portrait of a man who has sacrificed his life for a cause so dishonorable it remains bleakly nameless, and who is bewilderingly willing to die for nothing at all.

VISIONS OF EIGHT. Arthur Penn, Mai Zetterling, John Schlesinger and five others photograph the 1972 Olympics, neatly sidestepping the tragedy that disrupted the games.

ELECTRA GLIDE IN BLUE. Motorcycle cop in Monument Valley finds himself trapped between co-cops and hippies, eventually emerged as an individual. Brilliant performance from Robert Blake, plus tiresome score by pseudonymious Chicago. Directed by James William Guercio.

Scene from Electra Glide in Blue

THE ACAPULCO GOLD RUSH. 2½ hour comedy compendium, including a 1926 anti-marijuana western, various army training films, and a fifties number called High School Confidential, starring Russ Tamblyn, Jerry Lee Lewis and Mamie Van Doren.

HAIL TO THE CHIEF. 1971 political satire, featuring a presidential buffoon, suddenly seems more appropriate than it did when it was made. Originally deemed too controversial for widespread release, it's now a pale-but-funny echo of the real McCoy.

THE HARDER THEY COME. Jamaican reggae music backs this story of a character who's three fantasies in one — rock star, dealer and gunslinger. Somewhat repetitious and jerkily paced, but well on its way to becoming a cult item.

As In Life... Hair Has Its Ups And Downs

By JAN FRANKS

The era of "flow it, show it, long as God can grow it" hair is slowly being choked by its own tangled tresses as more and more young men leave their flowing locks in a clump under the barber's chair.

"Long hair is a pain in the ass" remarked one newly shorn student. "It was always getting in my eyes and mouth and it was hard to comb." added another.

Nelson Major of the Campus Center Barber Shop extimates that approximately 10% more students are coming in to get their hair cut than in past years, although he admits it's too early to tell if this is a significant trend.

Fashion certainly indicates a movement toward shorter hair. Sylvio, one of the stylists at the enormously popular Chopping Block, shed his ponytail for a vaguely Egyptian-looking style that barely reaches his collar. Sylvio avows that the latest look is one sans sideburns and with full-styled hair cut just below the earlobe and off the neck.

Other barbers agree that even if the crewcut has bit the dust forever, short cut, but long-styled hair is most definitely in the picture.

However many students have faced the scissors, there remains a large population of masculine Rapunzels who have no desire to snip off their manes. One streaming-haired fellow said, "I like it. I've grown used to it. Cutting it off would be like cutting off an arm or a leg."

Others keep their hair long in submission to the fancies of their girlfriends. "Girls like long hair," stated one barber, grinning. "They like to run their fingers through it." It is interesting to note that some of the world's most renowned lovers had long hair: Henry VIII, Lord Byron, Rasputin.

It seems obvious that hairstyle can no longer be regarded as a badge of political or social beliefs. People wear their hair the way they like it and this, after all the grotesque idiocy of styles and symbols is, perhaps, the best way of all.

It may be fashionable to have it cut short these days, but there still remains a large number of men who wear their hair long. The only thing that is certain is you can wear it any way you want.

MARY Program Aides Troubled Youths

By JERRY LAZAR

Approximately ten troubled youths, ages thirteen to sixteen, will register today at UMass in a program that will enable them to obtain the equivalent of a high school education, and show them the available resources and lifestyles of a college campus.

The Massachusetts Association for the Rehabilitation of Youth (M.A.R.Y.) Program, in its second year of operation at the University, offers Department of Youth Services-associated teams the opportunity to room with a University student on campus and to enroll in a unique educational program of their choosing, leading to a high school certificate when they reach the age of eighteen.

The college student, or advocate, receives six to twelve academic credits in education and/or psychology for his participation in the program.

According to Fran Taylor, the secretary of the M.A.R.Y. Program, "The kids set up their own schedule. They decide what they want and what they don't want. And there are a lot of options," she said.

These options include a work-study program, which provides on-the-job training of a particular skill or trade, and independent study program. The teams may also choose to tutor a younger child or be tutored by a graduate student in areas involving basic skills.

They will live with their advocates in one of two campus dorms--Webster House or Lewis House--hence promoting a one-to-one relationship and strong interaction between the college student and the younger student.

The program has seen success in the past year, evidenced in particular by a fifteen-year-old who received his General Equivalency Diploma last week.

Because of a late start in recruiting, there remains a shortage of advocates. Any student interested in becoming an advocate can contact Neal Rist, Director of the M.A.R.Y. Program at 545-0438.

Language Requirement Merely A Hassle

By KEVIN KITTREDGE

For students under the umbrella of the College of Arts and Sciences (CAS), the foreign language requirement is "just another hassle" put there by "them." "Them" being some unseen force; invisible but felt.

The foreign language requirement is not like other requirements and is unique in two ways. First, its the only requirement that has a review board attached to it which is prepared to exempt students from the requirement. To qualify, the student must have a "proven inability or extreme difficulty in learning languages."

Last year 111 requests were processed and 75 granted exemptions. From the students view it has developed into a catch-22 approach. If you're in CAS, you're qualified and able, but to escape the requirement you must prove stupidity.

Secondly, no one seems to know why CAS has the requirement. In a memo to the faculty of CAS from Deans Allen, Alfange and Ends on May 1, 1973, they conclude "that there seems to be no clearly agreed upon rationale regarding the purposes that a language requirement is intended to achieve."

If its purpose is to enable the student to read Cervantes, Voltaire or Nietzsche in their respective languages, then the standards of the requirement must be raised considerably. Or, if its purpose is to enable the student order a meal, read a wine list and ask directions, the standards could be lowered.

Giving the student a feeling for the "culture" of the country is the most common explanation for the requirement. When the novelty of the language lab, with its head phones and knobs, wears off, the student soon realizes the false logic of that statement.

A possible explanation for the requirement is the fact that its there. Herter Hall is there, the labs are there and the instructors are there.

The technology of education must be served. Most people can still remember how much easier it was to justify involvement in Vietnam after Long Bien had been built.

The fact that the language requirement must be notified or abolished has been kicking around since 1969. The memo mentioned above also concludes that there is "little evidence of any academic benefit that may be expected to be derived from the language requirement--at least as presently administered."

Women and Jobs

Advancement Comes Slowly

By ROBERTA McCANN

"Women join the labor force primarily for pocket-money." This often-held belief is now being shattered with revolutionary consequences. In March of 1972, more than half of the 33 million women in the labor force were working because of pressing economic need. It is estimated that 37 million women will be part of the labor force by 1980.

However, the average yearly salaries for full-time women is notably less than men. According to U.S. Department of Commerce statistics, a woman with four years of college education earns $7,396 a year while a man with a comparable education earns $12,960.

The gap in earnings between the sexes varies according to occupation. It is largest for sales workers (women earn only 41% of what men earn) and smallest for clerical workers (women earn 65% of what men earn).

Efforts are being made by government and women's groups to close the gap on earnings between men and women in similar occupations, to recruit more women into highly technical fields, and to hire more women in fields offering higher pay and increased responsibility.

According to Dorothy Hardesty, a staff assistant at the UMass Career-Placement office, "The government does the greatest job. They have been leaders in the promotion of women. They have been putting pressure on industry to hire more women."

The first legal step by the government was the enactment of the Equal Pay Act of 1963 which prohibited sex discrimination in the payment of wages for equal work. Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 prohibits discrimination in employment based on sex, as well as race, color, religion and national origin. Executive Order 11246 which prohibits sex discrimination by industries with federal contracts reflects the pressure that the government is putting on private industry.

There has been criticism of the government's legalistic policy. The most notable is the charge of "tokenism" resulting from industries forced compliance with government quotas.

"There is some tokenism. The companies are really sincere. But there are not enough qualified women as, for instance, in engineering.", said Mrs. Hardesty.

Several women's groups have assumed the task of encouraging women to enter the high responsibility and well paying fields traditionally closed to only a few women. They have attempted to change the attitudes women have of themselves.

According to the U.S. Department of Labor, the groups with the highest predicted growth rates in the next decade are in descending order-professional and technical workers, service workers, sales workers, craftsmen and foremen, managers and administrators, and operatives.

The degree to which women will be able to capitalize on the growing well paid, responsible and respectable careers will depend on a variety of factors.

Women will need better and more sympathetic career planning and counseling.

Some women must change their career aspirations. So called "Women's occupations" no longer will satisfy all women. As more women decide to combine the roles of wife and mother with a meaningful job, they will be encouraged to seek positions in previously male dominated fields.

Women will have to utilize the sources of legal protection and assistance currently available to them.

Of high importance, women will have to individually and collectively, confront the difficult task of changing employer attitudes with regard to women's roles and desire to work.

Public Health, Nursing Join Forces

By BARBARA VOORHEES

In a move to give students in the fields of nursing and public health the possibility of an advanced degree program in those fields, a wider range of courses to choose from and more research facilities, the UMass schools of nursing and public health were merged Sept. 1.

The resulting School of Health Sciences will be headed for this academic year by Dean William A. Darity.

Dean Darity, in an MDC interview, said that the new school will be made up of two divisions: nursing and public health. The two divisions will be run exactly as they were when they were schools but students in the new school will have more advantages.

Advantages cited by Dean Darity are: students from one division can use the research facilities of the other division; students in one division will have priority over students in other schools in adding classes from the other division; and funds for the two divisions will be combined for the setting up of graduate programs. A committee is working on a doctoral program for the school.

Dean Darity said that the idea of a rotating deanship was one of the most important features of the merger. In the years following this one, the deanship will rotate between the directors of the two divisions on a three year basis. Dean Darity is also director of the division of public health.

"In this type of set up the dean does not become a full-time administrator, he can still keep in touch with teaching. His ideas won't go stale," said Dean Darity.

Professor Mary Helming, who has been named director of the division of nursing for one year said in an MDC interview that she felt the merger was especially helpful for nursing students.

"The trend in health today is going from a few large centrally located medical centers to more smaller community health centers. The consumer wants his health care in his community. Nurses must be trained to deliver health care in different ways and in different places," said Professor Helming.

What Are Soybeans?

By STEVE TETREAULT

One of the actions taken by UMass Food Services this year to fight the rising costs of feeding 14,000 students a day has been the occasional replacement of real meat with synthetic meat analogs derived from soybean.

But just what are soybeans, and how did they get into that meatloaf (or ham, or chicken, or hamburg)?

Soybeans are technically legumes, an offshoot of the vegetable family. Typical legumes include wax beans, peas, and green beans, among others. A soybean is about half an inch long, and shaped roughly like a quarter moon.

The Chinese were the first to use these beans. As a matter of fact, soybeans were one of the first vegetables of which there is a written record. In 2800 BC, Emperor Shen Nung listed it among China's five major agricultural products.

Through a process of germination and fermentation, the Chinese were able to convert the beans into a crude product fit for consumption. The complicated conversion processes are needed even today, as soybeans fried, boiled or cooked are inedible.

An American, Robert Royer, improved on the conversion processes in the 1930's, and going a step further, spun the soy into edible structures somewhat akin to muscle fibers. By adding amino acids and flavoring, Royer was able to improve protein content and taste. By another process, he was able to vary the texture of the structures, thereby making the analogs disguisable as various "food products".

Among the first Americans to eat converted soybeans were a group of Seventh Day Adventists near Worthington, Ohio (present site of a processing plant). Being vegetarians, members of this sect tried to ignore the bitter taste of these crude "artificial meats", and ate the analogs simply because of the high protein content. Besides, it did look like meat.

During World War II, soybeans served as part of the Allied effort aside from their use in the production of analogs which were used as food supplements on the home front, the code signal "soya link" was used in the US-British attack on Burma.

Today, soybeans are a valuable commodity on the stock market, especially in the midwest, not only because of their potential as food for human consumption, but also for their use as high protein cattle feed.

However, a majority of Americans remain ignorant of soybean and its possibilities. Even President Nixon recently admitted he couldn't picture what a soybean looked like. He quickly received a bag of the legumes from a Missouri Democrat.

Today, only 1 per cent of the meat consumed by Americans is derived from analogs. However, many nutritionists predict that by 1980 over 20 per cent of this product will be in use due to rising natural meat demands, and overall global need for food of any kind.

Like it or not, it is very likely that the "stuff" lying on your plate in the commons will be the food of the future. Better start enjoying it now.

Junta Threatens Civilians

Chileans Still Resist

By LUIS MARTINEZ
Associated Press Writer

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP)- The junta that toppled Salvador Allende reported Sunday that armed civilians were still resisting military authorities and warned they will be killed unless they lay down their weapons.

At least three persons have been summarily executed since Allende died in last Tuesday's military coup, according to official figures. Well informed unofficial sources put the number at more than 11 and said another 3,000 are detained at two sports stadiums.

According to the sources, arrested persons are first questioned in a small stadium near downtown Santiago. If they are accused of criminal action, they are moved to the larger national stadium in the suburb where "the situation is then serious."

"Many people have been condemned to death and executed in the national stadium, including foreigners," the sources asserted.

The reports of executions and a large number of arrests have not been confirmed by the junta, although it has repeatedly warned that those who resist will be executed immediately.

Helicopters flew over Santiago on Sunday dropping leaflets that declared the junta "would not turn away from executing without delay those terrorists who attack soldiers or carry arms..."

The junta has announced the executions of three persons accused of resisting the new regime. Two were identified as "extremists" and the third was said to be a policeman who killed two of his superiors.

Gen. Augusto Pinochet, president of the junta, said on a television show Saturday night that "groups of rebels misled by Marxism" were continuing to resist the military.

"I have to protect my troops," the general said, "and sadly there are still some armed groups who insist on attacking, which means that the military rules of wartime apply to them."

The action against civilians loyal to Allende, who died in the coup, appeared to slow down Saturday night after intense confrontations in the industrial suburbs of the capital.

Sweden's King Dies; Carl XVI Invested

STOCKHOLM (AP) - Cheered by thousands of his subjects and honored with a 42-gunshot Naval salute, King Carl XVI Gustaf assumed Sweden's throne Sunday.

He flew in from the royal summer residence at Helsingborg in southern Sweden, where his grandfather King Gustaf VI Adolf died Saturday night.

The 90-year-old king's death automatically elevated his grandson, 27-year-old Carl Gustaf, to the throne. Carl Gustaf's father was killed in a 1947 plane crash.

About 10,000 Swedes gathered outside the royal palace Sunday afternoon, chanting: "We want to see our king, we want to see our king." They applauded when he appeared in a window and waved.

Naval guns fired a 42-salvo salute to the late king and then another 42 rounds for the new monarch.

The new king and the royal family, all dressed in black, attended services at Stockholm Cathedral. As they did, preparations were underway for the funeral of the dead monarch. His body is to be brought to Stockholm in a 12-hour motorcade Tuesday.

Funeral ceremonies, dignified by the presence of most European royalties and heads of state, have been scheduled for Sept. 25. Court weeks.

The death of the aged monarch generated some confusion about the parliamentary elections Sunday. Newspapers reported many calls from voters wondering whether the royal death meant the polling had been called off. Radio newscasts repeatedly advised Swedes that the vote was on.

The king will be buried at the Haga Castle royal burial site near the grave of Queen Louise, his British-born second wife who died in 1965.

The monarch was taken from his summer residence at Helsingborg to the hospital there on Aug. 18 for treatment of a gastric ulcer. He had been near death since an Aug. 21 operation but rallied several times to the astonishment of his doctors and satisfaction of his people.

King Gustaf VI Adolf earned the respect and admiration of his countrymen during his 23 years on the throne. Hundreds of thousands cheered him as he rode bareheaded in a chill wind through the streets of Stockholm on his 90th birthday last Nov. 11.

A sportsman like his father before him, he played tennis and golf until an advanced age. His grand passion was archaeology and he joined a Swedish expedition in Italy annually to probe for Etruscan artifacts.

PRESIDENTIAL PALACE IN SANTIAGO - This is a file photo of the presidential palace in downtown Chile which was under attack before Allende's death. Now fighting is going on between the new military and angry citizens, who refuse to live under the new military junta.

Mondale Seeks Capitol Reform

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. Walter F. Mondale, D-Minn., called Sunday for creation of a commission to re-examine the office of the president in the wake of the Watergate scandal.

"The commission's over-riding purpose should be to examine what has happened to the office, why it has happened and what can be done to ensure that the presidency remains open and accountable to the American people and the Congress," Mondale said.

His proposal was contained in a Senate speech for delivery Monday. The Minnesota Democrat urged enactment of a series of measures bolstering congressional power, including one providing for the periodic questioning of executive branch officials by senators on radio and television.

He urged passage of pending measures to limit the president's war-making and budgetary impoundment powers, require Senate confirmation of all top executive branch officials and establishment of the office of congressional counsel to help Congress to challenge alleged illegal executive branch actions.

Mondale, who has been cited as a potential 1976 presidential candidate, said the presidential commission would compromise members of the legislative and executive branches plus distinguished private citizens.

"Its charter should be broad, as broad as the needs of the nation for responsible government dictate," he said.

The commission should seek a long-term view of how to re-establish a working presidency "which is strong, yet legal; capable of leading, but without dictating," Mondale said.

He said it is important to provide for an open, responsible presidency without emasculating the office.

"While we need reform," Mondale said, "We do not need retribution.

"We need a strong presidency," he said, "But we also need an open and legal presidency, with strong safeguards to protect against the abuses of presidential power."

GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS. Sept. 12--BIG BULL--Peter Brucale, of Hartsville, Mass., is perched atop a 3,400 pound bull, reported to be the world's biggest, at the Great Barrington Fair this week. At four hamburgers to a pound, that's 13,600. If Peter ate one a day, it would take him more than 37 years to consume an animal equal to the weight of the 3,400-pound bull. AP WIREPHOTO

UAW Strike

Union Official Claims Progress

DETROIT (AP)- A two-day strike by 113,300 workers against Chrysler Corp.-which already has cost the auto maker production of 3,600 cars-continued Sunday despite a claim negotiations are making progress.

The optimistic note came from Charles Brooks, president of United Auto Workers Local 444 in Windsor, Ont., and a union negotiator representing Canadian hourly workers.

"Chrysler has gotten the message the UAW is damned serious about working conditions and is going to do something about it," Brooks told newsmen late Saturday.

"The atmosphere in there is not as cold as it has been...Both sides are working more diligently than before," the Canadian added after nearly 12 hours of negotiations.

"Oh, we've got a blackout, haven't we," Brooks said in apparent astonishment as he slipped behind the doors of the negotiating rooms where newsmen cannot follow.

Brooks' comments were the only public ones made by either side about the strike which began at midnight Friday. Both company and union have agreed to suppress any public comment about progress in their bargaining.

A Chrysler public relations man accused his counterpart at the UAW of permitting Brooks to make "an inexcusable breach of the blackout." The UAW staff member said later, "I told him Brooks he was holding a news conference, hoping he'd take the hint. But he's a member of the committee and I can't shut him up."

The first day of the strike Saturday gave 80,500 workers scheduled for overtime a day off and cost Chrysler production of 3,600 cars, the company reported.

Chrysler had no automotive production scheduled Sunday even before the strike began. Assembly lines at General Motors and Ford, which employ nearly 600,000 UAW workers, continued without interruptions since the union has extended indefinitely its contracts with these auto makers.

Sources close to the negotiations at Chrysler said the bargaining breakdown which brought a strike was triggered by failure to agree on three major issues-making over-time voluntary, improving safety conditions in the plants and costs of the union's pension demands.

Secretariat To Race On Grass

By ED SCHUYLER JR.
Associated Press
Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - Secretariat has at least one more race and it could be a brand new challenge to the colt who eats up challenges as easily as if they were oats.

Secretariat, upset in his first meeting with older horses in the Whitney Stakes Aug. 4, whipped them in sensational manner Saturday in a $250,000 invitational race and appeared headed Sunday for his turf debut in the prestigious Man o' War Stakes Oct. 8.

"We will work them both Secretariat and Riva Ridge on the grass and then decide," said Laurin who added that if Secretariat didn't go in the Man o' War he would race in the Woodward on the dirt Sept. 29.

Whichever race Secretariat runs in, Riva Ridge, who finished second Saturday, won't, said Laurin. "They won't run together again."

Watergate

Decision On Indictments Nears

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal grand jury investigating the Watergate break-in and cover-up has only to hear the White House tape recordings before deciding whether to issue indictments.

The Associated Press has learned that the grand jury has heard all other available evidence in the case and, except for listening to the tapes, is ready to vote on indictments charging conspiracy to obstruct justice and perjury.

The office of special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox had no comment on the matter.

Sources said nearly all of the charges that might be issued by the grand jury would involve the effort to thwart the investigation of the June 17, 1972 break-in at Democratic National Committee headquarters.

Cox has argued in court that the tapes of nine Watergate-related presidential conversations are important evidence in determining the extent of the cover-up, particularly whether the President was involved, and whether some witnesses lied to the grand jury and the Senate Watergate committee.

Several prominent former Nixon administration officials and campaign aides have been identified as targets of the investigation. They include former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell, former White House aides H. R. Haldeman, John D. Ehrlichman and John W. Dean III and former Assistant Atty. Gen. Robert C. Mardian.

In addition, Herbert W. Kalmbach, one-time personal attorney to President Nixon, told the Watergate committee he raised funds which were used to attempt to buy the silence of the seven defendants in the original Watergate burglary case.

Kalmbach told the committee he at first believed the fund raising was a legitimate attempt to pay living and legal expenses of the defendants.

Two former Nixon campaign officials, Jeb Stuart Magruder and Frederick C. LaRue, have pleaded guilty to a single charge each of conspiring to obstruct justice and have agreed to cooperate with the prosecutors.

Sources said the obstruction of justice charges would be based on the following acts:

—The effort to limit the investigation on the grounds it would compromise covert activities of the Central Intelligence Agency.

—A series of meetings at which Magruder and others worked out false stories to tell the FBI, the grand jury and the first Watergate trial.

—A meeting two nights after the break-in at which it was decided to destroy campaign committee files which could link officials to the break-in and wire-tapping.

All The Newlyweds Can Do Is Shout

By STRAT DOUTHAT
Associated Press Writer

HUNTINGTON, W. Va (AP)- Leon and Paula Drummer are young newlyweds, but all they ever do is shout at each other.

The problem is one of distance rather than temperament. Leon is a prisoner at the Cabell County Jail and has been ever since he and his wife were married Aug. 16 in a behind-bars ceremony.

Ever morning since then, Paula, 21, has made the six-block walk from her apartment to the jail, showing up at 9:30 sharp. She usually brings a pack of cigarettes for herself and money for Leon's pack.

After taking the money inside and giving it to the jailer, she comes back out and stands looking up at Leon's third-floor cell window. Then the dialogue begins.

"Hey Sonnnnnn," she yells if she's in a happy mood. If not, it's "Hey Leeeeeeeeeon."

"Sometimes he answers me and sometimes not," she says with a winsome smile. "I never know how much we'll get to talk, or if we'll get to talk at all. Sometimes the deputies come out and chase me away. If they let me, I usually stay until after dark, except to go home for something to eat or have a job interview."

Leon's visiting hours are from 1 p.m. to 3 p.m. on Wednesday afternoons, but even then he and Paula are separated by a glass panel and must talk through a microphone.

"You still have to yell," she says. "It's so noisy in the visitors' room with those other wives and girlfriends all talking at once."

Paula says about five other women come regularly to the jail and stand out in the parking lot, shouting up at their men and hoping to glimpse them through the barred windows.

Although some nearby residents complain, the county has a good hearted sheriff who winks at the situation as long as the women stay reasonably quiet and don't try to slip anything through the wire fence surrounding the jail.

About The Process: Reconciling Opposites

By BRIAN COOK

Many religious groups visit the UMass campus every year. Most of us tend to dismiss the friendly advances of the people involved in these groups with a curt "I'm in a hurry," "I'm too busy," etc., but an occasional attentive ear often reveals some very interesting people and ideas. In a world which is becoming increasingly impersonal, many have sought and found alternatives which provide meaning to themselves and others.

If your travels on campus last week took you near the campus pond, you might possibly have encountered two cheerful young women in blue distributing literature and seeking donations. They are members of a religious order known as The Process. This order is dedicated to helping those disadvantaged who are unable to help themselves and following the teachings of Christ as a means of resolving all conflicts within ourselves and the world as a whole. The latter purpose stems from the belief of all Processeans in the unity of Christ and Satan as a reconciliation of opposites on the highest level and something which must be achieved here on earth through the power of love and giving.

Sister Olivia, a full fledged minister of the Process Church, and Sister Hannah, a disciple, found purpose in their lives through this organization and are only two of approximately one half million followers from all walks of life throughout the United States and Canada. Hannah and the Boston chapter of Process in general, devotes much time to working with mentally retarded children at the Fernald School in Waltham while Olivia is a member of the Rock of Ages band which performs many benefit concerts for the underprivileged.

The Process Church has established many free stores and kitchens for the poor and hungry in addition to performing much volunteer work in hospitals, prisons, etc. It is financially supported through donations received for the literature it distributes and funds contributed by followers and believers in the work they do.

The Issue In Equal Rights Act

Coed Bathrooms

By PHYLLIS AUSTIN
Associated Press Writer

AUGUSTA, Me. - A representative for the National Organization for Women said Sunday "the eyes of the nation will be on Maine and Montana in 1974" as both state legislatures consider the controversial Equal Rights Amendment for the second time.

Elizabeth Cox, who runs NOW's legislative office, said that ERA supporters nationwide will be helping organizations to the two states to get the federal constitutional amendment ratified.

The ERA, which guarantees women equal treatment with men under the law, was defeated by one vote in the Maine Senate and failed passage in the Montana Senate on 13 tie votes.

Ms. Cox told a meeting of some 60 men and women ERA proponents that "the first 197 years of women's rights for equality have been the hardest."

"We demand our rights by the 200th birthday of our nation in 1976. And that doesn't seem to be irrational," she said.

Representatives of various citizens and women's organizations favoring the ERA met all day to discuss lobbying techniques in preparation for the January special session of the legislature. The conference was sponsored by the Maine chapter of NOW.

Four state lawmakers showed up-Sen. Bennett H. Katz, R-Augusta, an announced 1974 gubernatorial candidate: Rep. John O' Brian, D-Portland; Rep. Nancy Clark, D-Freeport; and Rep. Kathleen Watson Goodwin, D-Bath.

Also on hand was Jadine O'Brien of Portland, who plans to run for the 1st district congressional post or for governor.

Katz, a strong ERA supporter, told the group: "Knock'em dead next time and find ways to change over the ones who voted wrong last time."

Judy Pickering, who was ERA coordinator for Connecticut and is on NOW's governing board, said the most important resource involved in the right "is an educated lobbying group" who are knowledgable on the issues pertainent to Maine.

She said it's important to bring to the attention of legislators that federal and state action on a variety of matters in recent months have defused several areas of contention that the opposition used to defeat the ERA.

One such issue is the question of seperate bathrooms, Ms. Pickering said. Some lawmakers feared that passage of the ERA would mean the institution of co-ed bathrooms.

Rep. Goodwin pointed out that when the legislature passed the anti-sex discrimination amendment to the Human Rights Act, it provided for co-ed bathrooms in public accommodations.

She said ERA legislative opponents who felt "repentent" about killing the amendment failed to notice that provision in the law.

Ms. Pickering emphasized that lobbyists "should create an atmosphere that will allow legislators who voted initially against the ERA to change their minds based on new information."

Yale's New Provost

Dean Gray's Homecoming

NEW HAVEN (AP) - For Dean Hanna Holborn Gray, becoming Yale's provost next July will be a homecoming.

The 42-year-old daughter of a Yale professor spent her early years of education in and around New Haven. In the last seven years she has sat on the university's board of trustees.

But next summer, when she quits as dean at Northwestern University, she'll be entering a new world at Yale, that of an administrator.

The history professor will become one of the highest ranking female administrators in the Ivy League, a former all male bastion.

Yale began admitting women students in 1971.

"In the case of my career, I've been used to being in the contest that has been predominately male, since I have taught at universities with mostly men," she said.

Although not a member of any feminist groups, Dean Gray has served on academic committees investigating the status of women.

Dean Gray said she was attracted to Yale because it has an ongoing plan to ensure equal employment opportunities.

As provost, she said she will be involved in Yale's efforts to hire more women and members of minority groups on the university's professional staff.

The goal goes "hand in hand with hiring qualified individuals," Dean Gray said.

And she said she is encouraged by Yale's attitude toward women.

Watergate Coverage

WASHINGTON (AP)- The Public Broadcasting Service announced Sunday that it would continue complete coverage in prime television time of the Senate Watergate hearings.

PBS, along with the National Public Affairs Center for Television, said the unabridged coverage would continue until the hearings end.

The hearings are expected to resume Sept. 24 and continue three days a week until around the beginning of November.

PBS said the videotaped programs, distributed at 8 p.m. Eastern time, would be sent to 239 public television stations across the country.

Moynihan Rejects State Dept. Offer

NEW DELHI, India (AP)- Ambassador Daniel P. Moynihan has turned down an offer to become a top assistant to Secretary of State-designate Henry Kissinger, authoritative American sources said here on Sunday.

They said Moynihan, now in Washington for consultations with Kissinger, declined because he prefers to remain as U.S. envoy to India to work for improved relations between New Delhi and Washington.

Moynihan cabled and telephoned his wife in New Delhi this weekend and advised her to disregard reports that he might accept a high State Department post, the informants said.

"He told his wife not to start packing," one embassy source said. "He's going to return to New Delhi and continue as ambassador."

The sources declined to specify which post Moynihan, 46, had been offered.

Another senior American diplomat said he thought Moynihan's primary consideration was a desire to remain at his New Delhi Post until there is a distinct, substantive improvement in relations between India and the United States.

Indian and American observers acknowledge that since his arrival six months ago Moynihan has helped generate an improved atmosphere.

Strikers Cause Cutbacks

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP)- The Providence Journal Co. announced plans Sunday to publish a single daily paper as a strike by the Providence Newspaper Guild continued with no end in sight.

John C.A. Watkins, president and publisher of the Journal Co., said the single edition would be available in the morning at newstands and delivered in the afternoon to all Evening Bulletin Subscribers.

The company usually publishes the morning Journal, the Evening Bulletin and the Sunday Journal.

R. Barrie Schmitt, personnel manager for labor relations, said the two sides in the dispute have not met since May 21 when negotiations broke down after 34 meetings.

Senator Foresees Fuel Oil Rationing

ACTON, Maine (AP)- Sen. William D. Hathaway, D-Maine, said Sunday he thinks immediate implementation of a mandatory fuel allocation program is the only way to relieve the heating oil crisis.

"There are no sound reasons to stick to a voluntary allocation program which has proven to be ineffective and is generally discredited," he said.

In remarks prepared for a York County Democratic Field Day, Hathaway said a congressional survey of oil companies along the East Coast showed that the majors have 14 per cent more heating oil than a year age, while independents have 50 per cent less.

"It may be a hardship to live without meat," said Hathaway, "but it is impossible to live without heat. "I am hopeful that the President will acknowledge the critical needs of the people, particularly in the Northeast, and correct this imbalance in the distribution of our fuel oil supplies.

How much wood would a woodchuck chuck if a woodchuck could chuck wood?

"How much wood would a woodchuck chuck if a woodchuck could chuck wood?" This limerick baffled my most persistent attempts of comprehension. After beating my head against the wall an indefinite number of times and spending many hours in the lotus position contemplating it, I could not as yet unravel its mystical meaning. Even the School of Education's helpful handout How To Unravel Hard Riddles For Three Credits did not help. I was frustrated, dejected and inebriated with the liquor of defeat. Priding myself as a first-class UMie, I would not tolerate this kind of pessimistic outlook and I decided to set out for help.

I sought out my friend and benefactor Lenny Davis who is a follower of the 15-year-old perfect master Guru Mahara Ji.

"Lenny," I said, "I've got a problem."

"You have come to the right place. The Guru can set you free with true and blissful knowledge!" he chanted.

"My problem is not a simple one. Its answer cannot be found in the secular scientific world. I have searched the University community for it. It cannot be found in our great new Twenty eight story Library Erection. There is no modular course in woodchucking in the School of Ed for some strange reason. There is no RSO group in woodchucking. There are no minimum quotas for woodchucks in the Student Senate, although woodchucks are a decided minority and are very oppressed. Why 10 per cent of the Senate should be woodchucks. They get badgered, thrown into holes, forced to knaw on wood. They deserve some rights!!."

By this time I was in a sweat over woodchuck rights but I quickly grabbed hold of myself and calmed down. "And so you see Lenny, I plodded on, this is why I felt desperate and came to you."

"That you should be desperate to come to me is a sad but inevitablly true comment on the search for truth. For you see those who seek for truth go first to the wrong places and defer until the last possible moment, or forever perhaps, the true fountain of truth. For you see Guru Mahara Ji will reveal to you the practical knowledge of truth. He will show you the true bliss in truth, the spiritual Nirvana that one may achieve in the pusuance of his truth. I attended rallies to stop the War in Vietnam. I poured all my energies into stopping these senseless killings. I organized, marched, picketed, yelled at pigs. And for what? All I got was Dick Nixon. I threw in the towel and found at last true meaaing with Guru Mahara Ji. You see, anyone can find peace the way I did with the Perfect Master. And if they don't it is truly their fault. Until the IndoChinese accept the Guru Mahara Ji, there will be no peace there.

"But to get to your problem. The mystery of woodchucks has plagued the curious instinct of man for centuries. The amount of wood a woodchuck could chuck if his interests were so motivated is a universal constant only realized in the Fifth State of True Bliss, in the natural order of perfection, according the Guru. The Guru has said "The Woodchuck is like the Primieval Pancake" and "The art of total Woodchucking is known bu to those few who experience it. From these brilliant flashes of truth we can percieve the answer according to the perfect master's divine interpretation. The first verse deals with the cosmic vitality inherent in any rational and metaphysical detailing of woodchucks. It ties into the second verse with regards to the total entrophy of balanced logistics, meaning burrowing into a field of mud whilst spread eagled in a flat prone position, keeping ones face toward the center of divine knowledge is the only way to completely ascertain the truth which should now be obvious to you."

I was still confused, and still in a sweat.

"No, I'm sorry Lenny. I'm still in the dark. Could you be a little more concrete?" I weakly asked.

"Concrete is the work of the devil!" Lenny quickly retorted. "You will still remain confused until you are truly ready to surrender all and accept the truth.!"

"I am! I am!!" I begged. "Give me the Truth!! Please!!"

"Very well!! The amount of wood a woodchuck would chuck given the disposition to attempt it, is exactly equivalent in Nirvana units-RCU's (Raised Consciousness Units), to the number of pickled peppers in that infamous peck that Peter Piper had the misfortune to pick!"

"AAHH!!!!!!" I nodded assentingly. "So it is. so it is!"

Eat, drink and be nauseous!

By FREDERIC C. WEISS

There's nothing wrong with cold cuts now and then, or even meatloaf; but when meatloafs are cold cuts something's wrong. To make things worse such a food combination was originally advertised as Salisbury Steak on the menu for Wednesday Dinner at the Hampshire Commons.

Many of you probably agree that the quality of the food in the various dining halls leaves much to the imagination, and even more still to be desired. To say that the food services here are particularly lacking in the field of culinary delight would be an understatement. It would appear that some high officials in food services own stock in potatoes, macaroni, and other assorted starch companies by the way that they push it on their student patrons.

Not all of the problems concerning choice of food served can be blamed on food service officials. They are working under the difficult circumstances of rising food costs and a set yearly budget; and it is true that they have tried to do the job without raising dining contracts. One of their solutions to this problem of rising prices can be seen in their proposed "Student Referendum" to take place on September 19. The students will have a chance to choose between two proposed food policies: one main course with seconds, or a choice of several main courses and no seconds.

However, the problem goes much deeper than the food that waits ready in your stomach to battle to the end with your various digestive systems. The situation is more complex than simply a basic decision of cutting back on seconds or variety.

While the inflationary prices put much pressure on officials trying to run food services, not all the dining problems can be kissed off on the inflation issue. The type of food served should not affect whether it is hot or cold, fresh or stale. After all, there is a difference between economy and absurdity!

Some of the problems are results of poor planning, both in the present situation and the past misjudgements. Perhaps it would be too expensive to re-model the food lines. At Hampshire Commons lines lead to a square of confusion that serves as a utility area (serving tea, coffee, milk and soda). This utility "square" resembles a battleground rather than an area where students can pick up some of the various beverages served. Students in the square usually find it an adventure in itself to get milk, soda, or coffee while trying to dodge other students moving back and forth aggressivly with the same idea in mind. By the time they put their trays down to eat, it's anti-climactic; they're all worn out!

Nevertheless, there are some areas of "official dining policy" (as one food services biggie referred to existing realities) that can, and should be changed. One of these changes should affect the closing times of the dining halls. The policy of food services in this area is particularly deceptive.

Officials at Hampshire Commons say that dinner goes on till 6:30! Right? Well, not really! It would make sense that if dinner went on till that time, a student coming in at . . . let's say 6:15 could eat at leisure; go up and get some coffee or tea; go up for seconds or thirds at his or her leisure (rather than have seconds dumped on their plates the first time around). Some other colleges have adopted this policy, making dinner a Textbook Prices: Where Will It End?

To The Editor:

Must the students of the University of Massachusetts continue to undergo the blatant exploitations placed on them by the Textbook Annex.

Only recently I went down to the Annex to purchase a Spanish Grammar book for my Spanish 130 class. When I arrived there to my dismay there were no books left. So in dire need of a textbook I went to a local bookstore in Worcester to purchase this book. I was willing to pay the higher price from this private bookstore for the text. Upon purchasing the book I noted that the price came to $1.65. When I arrived back at the University I came upon the same textbook which I had purchased in Worcester. However: the price at which our own University annex was charging was $2.25.

Some questions and thoughts soon came into my head. How is it that a small book store can stay in business selling books at such a low price? How could a large university, who has better access to these books sell them at such a higher price then the local bookstore?

I always thought that a university could sell books at a cheaper price to the students since they were buying in quantity (as opposed to a bookstore who only had a few copies in its possession).

This is not just one isolated case. There is another case of a UMass student who was unable to purchase a book here at the annex. So she took a ride over to a neighboring school (Holyoke C.C.) where she purchased the book in need at a price of four dollars less than what our annex wanted for the same textbook.

What it all comes down to is that the University again is ripping off the students here at UMass. They are squeezing the last few dollars that they can out of us. And since they tell us that the annex does not realize a profit, could it be true that the facts may be strained when it comes to our food bill, or to our raising rents, or the parking fees. Are they in fact trying to realize excessive profits in these areas by creating various crises of one or another.

How much can the UMass student take before he strikes back. Maybe a return to the late 60's will re-open the eyes of the University officials.

Waiting To Get A Drink

To The Editor:

With the added bar on campus, one might think it easy to sit down and enjoy a few drinks on a Friday or Saturday night. It's obvious that such is not the case however, as evidenced by the long lines of frustrated people waiting to get into the Blue Wall or the Hatch and then waiting again to get a drink after fighting one's way through the swarms of people inside. After one does manage to get a drink, the chances of getting it back to wherever he or she was standing (forget the prospect of a seat!) are slim indeed.

Upon talking with several people in the Hatch this past week-end, I found I was not alone in my feelings. If the UMass Board of Governors is truly interested in seeing that UMass students get good use of the services and facilities which they pay for dearly as part of their fee bills, then perhaps they will take better note of this situation. A simple enough solution might be to require that all campus bar patrons present a UMass college I.D. at the door on week-end nights and holiday eves when it seems to be most crowded. In addition, each university member should be allowed to bring in a limited number of guests on his I.D. provided they are of drinking age. Even this solution may not be enough to relieve the overcrowding which now exist, but at least it's a start in the right direction.

A Valuable Experience

To The Editor:

Many people of Western Massachusetts suffer from poverty, rejection, inadequate education, mental retardation and mental illness. There are many agencies that are dedicated to helping disadvantaged people cope with their everyday problems. Most of these agencies are supported by government funds, and unfortunately, one of the by-products of government funding is usually a shortage of staff. Too often an efficient job cannot be done because of the lack of manpower, and in the end it is the person who needs the help that is denied. One method that is frequently used to remedy the staff shortage problem is to utilize the efforts of volunteers.

University Year for Action is an excellent program that places students in community agencies that service the disadvantaged of Western Massachusetts. By sending students into these agencies UYA is increasing the staff, thereby making it possible to service more people, more efficiently.

We are UYA students working with emotionally disturbed adults at Northampton State Hospital. While working a full time job as UYA volunteers we are receiving thirty credits for our field experience and a stipend of two hundred and ten dollars a month to cover our living expenses. More important than the fringe benefits of being a UYA volunteer is the valuable new learning experience of working with the disadvantaged. So, if your looking for an alternative to the classroom, and you are into helping people, look up University Year for Action. Maybe they can help.

What you put into your stomach is more important than where you put your car time to relax, talk to friends, in short, a nice place to be. At this time, the Div. of Food Services at UMass has not.

At 6:30 the food is taken away from the serving bays, and even tea bags are removed from the service area and the coffee shut off. As one of the workers at Hampshire said to one irrate student, "That's toooo bad, you should have come earlier."

Students will come to dinner earlier, indicating that such a policy not only shows lack of concern for the students but also lack of intelligence by the officials in charge. These officials don't realize it, but eventually most students with any sense will compensate for this "rush" treatment by coming to dinner earlier . . . let's say 5:30, creating a mob scene at the peak eating hour at Hampshire. While officials rationalize this policy by pointing out that Berkshire Commons is open till 7:00, they ignore the fact that Berkshire doesn't have a "Basic (for lack of a better word) Food Line!"

This isn't the only case of faulty logic used by representatives of food services. When one student asked one of the women working why there was no hot chocolate, he was told "It's out of season.". When he pointed out that coffee and tea were also hot, she responded "People like coffee and tea all the time." Hot Chocolate out of season?? Unbelievable . . . but maybe it makes as much sense as the rest of the food policy around here.

I've heard that there are student committees working on the various problems concerning food services; but why haven't we heard anything about them? I know that there are other problems, most notably the parking problem. However it seems logical to conclude that what you put into your stomach is more important than where you put your car!!!

Students should get together and form an active committee to try and solve this dining dilemma. The referendum on Sept. 19 is not a final sollution; rather a temporary move towards solving a problem. The choices offered on the referendum preclude the possibility of a better policy alternative offered by groups of students. Get together with your dorm sections before then and think out alternatives. Talk to other sections; even meet with other dorms. When you fill out your referendum, state your alternate plan en masse. Make your opinions known. Form or join (if already existing) student committees to improve the Commons. It's too easy to just sit back and blame dining officials and workers for all the problems. Don't wait for any wunderkind to drop from the sky with any secret panacea. To state all of my feelings and ideas on how to improve all the problems would take too long, and might not be representative of the student body. Students must take a greater active interest in the situation; officials should also be open to student ideas and take them seriously.

Perhaps one of the women working in the commons summed it up best when she said, "Don't you think that we feel ashamed serving you this garbage every day?". When the other side agrees with you like that you know something's wrong. Workers and students unite - or your stomachs and your patience will pay for your apathy for the rest of the year.

Federal Justice Commission Reports

Grand Jury System Reviewed

By MARGARET GENTRY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-A federal criminal justice commission says that a grand jury indictment should no longer be required for any criminal prosecution.

A grand jury should be retained as a part of the judicial system only to investigate cases of broad public concern, such as political corruption, said the National Advisory Commission on Criminal Justice Standards and Goals.

In a 358-page report, the commission recommended a broad range of reforms in the court system. Most were designed to speed trials.

The report was prepared by a 15-member task force headed by Daniel J. Meader, a law professor at the University of Virginia. It concluded a two-year study covering all aspects of state and local criminal justice systems. It was not authorized to study the federal system.

The commission said grand juries, which originated in England in the 12th century, have outlived their usefulness and served only to delay prosecutions.

"The presentation of evidence is under prosecutorial control and the grand jury merely agrees to the actions of the prosecutor," the commission asserted.

The commission said, however, that "in some circumstances, especially in areas of widespread public concern, it would be desirable to have grand jury participation in the investigatory functions."

Among other proposals, the commission said that most convicted defendants should be allowed only one appeal to a higher court. It said present appellate courts should be renamed or restructured as reviewing courts and should address all issues of a challenged conviction.

The recommendation provided that only in extraordinary cases subject to the approval of the reviewing court could the defendant pursue a second appeal of his conviction.

Among other proposals, the commission recommended that:

—Judges should be appointed on the basis of their legal ability rather than elected because of their campaign talents.

—Juries in all criminal cases except for capital offenses should be reduced from the 12-member panel now most widely used, but should have at least six members.

—Plea bargaining, the practice of the defendant pleading guilty in exchange for reduced punishment, should be abolished.

The commission said the practice encourages innocent defendants to plead guilty rather than languishing in jail while awaiting trial and it also guarantees that some of the guilty will escape adequate punishment.

Tentative Accord Reached In Providence School Strike

PROVIDENCE (AP)-A tentative agreement was hammered out Sunday by negotiators seeking accord in the strike by Providence public school teachers that has kept the city's schools closed this fall.

Teachers were expected to consider the proposal Monday.

Vincent J. Piccirilli, legal advisor and negotiator for the Providence School Committee, said Sunday that he and Joseph A. Grande, chief negotiator for the Providence Teacher Union, had signed the tentative agreement.

He held out the possibility that favorable action on-the-agreement by the teachers would bring the city's 23,000 students back to classes quickly.

A spokesman for Dr. Charles M. Bernardo, Providence school superintendent announced that should the teachers ratify the contract, students will report for classes on Tuesday at the regular time.

No details were available on the terms of the tentative agreement.

Piccirilli said that full details would be released if the teachers ratify the agreement.

Piccirilli's announcement came as a surprise. Negotiations with Providence teachers appeared to be deadlocked and key issues in the dispute in addition to salaries, have been sick leaves and pay for substitute teachers.

Last Friday the Providence school committee directed Piccirilli to seek court action toward reopening the schools.

The committee's complaint, filed the same day sought a preliminary injunction and asked that the teachers union be permanently restrained from enjoined from the present and any future strikes.

Judge James C. Bulman in Superior Court set Thursday for a hearing on the school committee's complaint.

Meanwhile, North Providence schools are scheduled to reopen Monday. Teachers there voted unanimously on Saturday to return to their classrooms while contract differences are submitted to binding arbitration.

End To Rail Lines Costly

WASHINGTON (AP) - A seen-to-be-released study shows that abandonment of railroad lines in northeastern Massachusetts could cost the area over 77,000 jobs and $492 million in industrial production, according to Rep. Michael Harrington, D-Mass.

The study of the bankrupt Boston & Maine Railroad was performed by the Boston-based consulting firm of Harbridge House.

Legislation now pending before Congress would establish procedures whereby the Penn Central and other bankrupt Northeastern railroads, including the Boston & Maine could abandon money-losing branch lines in an effort to put the rails back on a profit-making basis.

According to Harrington, the so-called Shoup-Adams bill would allow marginal lines to be abandoned with no definite information on the impact it would have on local economies.

Harrington said he is sponsoring an amendment that would require an in-depth, computerized study of branch line closings.

Zoo Burglary

CHICAGO (AP)- A baby gorilla and a rare baby snow leopard, said to be valued at $10,000, were stolen from the Lincoln Park Zoo Sunday.

The nine-month-old gorilla, recently underwent brain surgery and needs medication, police said.

A zoo spokesman said the snow leopard, a four-month-old female is one of less than 200 such animals in captivity in the world. But he added the Leopard's monetary value only applies "to the legitimate market. Whoever took it will have a hard time trying to sell it to a zoo."

DO YOU GIVE A DAMN?

Don't you ever feel that you just have to reach out and lend a hand to people? Well. the opportunity is here. Northampton Volunteers are looking for people who still give a damn. Every Thursday night Northampton Volunteers run a bus from UMass to Northampton State Hospital. Volunteers visit patients for two hours. They play cards and games, but most important they offer friendship.

The bus leaves from Hasbrouck at 6:30 and also stops in front of Patterson House (on the Sunset Ave. side) at 6:35. We return from Northampton around 9:30. The first trip and orientation will be Sept. 20. All are welcome. Feel free to call Debbie - 52510 (room 403) or Joan - 62500 if you have any question.

Instead of forgetting them, help them forget loneliness.

AN ECOLOGICAL ALTERNATIVE

Many people feel there is a need for change, but have found protesting, petitions and talk, useless and frustrating, leaving the problems to stagnate. There is a positive alternative-working through the system in order to change it. This is what Western Mass. Public Interest Research Group is doing. WMPIRG is a group of people taking on projects to preserve the ecology, inform the public on their rights such as small claims courts, and checks into fair business practices.

If you would like to work with us on some of the projects we have planned for this year, or maybe work on one you already have in mind, or just have questions concerning our organization, stop by at the WMPIRG office, 2nd floor of the Student Union, Tuesday, September 18, at 7:30 p.m.

"A QUESTION OF TORTURE"

Tonight at 7:30 in Field Main Lounge on Orchard Hill, a film will be shown entitled, "A Question of Torture," which highlights the present plight of political prisoners in South Vietnamese jails. A discussion after the film will focus on building opposition to further American Aid to the Saigon government.

STATE DEPARTMENT OFFERS INTERNSHIPS

Ten internships have been made available by the Department of State in Washington, D.C. to students interested in the governmental foreign affairs process through the OUTREACH Program here at UMass.

A participant spends approximately three months working in her/his area of interest under the close supervision of a Department officer. He/she is able to meet with officers in various bureaus and offices of the Department, and also, depending on her/his duties, with officials in related agencies such as AID, the Peace Corps, ACDA, and USIA. Participants are not paid for their work but are given academic credit by their respective departments.

Candidates should be third or fourth-year undergraduates or graduate students and must be U.S. citizens. Internships are usually scheduled to run concurrent with semesters and summer terms in October, January, April and July.

Because selection and security procedures are lengthy, students are advised to contact the OUTREACH Program office at 318 Arnold (tel. no. 545-2021) IMMEDIATELY!

WMUA

Tonight at 10 p.m., WMUA (UMass radio, 91.1 FM) will air a discussion with at-large candidates for the Northampton School Committee in tomorrow's primary election.

The program is being presented as a special feature of "Focus," WMUA's weekly public affairs series moderated by Kenneth Mosakowski.

Mosakowski's guests for the live, 60-minute forum will be incumbent School Committee members Raymond Kelly and Joseph Natale, and challengers Henry Bubar and Jonathan Roche. All are running as Democrats for the city's two at-large seats on the School Committee in tomorrow's primary. There are no Republican challengers for these positions, so the two top vote-getters in the primary will probably be unopposed in the November general election.

Tonight's program will also offer a run-down on other races in the Northampton primary tomorrow.

Listeners are invited to call in questions during the live broadcast.

RATE To Study Racial Attitudes On Campus

A research project called RATE will study racial attitudes in all student residence areas at UMass this year for data to guide future action on racial problems.

During the summer Dr. Bob Daniels, staff associate in the UMass Office of Community Development and Human Relations, desgined the massive research project. "RATE" is an acronym for "Racism: Awareness, Tolerance, and Evaluation."

The project's main objective is to provide a concrete data base for assessment of the living-learning environments of the five UMass residential areas. Since its inception it has received enthusiastic reception from the area directors and other residential area personnel, Dr. Daniels said.

Project RATE will involve a sample population of three to five thousand residents and residence hall personnel from the following dormitories: Butterfield, Van Meter South, Wheeler, Dwight, Johnson, Lewis, Lyon, Thatcher, Dickinson, Field, Grayson, Webster, Emerson, James, MacKimmie, Pierpont, Adams, Brown, Cashin, and McNamara. The period from Sept. 17 thru Oct. 19 will be devoted to data gathering.

The instrument that will be utilized in Project RATE is the Daniels Test of Inter-racial Apperception and Ideology (DTIAI) which was developed by Dr. Daniels as the nucleus of his doctoral dissertation. The DTIAI is a cultural-fair assessment which assists Americans of different racial backgrounds to get in touch with their cognition and tolerance of each other. It consists of three equally important sections--a cognitive scale which measures factual knowledge in white and non-white contributions to American history; a vsual literacy scale which measures recognition of white and non-white personality photographs; and a tolerance scale which measures open-mindedness on contemporary social issues.

Based on the findings and conclusions drawn from Project RATE, the student affairs staff will be in a far better position to take a more pro-active stance in dealing with racial problems, according to Dr. Daniels. He is developing a teaching component of Project RATE which will be a part of the residential colleges' colloquia. A formal research report will be presented to the University community in the spring.

Specifically, the project will provide answers to such questions as:

--are residents of a desegregated dormitory more openminded that residents of segregated dormitories?

--is the level of racial awareness higher among non-white residents than it is among white residents?

--do residential areas which employ dormitory counselors enjoy a higher level of racial understanding than those residential areas which do not?

--is there any significant difference between the level of racial understanding between the residential staff personnel and the residents themselves?

are new students at UMass more openminded than students who have studied here before?

--are residents of coed dormitories more open-minded on contemporary social issues which evolve around racism and sexism than residents who live in racially segregated dormitories?

For And About Women

Project SELF

Registration for this fall's series of Project Self Workshops by, for and about women in Tuesday and Wednesday, Sept. 18 and 19, at Everywoman's Center at the University of Massachusetts.

The new series of Project Self workshops will begin Sept. 24 and run through Nov. 16. Sponsored by Everywoman's Center at UMass, the workshops continue out of the request of many area women for a place and time to explore new directions, make new friends and learn new skills in a supportive atmosphere.

Each eight - and four-week workshop meets once a week for two hours. The cost per workshop is small and special rate is provided for women receiving welfare. Information on Project Self can be obtained from Everywoman's Center, Munson Hall, 545-0883.

As Everywoman's Center's second year begins, the number of workshops being offered and the number of women participating in Project Self has more than doubled. The wide variety of workshops covering areas important to women's lives and exploring these in a supportive group of women are two important aspects which account for its success.

This fall workshops will be offered in creativity, skills for living, cultural identity and living alternatives. Catalogs describing the 31 offerings can be obtained by calling the center or stopping by Munson Hall at the University. Everywoman's Center is open Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Have Your Rights Been Violated?

The Hampshire County Commissioners and District Attorney John M. Callahan announce the creation of a Hampshire County Consumer Protection Agency which will deal with problems of consumer rights, and fraud against consumers. The agency will operate out of the District Attorney's Office and will be under the direction of Joan Weston of Amherst, who has conducted a study for the District Attorney on the need felt in the community for such an agency.

The Consumer Protection Agency is offered as a community service in response to the information resulting from this study. A tally of calls received by the District Attorney's Office in recent months and a survey of various community, women's, and business groups and social agencies in both Hampshire and Franklin Counties show not so much a pattern of complaints as a widespread need for advice and referral as to individual rights and obligations and in some cases legal protection. The County Commissioners and the District Attorney hope through this agency to protect the rights of consumers recognized by the Massachusetts Consumer Protection Act and related legislation, which has been characterized as the most comprehensive and progressive in the nation, as well as to provide information and guidance to businesses with related problems.

Anyone with a question or problem in these or related areas is encouraged to call Joan Weston at the District Attorney's Office, telephone 586-0992.

N.L. East Stays Closer Than Ever

By DAVE EIBEL

The National League East, with two weeks left in the season has four teams still all bunched together within two and one-half games of each other. This week the four top teams will square off, so by the weekend things ought to be a little clearer in this most-muddled of divisions in baseball.

In weekend action, the Pirates took two of three from the Cardinals as did the Mets versus the Chicago Cubs. The Montreal Expos, winners of thirteen out of their last seventeen, swept three from the division's tail-enders, the Philadelphia Phillies.

Yesterday, the St. Louis Cardinals moved to within two games of the top by clobbering the Pirates 7-3 in St. Louis. Richie Hebner's twenty-second homerun of the year had tied the score in the top of the seventh, only to have the Cards' Tom Agee clinch it in the bottom of the same inning with his tenth poke of the year. Three more Cardinal runs in the eighth were icing on the cake.

In New York's Shea Stadium, the Mets squeezed in a run in the eighth inning to edge the Chicago Cubs 4-3. Ron Santo hit a two run second-inning homer to tie the game 2-2, but it wasn't enough as the Mets won their seventh of last ten.

After a crowd of over 34,000 had seen the Expos pull out a tenth-inning 5-4 win over the Phillies on Saturday, 18,000 Montrealers were treated to a comeback 4-2 victory on Sunday. The Expos trailed Jim Lonborg 2-1 going into the eighth but three Philadelphia errors opened the gates for three Expo runs and a key victory. Lonborg gave up only three hits in the entire game but four Phillie miscues did him in.

In this week's action, the Phillies play three against the Cubs in Chicago, with the Cubbies still having a slight chance to sneak into first. The big series have Montreal welcoming the Cardinals into Parc Jarry for a Monday twi-night twin-bill and a single game Tuesday, and the Mets and the Pirates squaring off twice in Pittsburgh, and three times in New York, all in the same week. With the Pirates holding a one-half game margin over Montreal, two games over the Mets and two and one-half games over the New Yorkers, things could and should be very interesting in the National East come this weekend.

NFL Kickoff 1973

Giants 34-14

NEW YORK (AP)- The New York secondary all but decimated Dan Pasterini's passing attack with four interceptions in the first half and Ron Johnson scored two touch-downs, leading the Giants to a 34-14 victory over the Houston Oilers Sunday.

So thoroughly did the Giants dominate most of the game, the National Football League opener for both teams, that only their final margin of victory was in doubt by the half, by which time they had blown out to a 27-0 lead on the strength of interceptions by Pete Athas, Carl Lockhart, Henry Reed and Richmond Flowers.

Steelers 24-10

PITTSBURGH (AP)- Terry Bradshaw snapped a second half tie with a 24-yard touch-down pass to John McMakin to give the Pittsburgh Steelers a 24-10 victory over the Detroit Lions Sunday in the National Football League opener for both teams.

McMakin, the Steelers' tight end, out muscled Lion- safety Jim Thrower in the end zone for the touchdown which broke a 10-10 tie 23 seconds into the final quarter.

The touchdown came after Detroit had rallied with 10 third-quarter points on an 84 yard touch-down pass from Greg Landry to Ron Jessie and a 40-yard field goal by Errol Mann.

Redskins 38-0

WASHINGTON (AP)--Safety Brig Owens and defensive end Vernon Biggs returned fumbles for touchdowns Sunday and Washington overwhelmed the San Diego Chargers 38-0 in the National Football League opener for both teams.

Owens also set up another touch-down with a jarring tackle of running back Mike Garrett and put the Redskins in position for a fourth period field goal with an interception of a John Unitas pass.

Larry Brown, the NFL's most valuable player in 1973, went around his left end for a one-yard touchdown late in the first period. Quarterback Bill Kilmer threw a 32-yard scoring pass to Charley Taylor in the third period and added a 12 yard touchdown toss to Frank Grant in the fourth.

Dolphins 21-13

MIAMI (AP)- Garo Yepremian kicked a 45-yard field goal, one of four in the game, in the fourth quarter Sunday to break a 13-13 tie and lead the struggling Miami Dolphins to a 21-13 National Football League season-opening victory over San Francisco.

The 49ers, who had led 13-6 entering the fourth quarter despite squandering three scoring opportunities, fell apart after Yepremian's kick.

Falcons 62-7

NEW ORLEANS (AP)- Dick Shiner threw three touch-down passes, two of them to wide receiver Ken Burrow, as the Atlanta Falcons demolished the New Orleans Saints 62-7 in a National Football Conference game Sunday.

It was an auspicous debut as a Falcon for Shiner, a 10-year veteran, who was picked up by Atlanta last season for the minimum $100 waiver price after he walked out of the New York Giants camp.

Vikings 24-16

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP)- Fran Tarkenton threw two touchdown passes and Bill Brown blasted into the end zone on a six-yard draw play as the Minnesota Vikings clawed out a 24-16 victory over the Oakland Raiders Sunday in the National Football League opener.

After letting a 10-0 first quarter lead slip away, the Vikings came back from a 16-10 deficit on a Tarkenton's nine-yard pass play to rookie Chuck Foreman late in the third quarter.

The veteran Brown, in when Foreman was shaken up, scored his clinching touchdown with 14:49 to play after Jeff Siemon recovered a fumble by Oakland's Marv Hubbard on the Raider 36.

Cowboys 20-17

CHICAGO (AP)- Ton. Fritsche's 11-yard field goal, following a Chicago Bears' fake punt that backfired, gave the Dallas Cowboys a 20-17 victory Sunday in a National Football Conference game.

The Bears who trailed 17-3 after an error-filled first half had rallid on a 59-punt return by Ike Hill and a 15-yard touch-down run by Carl Garrett to tie the score on the first play on the fourth quarter.

With four minutes left and fourth down and one on their own 29, the Bears snapped the ball to Bob Parsons, who lined up as a blocker behind the line of scrimmage.

Parsons, who had worked the play successfully in the first quarter, was dumped on the 27 by Billy Joe DuPree and the Cowboys took over.

Six running plays took the ball to the Bear four and Fritsch booted his field goal with 1:26 remaining.

Broncos 28-10

DENVER (AP)- Charlie Johnson directed Denver on sustained touchdown drives of 80, 72 and 80 yards in the first half and running back Floyd Little scored three times and the Broncos hung a 28-10 defeat on the Cincinnati Bengals in a National Football League opener Sunday.

The frustrated Bengals, who reached the end zone only once, threatened to score on three other occasions but came up empty-handed each time. Their only touchdown came with 1:20 left in the third quarter when Essex Johnson swept the left side, breaking three tackles on the 22-yard scoring run.

That brought the Bengals to within 11 points and momentum appeared to be in their favor, but the Broncos held on and Little scored from five yards out with 1:09 left in the game to ice the victory.

Rams 23-13

KANSAS CITY AP-John Hadl tossed two touchdown passes through Kansas City's collapsing defenses and Steve Preece pranced 11 yards on a field goal play as the Los Angeles Rams downed the Chiefs 23-13 in a National Football League regular season opener Sunday.

Only 62,315 spectators-16,031 shy of a sellout of 78,346-watched the game. Forecast of rain, a cloudy day and the opportunity to view the nationally televised contest locally kept the remainder at home.

The Rams struck with six seconds left in the first quarter, climaxing a 68-yard, 12-play drive with Hadl's two-yard playoff pitch to tight end Pat Curran.

Browns 24-14

CLEVELAND (AP)-The passing and running of quarter-back Mike Phipps led the Cleveland Browns to a 24-14 victory over the Baltimore Colts in the National Football League opener for the two teams Sunday afternoon.

The Browns scored in the first period of the American Conference game when Phipps threw the first of two touchdown passes to wide receiver Frank Pitts. The 26-yard pass play capped an 86-yard drive.

The Colts tied the score early in the second quarter when rookie quarterback Bert Jones tossed a 33-yard pass to wide receiver Cotton Speyrer. The Colts' 47-yard scoring drive was set up by Bruce Laird's 51-yard punt return.

Cardinals 34-23

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — "It makes all the difference in the world to be No. 1," said St. Louis Cardinals quarterback Jim Hart, who has been fighting off challenges for his job in the past few years.

The soft-spoken, unemotional Hart chose his words carefully after leading the Cardinals to a 34-23 victory over the Philadelphia Eagles Sunday in a National Football League opener.

"I wasn't about to panic as long as the scoreboard still had St. Louis ahead by a point," Hart said. "You just don't panic. We came back and didn't let up when we had to do it," Hart said.

The Eagles had pulled to within 24-23 with seven minutes remaining in the final quarter but could not hold the Cardinals.

UMass Nips Wildcats, 21-20

By BILL BALLOU

Football, a disgusting cliche goes, is a 60 minute game. But you couldn't prove it by anyone who has seen the first two UMass football games of the season.

Saturday at Alumni Stadium it was wait till the fourth quarter time again for the Minutemen, only this time the story had a happier ending; a 21-20 win over Villanova.

If anyone tried to turn this one into a Pat O'Brien movie, they'd be laughed out of Hollywood. The script was that absurd. It included a last minute touchdown drive quarterbacked by a junior with a long yawn's worth of varsity experience, a brother act on that drive with the elder scoring eight points, a punter as one of the game heroes, and game statistics which made it seem impossible for UMass to have won.

Daily Collegian
SPORTS

For those who didn't see it, and those who did and still don't believe it, here's what happened:

The Wildcats led UMass 17-13 after three periods in a game that had all the excitement and suspense of ice melting. On the last play of the quarter Peil Pennington was intercepted and on the same play Pennington sustained an injury in the neck area and had to leave the game. Back-up Fred Kelliher took over, but before he did Villanova's Dennis Griggs kicked his second field goal of the game to give the Cats a 20-13 lead.

The teams traded punts and UMass started their final drive on their own 28. They moved the ball well down to the Villanova 27, where things stalled. On a fourth and 15 situation Kelliher hit running back Bob Wolfe with a 22 yarder for a first and goal from the five. Two running plays produced no yardage. On third and goal Kelliher hit Bob's older brother Bill with a touchdown pass that made it 20-19. The Minutemen went for two points and a win and Kelliher, rolling right, hit Bill Wolfe again and that was the game.

If you like and respect figures, then the UMies really had no right winning this one. Villanova had 312 total yards to UMass' 191, and outrushed UMass 153 to 31.

What eventually did the Wildcats in was a strong UMass pass rush which dumped quarterback Bill Hatty several times in key spots, 79 yards in penalties incurred by the Cats, and the kicking of Andy Dutkanicz.

Dutkanicz averaged 44.8 yards for eight punts, including one pip of 65 yards, and kept Villanova in a constant hole with booming kickoffs.

Kickoffs were one area beside the scoreboard where UMass did a job on Villanova. The main reason was a 93 yard delight for a TD by Tim Berra to start the second half, which livened up the Minutemen and stopped any momentum the Wildcats might have had heading into the third period.

However, the UMass running game was, for the second week in a row, horrendous. It netted only 31 yards, and it's "leader", Bob Wolfe, had 24 yards in 19 carries.

And it was a good thing that Kelliher, who ended up at five-for-seven, with 72 yards and TD pass, was hot because Peil Pennington was colder than a certain part of a witches body. For the three periods he played he was only 8-23 for 88 yards. He did throw a TD pass to Tim Berra, but had three intercepted.

INCIDENTALLY: Berra, with two touchdowns, now has 26 points on the season. . . . .Pennington's thrown five interceptions in seven quarters. . . . . .UMass AD Frank McInerney was smiling after the game, saying "We tried to build interest by promising exciting football and you can't beat these last two weeks.". . . . .Villanova's Frank Polito didn't have any interceptions but proved to be almost impossible to bring down on punt returns. . . . . .Attendance was 12,100. . . . . .Next week's opponent, Maine, lost to Boston University.

O.J.'s 250 yds. Sets NFL Rushing Mark

FOXBORO, Mass.(AP)- O.J. Simpson, Buffalo's 1972 National Football League ground-gaining champion, ran for a record 250 yards as the Bills whipped the New England Patriots 31-13 in a season opener.

"It looked a track meet out there," New England Coach Chuck Fairbanks said after his formal pre-coaching debut. "We'd have a hole blocked up, but O.J.'s natural ability got him away from the hole.

"It looked like Grant going through Richmond. We were helpless and couldn't slow him down. Give Simpson's blocking a lot of credit. And we gave him a lot too."

"He had more yardage than Secretariate," said New England linebacker Edgar Chandler, who played with Simpson for four years in Buffalo before being traded this summer. He has that deceptive speed. You think you have the angle on him, then he's gone. It was embarassing."

Simpson, starting his 5th pre campaign after winning the Heisman Trophy at Southern California, broke the NFL record of 247 yards by Willie Ellison of the Los Angeles Rams two years ago against New Orleans.

"I didn't know until late in the game that he was nearing the record, Buffalo Coach Lou Saban said. "Then someone said he needed about 15 yards to break it. I was reluctant to put him back in because of the risk of injury.

So he gets 15 yards and they tell me he needs 15 more. I was really exasperated then, but I'm glad he got the record. You don't find many like him. He's a man, a great team man."

"Somebody said something about the record and we didn't know if we would get the ball back," Simpson said. "The guys kept yelling from the sidelines, 'get the ball back defense.' "

"I was tired, but when they said 15 more yards I went back in and they kept calling my number. I don't think anybody will ever criticize our line again. They were just blowing them out of there."

Moret Loses; Sox Bow, 5-1

BOSTON (AP)- Cleveland's Gaylord Perry pitched a four-hitter and Walt Williams hit a two-run homer to spoil Roger Moret's perfect record with a 5-1 victory over the Boston Red Sox Sunday.

Moret, 11-1, put himself in a hole right away when he walked Buddy Bell and gave up a home run to Williams, his sixth of the year, in the first inning.

The Indians scored two more insurance runs for Perry, 17-19, in the sixth on a two-run double by Frank Duffy. Another Cleveland run crossed in the eighth on a Boston error.

Perry, 17-19, lost his shutout on Bob Montgomery's seventh homer of the year in the seventh inning.

Pennington OK; Mondalto Out For Season

By MDC STAFF

Peil Pennington is in fine condition after suffering a facial injury in Saturday's game, but running back Jerry Mondalto has been lost for the season. Both were taken off the field in that 21-20 UMass victory over Villanova.

Pennington left the game at the end of the third quarter after being hit in the face with a helmet. He had a twisted neck and it was feared that he might suffer a whiplash if he continued to play.

Mondalto was helped off the field after the second play of the game. He was operated on yesterday for torn medial ligaments and cartiledge.

Welcome Back To Yan Con

In victory, one tends to forget the lighter side of the game story; the facets of the triumphant team's performance that didn't go as well as planned. The campus goes cuckoo, everybody celebrates after the game. It seems like all is well.

Yes, the gridders won. They beat the Villanova Wildcats 21-20 with some last minute heroics from Kelliher and company. . .but all is not well. . .not by a longshot.

As a matter of fact, the two opening UMass performances were alike in almost every fashion. The defensive line play was superb, the defensive secondary was vulnerable on both occasions, and the offense sputtered. In fact the only differing aspect in the two games was in their respective results; defeat vs. victory.

Every Monday morning quarterback knows Oh how important the running game is to the offense. Through its development, the aerial game opens up and the defense is kept on its toes, not being able to charge full blast up the pipe on every play like they have been doing. A successful running game usually lends itself to a successful offense. Voila, the offense is sputtering.

They said Paul Metallo's shoes could possibly be filled. But is now apparent that the Minutemen are no closer to finding a guy who can break it like Paul could, than the New England Patriots are to Super Sunday (or even winning one game for that matter.)

Don't they know that slow motion is for the television audience, not for the spectators at the stadium.

With the addition of this "new" running game (the lack thereof) the Minutemen have fallen into that status of just another Yankee Conference 17th out of 17 conferences team. They'll have to struggle they hope to get by the Vermonts and New Hampshire but they'll be no match for Boston College come November.

Can you believe the battering Peil Pennington has taken back there? He hasn't had the time to get back to the pocket (or some semblance thereof) nevertheless have time to look for his receivers. Yes, the quarterback is at the helm on the field, but he can't do it all. All Peil's had a chance to do is play hot potato, and it is that kind of a situation that make interceptions unavoidable.

It better be "back to the drawing board" for Coach MacPherson and his assistants; if not, the Minutemen will fall into the pit of mediocrity. Welcome back to the Yankee Conference, UMass.

Food Costs Less ...In Whitmore

By DAVE O'CONNELL

In a comparison of prices at various Campus Center and University Food Service outlets last Friday, it was found that prices in CC outlets were 5% to 20% higher on many items. Prices on most items from coffee to full meals at the Hatch and CC coffee shop were higher than at the Whitmore cafeteria.

Examples of the higher pricing can be seen in the difference in the price for ham and eggs, $0.95 at the Whitmore cafeteria and $1.15 at the CC outlets, coffee, $0.10 at Whitmore and $0.17 at the CC, a western sandwich which was set at $0.50 at the Whitmore cafeteria and $0.70 at the CC. Pricing was found to be consistently arranged in the CC at a higher level on most items than at UFS outlets.

When asked why prices were higher at CC outlets Mr. Tony Leslie, professional administrator hired by the CC to oversee the operations of the Blue Wall, Hatch and Campus Center Cafeteria, he said that the outlets he administered were operated to net $200,000 profit yearly out of a $2,000,000 budget as one of the two largest contributors to overall Campus Center operations, the other being the University Store and text book outlets. He said this was approved by the Student Board of Governors in accord with a report by the Arthur D. Little Company published last Spring. He said that this was found necessary in view of the skyrocketing CC fees charged to all students. The fee which was $62.50 last year was slashed to $52.50 this year because the profits made in CC outlets were applied to the student fees. Mr. Leslie also said that the incredible rise in prices of foodstuffs over the last year had forced him to increase prices accordingly, making necessary an almost "daily re-evaluation of pricing."

Food prices was also the concern of Mr. Joel Stoneham, administrator of the University Food Service. He said in almost identical terms how food price increases over the past year had forced him to re-evaluate his price scheme. He noted an almost 100% increase in costs by means of a graph that showed the price curve climbing almost vertically in recent months.

Mr. Stoneham also said that his operation was geared toward a profit. These profits, he said, were applied in part to keeping the cost of the student meal ticket plans down. He said, hypothetically, that given a $20,000 profit from his food outlets he could cut the cost of the tickets to ten-thousand students by two dollars per ticket.

Several patrons of the CC, when asked about the disparity in pricing, answered typically that the CC took advantage of its convenience to students. "They've got you and they know it," said one. Some suggested that the CC operation was inefficient, noting the presence of dormant staff, notably bartenders in the Blue Wall. Some felt an administration (and a student administration at that) knowledgeable in students' nortorious poverty would, if not subsidize prices, exert some restraint so that pricing would be more in line with the income level or lack of it in the student body.

Overall the students interviewed were not overjoyed, but didn't act very upset either. In fact, very few had even the slightest idea how or to whom to complain if motivated to do so. Mr. Leslie, when asked, said that he had not received a legitimate signed complaint in eight months. He said all complaints which come to his office were seen to personally by him or one of his staff. This involved contacting the individual complaining to attempt to amend the matter. But it is notable to report that on Mr. Leslie's door resides the script: "Sorry, deadline for all complaints was yesterday" which he attributed to his predecessor.

Protest May Close Gas Stations Today

By MIKE KNEELAND

Area motorists will have a hard time getting gas for their cars during the gas station shutdown which began today.

The strike was called to protest a Cost of Living Council decision restricting dealers to a seven-cent a gallon profit margin but allowing the major producers an eight-cent a gallon profit on the wholesale price.

"We've got nothing against the public," said Roger Charette, a local organizer, "The government forced us to do this."

Charette said the government's decision means that dealers are paying more for gas and selling it at a lower price than before.

He said 80 per cent of the dealers will take part in the strike "indefinitely" until the government reverses its ruling.

A spokesman for Carl's Sunocco Service Station in Amherst said his station would not take part in the strike. Men at College Town Service Ctr. in Amherst say they hadn't made a decision yet.

Even with 20 percent of the stations remaining open, the strike will not lose its effectiveness.

"Those stations will run out of gas within five days," said Charette. They're being rationed already."

Organizers in Lexington said the dealers could shut down the economy in three or four days.

Program Teaches Freshmen Survival

By DAVID LETTERS

While most freshmen seem to be running headstrong into the educational maze of uncertainty, 75 UMass students in a select group have their feet on the ground, heads in the right place regarding their first semester; and their energies are being channeled in a positive manner.

The Global Survival Freshman Year Program (GSP) started strongly last week as they embarked upon their collegiate years with a new program designed as a broader, challenging, more intensive, alternative plan of academia.

The issues of the world are brought into the classroom in the GSP. The program is an active attempt of the students to probe the problems of man and attempt to arrive at some solutions to these problems. The program will focus on five areas of concern: war; peace and world order; environmental deterioration and economic development; population; and resources and their distribution. Each area will be covered in detail as a separate subject, but will be studied together as interrelated topics. While the GSP members work together on these issues for nine credits, each student also will attend other university classes.

The alternative program offers the students various aspects not commonly known at the university. The classes are small and discussion is expected; the program has its own core faculty which developed the course and other faculty who will assist in the teaching and provide special lectures.

A spirit of togetherness, of a group is evident as the members attend the same classes, prepare material together and live in a specific dormitory area and eat together. The GSP has its own meeting area, which offers the student a few extras not found everywhere at UMass: two large rooms with a commanding mobile reading: War, Hate, Poverty, Sexism, Racism, Overpopulation---STOP! A coffee pot and radio, the daily newspapers, brochures and pamphlets related to the GSP, good reading lights---all together a gathering spot for its participants. The meeting room are like home in comparison to most areas of the university.

This writer attended a class of GSP and was particularly impressed by the active discussion. The small class (11 students, two faculty) started discussing the basic question: Should man tell other men how to live? Before the bell rang, the class touched upon eminent dominion, rebuilding Germany, the American Indian, civil rights, the peoples of North Africa and America, Richard Nixon, the Aswan Dam, the student union and genetics. When it did r-r-ring, the group continued discussion for 15 minutes. Unlike most classes at UMass, the interraction and flow of the class is controlled by the students, and they seem to enjoy it.

Grading in the GSP is with the traditional letter grade, but is supplemented with a statement on the individual's work by the faculty. As the term progresses, the faculty will write progress reports to which the students will have immediate access. Counseling and advisement are more intensive than the regular university.

Vacancies still exist. Any freshman is eligible, and the group itself would like more black and foreign students to broaden the opinions. Those interested should contact Stephen Giles at Hills, R. 237 or call 5-0370 for more information. Deadline for enrollment is Friday.

J.O.E. Recruiting

The Juvenile Opportunities Extension student volunteer organization will hold a general recruitment meeting tonight at 7:30 in room 165 in the Campus Center. The agenda for the meeting is to introduce members to the J.O.E. program 1973.

Established in 1971 as a student initiated response to the Attica riots, the program originally had one goal-to send volunteers to the Westfield Detention Center to work with the youth there. Early in 1972, the J.O.E. program became the vehicle by which the Department of Youth Services closed the last and oldest of its reformatories.

If you are interested in deliquent rehabilitation, attend the first J.O.E. meeting. New members are welcome.

Amherst Town Meeting

Tighter TOC Security Suggested

By MIKE ALLAIN

Amherst Town Selectmen last night cautioned Top of the Campus officials about the importance of closer surveillance of TOC membership cards.

Selectman Leo Bouchard, in reference to an inspection of the Top of the Campus Club conducted by Selectman Robert Garvey and himself last Friday night, noted that attendants did not appear to inspect the identifying photographs closely.

Chairman of the Board, Michael Sullivan, added that the dimly lit club made a close inspection difficult, and suggested to TOC manager Frank Stuart that adequate lighting be made available.

The Board also requested and received a detailed floor plan of the licensed club facilities, and approved the change in TOC manager from Warren Grinnan to Stuart.

Bouchard also warned Stuart that an official inspection of TOC operations would be forthcoming.

Alfred Boyajian, manager of the Quicksilver, a North Pleasant Street bar, was censured for an alleged violation involving two juveniles who were served beer on August 22.

The Board unanimously passed a motion to suspend Boyajian's license for three days if another violation is brought to their attention within the next year.

The Board also heard a proposal by Town Manager Allan Torrey that the town assume responsibility for ownership, maintenance, and installation of water connection service pipes.

Torrey explained that municipal responsibility of these pipes, which connect the larger water main below the street to the individual buildings, would facilitate prompt attention to the repair and replacement of faulty lines and better coordination related to road construction and maintenance.

Private homeowners are currently responsible for the maintenance of these service pipes. One such homeowner, Frederic Filios of Pelham Road, requested that Torrey investigate a shifting of responsibility for these secondary lines after his service pipes were repaired by a private contractor at high costs.

Filios expressed hope that the Board would vote to "follow a policy that is more beneficial to the taxpayer," and termed the town's direction of the operation after he had privately hired the contractor "unethical".

The Board also passed a motion to recommend Torrey's proposal to the Ad Hoc Committee concerning plans for the new fire station-training facilities to be built in North Amherst on East Pleasant St., near Tillson Farm.

The proposal originally included modern training facilities and a 14-bed dormitory. A motion to delete provisions for the dormitory failed 4 to 1, Bouchard opposed, while a motion to delete the expanded training facilities provisions was passed 4-1, with Eddy opposed.

Bouchard noted that deletion of the training facility in its expanded form was desirable because it "is an expansion of the original town meeting vote".

Hearings Held For Delta Crash At Logan

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer

PEABODY, Mass. (AP) — Twenty-six witnesses have been summoned for a three-day National Transportation Safety Board hearing scheduled to begin today into the July 31 crash of a Delta Airlines passenger jet at Logan Airport.

Eighty-eight persons died in the crash. The lone survivor, Air Force Sgt. Leopold Choiuinard, 20, of Marshfield, Vt., remains in critical condition at Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston, where he is undergoing treatment for burns that covered 80 per cent of his body.

A safety board spokesman said the hearings would attempt to determine whether the DC9 crash plane's navigational equipment was working properly. The board said last month that the jetliner had a three-month history of radio and flight instrument problems.

The board, which conducted an on-site investigation immediately after the accident, said problems with the instruments were reported seven times in the six-day period preceding the crash.

The plane was inbound from Manchester, N.H., on a flight that originated in Burlington, Vt. It crashed when it struck a seawall short of the Logan runway while attempting an instrument landing in heavy fog. The safety board said flight and maintenance records for the jet, acquired by Delta in a merger with Northeast Airlines last year, "show that numerous complaints about radio and flight instruments were recorded in the flight logs.

"Many of these complaints were of a recurring or chronic nature," the board said. Investigations immediately following the crash indicated that the plane was too low and too far to the right as it came into the airport. The board said it could not state that instruments were the cause of the crash.

Trustees Broaden Horizons

By DAVID GREENSLIT

The UMass Board of Trustees will assume a changing role in campus governance this year, according to Student Senate President and UMass Trustee Nick Apostola.

Apostola said that because of the Wellman Document, which delegates power in handling everyday matters to campus governance units, the trustees will deal with "long range planning and broad policy issues."

Two such issues, according to Apostola, are expanding medical facilities at the UMass Medical School in Worcester and establishing a graduate school at UMass Boston.

He added that the trustees retain full authority to act upon and veto specific matters. They will continue to choose the UMass chancellor and president and delegate power to them. As an example Apostola said that the trustees have authorized Chancellor Bromery to handle the parking controversy.

UMass trustees are appointed by the governor to six year terms. They meet several times each month as a full board or in committees. A trustee receives no salary.

A student becomes trustee after being elected president of the Student Senate. He functions as a full voting member of the board. His term lasts one year.

As student trustee, Apostola said that any differences he has with other board members are "philosophical" and are not related to his being a student.

Speaking of the non-student trustees, Apostola said that "for the most part they are genuinely committed to quality public education at low cost to everybody."

Parking Lot Work Subject Of Grad Senate

By JEFF LONG

The graduate Student Senate convened in rooms 168-172 of the Campus Center last night, with John Muller presiding as President. Only about 16 senators were in attendance as elections for representatives in many departments are still underway.

Discussion primarily focused on the proposed allocation of legal and emergency funds to the Environmental Engineering Association for the purpose of seeking a permanent injunction against the University's conversion of wetlands near the physical plant to a parking lot.

Dick Knapp, representing that association, argued that the University is in violation of "about a dozen" federal and state laws", not having filed an impact statement with the Hadley Conservation Commission 60 days before proceeding to convert the land to lot 13. A temporary injunction, which would have called for immediate work stoppage on the project, was denied this summer by a Northampton judge; the case was then referred to a court in Springfield, three days later, where the judge there denied the sought injunction on the basis that the project was nearly completed.

The ultimate thrust, Knapp said, of the pursued permanent injunction is to ensure that the University pay heed in the future to environmental concerns and state laws. After much discussion, a revised motion was passed (12-4), that $200 be allocated to the association in accord with task force guidelines. The permanent injunction is scheduled to be sought in Superior Court on or about October 1.

In other old business, the August 21 report of the Executive Committee was unanimously passed.

Under new business, Arthur Strohl, a graduate senator, moved that prices and practices of the University book store and textbook annex be investigated. James Lindsey, Treasurer, pointed out that a trustee ruling has been made which requires that the annex discount 5% from most texts. Discussion of that issue was tabled.

The next meeting of the Graduate Student Senate is scheduled for October 1.

Cheerleaders "Fantastic" After Villanova Saturday

It's easier to be happy--and to cheer--when your team wins. This cheerleader was helping to cheer UMass to a 21 to 20 win over Villanova Saturday.

By MIKE KNEELAND

Some of them had blisters, others had strained muscles, and all were hoarse. But the lively UMass cheerleaders said they still felt "fantastic" after cheering UMass past Villanova Saturday.

Led by pretties Kris Fletcher and Sonya Bennett, the cheerleaders do their best each game to rouse the "Be True to Your School" emotions of UMass fans.

"If the team is doing good, then we get real good response," said Ms. Bennett while jumping to the beat of the band's half-time performance.

Their iambic cheers are cute and catchy. If put to music they might sell records for the 1910 Fruitgum Company: "Get up! . .Get goin'! . . .Reeeeleee Sock 'Et To 'Em!" or "Go, go, get'em, get'em, go go get'em, go Redmen Go!"

Privately, their game comments are more candid. "Oh you should have got 'em," one female cheerleader shouts at a player. "C'mon you guys," another pleads.

Villanova scores first and the cheerleaders are upset. But they dutifully smile and continue their cheering.

UMass scores and the cheerleaders are happily jumping, twisting and shouting to the syncopated beat of a bass drum, doing what they call the Minutemen Beat.

The game winning conversion points send them into chaos. Arms and legs are moving everywhere. A lucky sideline spectator gets a hug.

Next week. . . .Maine.

Parking Will Be Enforced Now

Parking regulations at UMass will be enforced on a limited basis until early October when all vehicles will have received their new parking assignments, and then all regulations will be enforced, according to H.J. Littlefield, director of planning.

There has been some misunderstanding on this point, he said this week.

The UMass administration and classified employees came to an agreement last week which ended a one-day employees strike, and included among the six-point agreement was the statement: "The University will defer enforcement of the new parking system until Oct. 1."

Until then, vehicles may park in their newly assigned lots or the lots to which their last year's stickers entitle them. After that, cars must park in lots assigned to them for this academic year. This is "enforcement of the new parking system," Littlefield explained.

Other parking regulations do apply now. For example, cars with neither old nor new decals may not legally park in any lots except those at the periphery of the campus, near the football stadium, baseball field, or Fraternity-Sorority Park.

Director Littlefield asked members of the UMass community for "cooperation during this period of further delay of full implementation of the new balanced transportation and parking system."

IBM Ordered To Pay $325m In Trust Suit

By DAYTON BLAIR
Associated Press Writer

TULSA, Okla. (AP) - International Business Machines Corp., the giant of the worldwide computer industry, was found guilty of monopolistic practices Monday. IBM was ordered to pay the Telex Corp., a Tulsa-based competitor, $352.5 million in damages while Telex was directed to pay IBM $21.9 million for theft of trade secrets. The federal judge ordered IBM to begin steps to end "predatory" acts in the computer accessory market.

An IBM spokesman at company headquarters in Armonk, N.Y., said IBM would appeal.

Stocks of both companies were delayed in opening on the New York Stock Exchange as investors learned of the ruling by U.S. District Court Judge A. Sherman Christensen of Salt Lake City.

IBM closed Monday at $272, down 26 from Friday's close. Telex soared 3 3/4 to $7.625 a share, rising 79 per cent in price during the short while it was traded. On the American Stock Exchange, Telex warrants - rights to buy Telex stock at $11 a share - more than doubled in price, jumping 2 1/2 to $4.25 a share.

Christensen, in his order mailed to the court here where he heard testimony in the case for nearly two months earlier this year, ordered IBM to disclose certain portions of electronic design in announcing new electronic data processing equipment.

He also enjoined IBM from "adopting, implementing, or carrying out predatory pricing, leasing or other acts, practices or strategies with intent to obtain or maintain a monopoly in the market. . ."

IBM also was ordered to stop "single or bundled" pricing of IBM memory systems in its System 370 central processing unit, and to price its processing units and memories separately within 60 days.

Telex had argued that IBM had been pricing the equipment in ways designed to freeze out competition.

A Telex spokesman said Telex was pleased with the decision. Telex had sought $1.2 billion in damages, accusing IBM of predatory marketing actions. IBM denied the monopoly allogations, saying its share of the computer accessory market - a field it said now has 1,800 manufacturers had declined annually.

Allende Planned Deaths Of Opponents, Papers Say

By ROBERT D. OHMAN
Associated Press Writer

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Two daily newspapers, quoting "a high military source," said Monday the government of the late President Salvador Allende had planned to assassinate top military officers and opposition political leaders.

The newspapers, El Mercurio and La Tercera de La Hora, said a "high military source" brought the documents describing the plot to the newspapers after they were found in a safe at the bomb-damaged presidential palace.

The documents allegedly were taken from the safe of Daniel Vergara, a Communist party leader and Allende's minister of interior. The newspaper stories said the assassinations were to have taken place Monday during a military parade. They said the killings were scheduled well before the coup which toppled Allende's three-year-old government last Tuesday.

El Mercurio and La Tercera de La Hora opposed the Allende government. They have been the only newspapers permitted to publish by the new military junta, headed by Gen. Augusto Pinochet Ugarte, army commander-in-chief. The two papers said the military learned of the assassination plan and toppled Allende "as the only alternative in the face of the dangerous blow prepared by Marxism."

The documents, whose authenticity could not be verified by newsmen, did not explain why Allende's government decided upon the alleged assassination plot.

Allende, 65, committed suicide, the military authorities announced, as troops closed in on the downtown presidential palace last Tuesday after a 20-minute bombardment by tanks and planes. His widow, who arrived in Mexico City Sunday with 66 others granted asylum by the Mexican government, said in an interview that her husband killed himself with a submachine gun given him by Cuban Premier Fidel Castro rather than submit to capture.

Allende was a physician who dedicated his life to politics and won election in 1970 as the presidential candidate of the six-party Popular Unity coalition, dominated by the Communist and Socialist parties.

Segretti Pleads Guilty To Violating Election Laws

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Donald N. Segretti, an underground political operative for President Nixon's re-election campaign, Monday agreed to plead guilty to violating federal election laws and to cooperate with federal prosecutors.

One charge against Segretti alleges involvement in a bogus letter accusing two Democratic opponents of Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine with sexual misconduct. The letter on Muskie stationery was distributed during the Florida Democratic presidential primary campaign.

Segretti's decision was disclosed at a brief appearance before a federal magistrate at which he agreed to have a case filed against him in Tampa, Fla., transferred to Washington.

No date was scheduled for Segretti to enter his guilty plea. The magistrate set Oct. 1 for his next appearance.

A federal grand jury in Tampa returned a four-count indictment Aug. 24, charging Segretti with conspiracy to violate federal election laws and illegally publishing unauthorized political statements during the Florida primary. It had remained sealed until Monday.

Segretti had received money from Nixon's former personal attorney and campaign fund raiser for an alleged campaign of political sabotage in Florida and elsewhere.

Bombs Explode As Irish, British Confer

By COLIN FROST
Associated Press Writer

DUBLIN (AP)- Bombs exploded in Britain and Northern Ireland Monday as the prime ministers of Britain and the Irish Republic conferred in an important summit.

The most stringent security ever seen in the Irish capital surrounded the meeting between Britain's Edward Heath and the Ireland's Liam Cosgrave.

Heath was paying the first official visit to the republic by a British prime minister in its 51-year history in an effort to reach now accords on peace settlement in Northern Ireland.

There was no official indication of the progress of the summit.

Cosgrave was believed to be pressing Heath for quick action in setting up a council of Ireland to give the republic a voice in the province's affairs.

The northern Protestant majority see in the plan the threat of an eventual united Ireland and domination by the overwhelmingly Roman Catholic republic.

The talks took place against a backdrop of violence widely blamed on extremists of the Irish Republican Army.

In Britain, one of two bomb blasts in the industrial center of Birmingham seriously injured a bomb disposal expert. Another explosion damaged an army camp near London.

Several persons were hurt in Belfast when a bomb in a car blew up outside a bar. Two Roman Catholic schools were damaged in other Belfast explosions, which were blamed on Protestant extremists.

Relief On Way To Cambodia

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP)- The U.S. Embassy and several international relief organizations announced Monday plans to alleviate a critical medical situation arising from the battle for Kompong Cham.

The embassy said equipment for two hospitals would be air-lifted into Phnom Penh, while several relief groups filed urgent messages to home stations for critically needed medicine and supplies.

On the war front, the Cambodian military command reported fighting at two points on the edge of Kompong Cham, shelling of a government outpost in the marshlands northeast of Phnom Penh and the closest government-insurgent closest to the heart of the capital in months.

Phnom Penh's two vital overland supply arteries remained cut by Communist-led insurgents, and fighting continued on the main road from the Cambodian capital to the South Vietnamese border.

A spokesman for the U.S. Embassy said two C130 cargo aircraft would arrive from Travis Air Force Base, Calif., Tuesday carrying equipment for two 200-bed hospitals. The spokesman said, "The hospitals will have everything except the walls."

One hospital unit will be installed at Kompong Cham, 47 miles northeast of Phnom Penh, while the other will be set up in Phnom Penh to handle wounded still streaming in from the embattled city, the spokesman said.

The hospitals will be staffed by Cambodians, who are extremely short of trained medical personnel.

Following a meeting of top Cambodian government officials and seven international and Cambodian relief organizations, calls went out for medical aid, including dried blood, antitotanus and antichelera vaccines and plaster and splints.

Chrysler, UAW Reach Tentative Peace

Members of United Auto Workers picketed outside the Whiting Gate of the Chrysler Corporation over the weekend. Yesterday a tentative agreement was reached between Chrysler and UAW who had struck last Friday night.

DETROIT (AP) — Chrysler Corp. and the United Auto Workers union reached tentative agreement yesterday on a new contract covering 117,000 production and maintenance workers.

The settlement came 63 hours after the union struck the nation's No. 3 automaker.

"We want to tell our members about it first," UAW President Leonard Woodcock said when asked why details of the agreement were withheld pending an 8:30 a.m. news conference today.

Woodcock refused to predict whether rank-and-file union members will ratify the tentative agreement.

Neither company nor union would say how long it will be until production resumes. Union procedures to ratify any new contract ordinarily take at least a week.

The International Executive Board and the local presidents were scheduled to meet Monday afternoon in Detroit.

The contract would not cover the approximately 10,500 whitecollar workers who are also represented by the UAW. They had been instructed to cross production workers' picket lines during the strike.

"We're continuing to bargain" on the contract for whitecollar workers, Woodcock said. "If it becomes necessary, yes, there will be a strike deadline" for a white-collar contract.

In 1958 a seven-day strike by salaried workers shut Chrysler even though a settlement covering production workers had been reached.

Chrysler is the only one of the Big Three automakers where the UAW represents salaried workers.

Production at other members of the Big Three, Ford and General Motors, continued while the union sought its pattern contract at Chrysler.

When asked what the union planned to do about a settlement at those firms, Woodcock said: "We will dispose of the problems at Chrysler before I personally think of going anywhere else."

House To Get Agnew Findings

By JEAN HELLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-A federal grand jury investigating allegations of political graft in Maryland may send its findings on Vice President Spiro T. Agnew to the House of Representatives, it was learned yesterday.

Such action could be a prelude to impeachment proceedings against Agnew if the evidence warranted it.

The procedure would permit the Justice Department to avoid facing the controversial constitutional question of whether a vice president can be indicted before he is impeached. If Agnew were impeached by the House and convicted by the Senate, he would then be a private citizen subject to indictment without constitutional questions.

Sources close to the investigation said that if Agnew evidence is eventually sent to the House, it would probably be done in the form of a presentation, a document outlining the grand jury's findings and any action it might otherwise have taken.

BLUE GRASS EXPRESS

By Cindy Garet

"It happened on a 3900 acre farm in Cummington, Mass. At least 20 miles from civilization. You had to travel down a long winding road with patches of tar filling in the potholes. You could tell it was country. On the way out you passed only a tractor or two and herds of horses and cows.

"At the Blue Grass Festival, the afternoon was seasoned with the best fiddle music of generations past. The strumming of banjos filled the solitude of the scene.

"The Western Massachusetts farm brought the old weather-beaten tobacco farmers their women, kids and dogs. Students and blue grass music appreciators made their showings.

"It was a nice 'down home' weekend."

Alleged Muskie Slur To Be Investigated

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) - Senate Watergate investigators expect to return to New Hampshire to find out who lied to them last week in their attempt to find out who wrote the "Canuck" letter, the investigators' head said yesterday.

"Somebody up there is lying to us and we mean to get to the bottom of this," investigative leader Jed Johnson said in a telephone interview from Washington.

The letter, written to the editor of the Manchester Union Leader during the 1972 New Hampshire presidential primary, alleged that Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine had made an ethnic slur against Americans of French-Canadian descent.

Sen. Sam Ervin of the Senate Watergate Committee, said meanwhile that Gov. Meldrim Thompson failed to present any facts in a telegram protesting the use of "Gestapo-like" tactics in last week's questioning in this state.

Thomson said the probers might be engaged in a "political conspiracy of harassment of New Hampshire citizens."

Ervin replied by telegram that while Thomson's message contained "some threats and vituperation, it does not set forth a single specific fact to justify your harassment charge."

Thomson was referring to a visit Saturday by Johnson and W. Scott Farr to Orford, where they interviewed Roberto Alonzo, a lawyer from Cuba who is a supervisor of Spanish-language law books at Equity Publishing Co., formerly headed by Thomson.

Johnson said he and Parr had a "cordial conversation" and that Alonzo denied any knowledge of the "Canuck" letter. And Johnson said they asked Alonzo for handwriting samples as they had asked other persons interviewed last week.

Secretary General Defends UN

By GEORGE BRIA
Associated Press Writer

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) - The U.N. Assembly opens its 28th annual meeting Tuesday under increasing criticism that it is a debating society habitually bypassed by the major powers.

The proposed entry of the two Germanys and sharp East-West conflict over the future of Korea promise to highlight the three-month session.

Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim on Monday dismissed wholesale criticsm of the United Nations as "unjust and unfair."

He told a news conference "a lot was achieved in 28 years. . .if there was a will to use it as an instrument of peace it would work very well."

Waldheim also said that in many parts of the world "there is still a lot of confidence in the United Nations."

But in his own funeral report to the assembly Waldheim asked whether the majority of the members "really want an organization which is more than conference machinery and a forum for the pursuit of national policies."

Israel has announced it will vote against East Germany when the membership proposal comes up at Tuesday's opening session. The Israelis complain that the East Germans are militantly pro-Arab and also refuse to pay reparations for Nazi crimes against the Jews.

West Germany may be the target of criticism from Guinea which has accused West Germans of helping white supremacists in Africa.

Otherwise, the admission of the two Germany is expected to go smoothly. Their applications received the necessary U.N. Security Council endorsement last June. The Bahamas also will become a member.

The future of the U.N. Command in South Korea looms as the stormiest issue to confront the 135-member assembly. China, the Soviet Union and a score of other nations have called for scrapping the command and withdrawal of its 40,000 American troops. Whatever the outcome in the assembly, the United States is ready to maintain its troops in the South under separate agreements with Seoul.

The Telethon

Well, the Democrats are at it again, and thank God too! If you happened to catch the big show Saturday night you'll know what I'm talking about. The Democratic Party took to the airwaves and collected $5.3 million to pay off George's charge account, and get things rolling for the '74 elections. It's what is known in business circles as getting out of the red, and in political circles as driving another nail into the GOP coffin. It was a good evening for taking a swipe at Nixon & Co., and even George McGovern came out of hiding. A very interesting event, to put it mildly, and following are a few observations.

Robert Strauss, the party chairman, may have a lot of personality in the warmth of a smoke filled room, but on television he's about as exciting as Melvin Laird. One thing he did provide, though, was a contrast to the jovial diehard, Hubert Humphrey. There was HHH, stealing the show with one liners and anti Nixon quips. One thing is for sure, he hasn't lost his political savvy, nor the ability to take charge when no one else wants to. I still think he's fun to have around, and Muriel makes two!

Teddy was there, of course, with his hair pulled back just over his ears (can't look too weird you know), and seeming to shun the spotlight as much as possible. I have a strange feeling he wanted to leave before they showed that moving, well done, but rather ill-timed documentary on the late Senator Bob. And then there was Walter Mondale. Ah, Walter Mondale, when his name is uttered it is with a certain reverence. Now if someone would only tell me why I would appreciate it. I have yet to understand this Mondale Mystique, but perhaps I'm missing something. And don't tell me about his "Presidency" speech either, it was good, but that's as far as it goes. See Walter run!

Unity with a grain of salt. The salt provided by George Wallace. His speech Saturday night was of the "I told you so" nature, and of the "if it happens again the right wing will kick your ass" variety. George is convinced that the party belongs to him, and right or wrong, he'll be tough to deal with in the future. It will no doubt be a long time between visits to Alabama for our Teddy.

The name given to the telethon was "America Goes Public". It was a striking contrast to the well rehearsed and staged events that the GOP is fond of. In that respect, it was as public as it could be. I mean, let's face it, Ronny Regan would never gotten away with a speech like Wallace's if the Republicans were on the air. The average John Doe paying for political campaigns is the best idea to hit this country in a long time. Hopefully it will help reverse the trend of special interest politics that has been promoted most excellently by our present leaders. It is a start, at any rate, because no matter how small the contribution, and to whatever party, it brings the workings of government that much closer to the people, to us. For a buck or two, things can take on added significance. And as Senator Inouye said, "At today's prices, it's a bargain.

With all the political jabberring, big name entertainers, and a good time had by all, the real message of the telethon came ringing through loud and clear. American politics is certainly not at a standstill, and more people are becoming involved than ever before. It's clear that change is possible when enough people are willing to work very hard to attain it. A political telethon would have been unthinkable a few short years ago. Credit must go to George McGovern as well as anybody else, and he may have accomplished a hell of a lot more in his campaign for the presidency than was at first evident. The government must be "of the people", and this is as good a way as any to start.

"The Lord works in strange ways, his wonders to behold", as Senator Sam Ervin has told us so many times And as was also written long ago, "Many evil men are rich, and good men poor, but we shall not exchange with them our excellence for riches."

I. Still Life

Well, well...

Annual time of year for the emergence of still life as the saying goes and goes and goes. What with you getting into the g-r-r-rind of Academia, there really has been little time to think. So, unfortunately, you fall into the hues and tones of UMass, not realizing that the hues do not GO BEYOND THE VISIBLE LIGHT SPECTRUM.

May I tell you something? You are being molded and shaped--you must get to class on time-tick, tick. Set your alarm clock-tick, tick. Eat your meals on schedule, and you won't get acid ah said in the bargain (not that it's that much a bargain.).

And you are living a picture...you are living a still-life...

II. The Camera and the Image (or Iconoclasm Blues)

So here we are, finally backing into the future. Braking our way and backbraking our way.

In the future, and we are walking with our eyes closed

And,

of course

backtracking and turning ourselves into cliches, until it happens that we have taken on the masks of ourselves as the true shape of what we are. Something that is learned becomes what you like to do, whereas you might (I might) not know that what we've learned is bad for us. Or the fact that it's a Madison Avenue Man who's telling you to go NATURAL so he can put out nifty items for you to gobble up so that you think you're organic when actually to be organic you have to break away from these turds, and to become as one with your environment (I learned that line on the thirty-second show of "Kung Fu"). What's your problem kid? Do you go around mouthing empty platitudes, or watt? Or has the cliche become you; or, as Sun Ra would put it: "If you are not a myth, whose reality are you?

The idea, aptly expressed by Thunderclap Newman and Speedy Keen: "Life's but a game, you fly a paper plane; there is no end." CONFUSED? GOOD! WORK YOUR WAY OUT OF IT THIS TIME FOR A CHANGE.

III. MICKEY MOUSE

Mickey Mouse is animated, but you are sleeping. Mickey Mouse is making billions for his dead massa's company, and you're still lulled into submission by Mickey's dead boss.

I can remember thinking to myself that animation has the potential to be one of the finest art forms in existence. Some technicians are even coming up with "live" animation. If animation could be the second best art form around (Black Music is first for spontaneity and invention.) One thing to do is animate yourself. But animation costs a lot of money. And animation of self costs a lot of pain. You don't (I risk sounding like a cliche myself here) get something for nothing.

Nine Things To Do

By DENNIS SIMKOWSKI

The labelmakers returned to the Collegian's editorial page ready to splash a dash of red paint on anyone who moves . . . Freeze! That's what the cold war is all about. Remember, apathy is the best policy and in order to avoid any misunderstandings do the following and make no mistake about it.

1. Every night chang: A-A-AM-Err-ICAH to the tune of the Star Spangled Banner . . . end with a refrain: LOVE IT OR LEAVE IT. (Be sure not to run out of breath.)

2. Begin the day in a prostrate position facing Westward with a large presidential portrait (glossy or mat finish) tacked to the wall above you. (It's very important not to face Eastward as you'll be paying homage with your backside and it may be interpreted as a treasonous act.)

3. Throughout your day, be sure to repeat 5 times (in honor of the Pentagon) the President's famed Watergate Speech of May 1, 1973 A.D. (4 A.N.): "If we strive together, if we make the most of the challenge and the opportunity that these days offer, they can stand out as great days for America and GREAT MOMENTS IN THE HISTORY OF THE WORLD."

4. Bear right at all times.

5. Aspire to the highest office of our land: Director, Central Intelligence. If you prefer more glamor, try getting the Deputy Director, Operations job where you'll be guaranteed directorship of your very own Acme Plumbers. (In the latter position, we need a good man. Frank Wisner was fired for the failure of an anti-Sukarno "rising" in Indonesia in the '50's and Richard Bissell was canned for the Bay of Pigs. Nevertheless, the CIA is a highly successful organization. For one, we've cultivated the Shah of Iran and the former DCI Richard Helms is now the Ambassador to that new American base of operations for the Middle East.)

6. Always eat Wonder Bread at meal time and Hostess Twinkies, Snoballs or Cupcakes for a snack. When you rent-a-car take Avis. Stay at Sheraton Hotels. (While this is not a complete list, be sure to support

Extra Help And Patience Needed

To The Editor:

Today medical care for the mentally ill is undergoing a vast change. People are being taken care of through out-patient clinics and other services that keep the patient in the community and responsive to his daily life. Treatment involves teaching people to deal with their problems rather than having them removed. But what about the people who were put away before today's ideas became practice? Many live and have lived for a number of years in Northampton State Hospital. These people need the extra help and patience to help them adjust to life again. Many have been in for several years and the world they knew has changed. The Northampton Volunteers help these people bridge the years and blend into today's life style. You don't need to be a psych major, over 21 or have a Top of the Campus card to get in. All you need is to care for someone who has been forgotten.

This Thursday night we are having a special open house and orientation for new members. A bus will leave Hasbrouck Lab at 6:30 p.m. and Patterson House in Southwest at 6:35 p.m. All are welcome to come to the program and no one will be expected to show up the following week if they choose not too. If you'd like more information, a table will be set up in the Campus Center all week to answer any questions.

Bring Your Own Endust

To The Editor:

Well sister, you've been looking for something to stimulate your minds during the off hours, yes? In the continuing saga of the Newman Centers' "dust detail", I'd like to report that their recruitment drive isn't going too well, unfortunately. The impression that I got from the monsignor (Sat. 5:30 mass) would leave me to believe that we wern't exactly breaking the doors of the Newman Center down this past week in an attempt to be the first to enlist among the ranks of the girls dusting and general maintenance squad.

This makes the second week that the monsignor has had to ask for our help in this matter. This remains a mystery to me. If you dust in your own home, then why not dust in the house of God? Consider the pleasantries of your anatomical fate. You just may meet up with a sexy altar-boy and who knows-that might even lead to bigger and better things like dusting the center aisle of the church with your very own wedding veil.

If this exciting possibility fails to move you off your collective tuchim (What in hell is wrong with you anyway?), then pause a moment here to consider the still unmined aesthetic qualities contained within the mature dust particle. I realize that a lot of my sisters have been meaning to get over to the Newman Center to put their Joan Hancocks on the dust list and that you just haven't had the time.

Well, make a serious effort this week before everyones' allergies start acting up. Make this a semester of community involvement. Do something useful. Dust an altar today. You will experience the strange sense of inner tranquility that comes to any woman who has realized that domestic work is just one of the many rewards of being born a Female on this wonderful world of ours.

By the way, I checked on the rag situation at the Center. They do provide them. Bring your own Endust though.

Inaccurate Information Is Harmful

To The Editor:

A recent issue of The Collegian carried an item entitled "Birth Control Handbook" referring to the publication "1+1-3", which was distributed to students at registration.

Since the item in the Collegian described the booklet as "concise and clear", I think it is imperative to call to your attention that the section on "Adoption" is so extremely inaccurate as to make its publication harmful rather than helpful to people who may want to consider adoption.

It is unfortunate that the authors of the booklet apparently failed to use consultation available to them at Children's Aid and Family Service in Northampton or some other licensed adoption agency, any one of which could have given them accurate and unbiased information.

The other material in the booklet may well have been carefully and accurately prepared; I am not in a position to evaluate this. However, I believe the mass of misinformation given under the adoption heading warrants suggesting to your readers that anyone interested in adoption turn to a more authoritative source. By no means should distribution of the booklet be continued until this section has been reprinted.

Why I Am A Conservative

To The Editor:

I am a conservative because I believe there is a fundamental moral order to the universe, upon which all government and society must be based, and which any individual of good will can understand. I believe in the free will of the individual and deem the individual pursuit of virtue to be necessary for the realization of a true humanism. I see it as the responsibility of conservatives and of all people of good will to cherish and further the Western principles of freedom and the free pursuit of virture, neither one of which can stand without the other. To be virtuous, after all, requires that one freely choose to do good; coerced virtue is a contradiction in terms. I believe, finally, that while the state is a necessary part of human existence and may even improve man by restraining his baser impulses, the very power of the state makes it a danger to the freedom, and hence the virtue, of every individual, and the state ought, therefore, to be limited strictly to providing for the national defense, preserving domestic peace, and instituting equal justice for all, based on the moral equality of men.

Who put the bomp in the bomp da bomp?

By BOB ROSSMAN

What did the fifties have that the seventies don't? Music. Oh, I know we have music now, but not the kind a lot of people can sing along to, start laughing, and end up having a really good time. It's fun now, but way back then it was serious business. Just think of the tremendous amount of imagination that went into writing of the chorus of "Blue Moon." After all, this is genuine poetry, "Dip da dip da dip, bomp ba bomp bomp, ba bomp ba bomp, ba bomp ba bomp bomp, ba dang a dang dang, ba ding a dong ding....

When I first came here in my freshman year, I was so proud of my oldies collection. I broke out my new Sha Na Na, opened the door, turned up the volume, and promptly heard twelve doors slam. Must be doing their homework-try again tomorrow. The slamming came eventually, but this time they also yelled at parts of my anatomy (I never thought I resembled a rectum). The third try didn't bring any slamming of doors. This time they merely pennied me into my room and shut off all the electricity in there.

But the tide turned. First one convert, then another, and still a few more, and to cap it off I even ran into a few genuine fifties freaks. Little Latin Larry came to campus. A few of us greased up to go and a lot of others just went to watch the "foolishness". A lot more converts. Finally the big time came. A Sha Na Na concert in Hartford. Half the dorm went. Two threw up, eight passed out, and the rest converted.

That was two years ago. Today if Sha Na Na or any other oldies music is coming from my end of the corridor and anything else from the other, there are more people here. They might come by and say, "Are you still playing that SHIT?" But they listen to two or three songs before they leave. I guess they don't realize the true inspiration of what they hear, they just have fun listening.

I must admit to the possession of other types of albums, but they have far less wear on them than the older ones. It's probably because the older ones can always put me into a better mood. When I get depressed I usually listen to singles like "Who Put the Bomp" or "Rama Lama Ding Dong". After two finals in one day on comes "Johnny B. Goode", and I feel so goode myself. I collapse five minutes later, but my dreams are a lot nicer after those eight minutes.

If anybody ever hums, whistles, or sings an oldie, or even says that they like oldies I jump in and say, "Would you like to hear the greatest oldies collection ever assembled?" Some tell me to get lost, but most people eventually take me up on my offer, and very few are disappointed. It's a great way to make friends which is not always easy for a fifties freak to do. By the way, who did put the bomp in the bomp ba bomp ba bomp?

Do These Things

anything ITT does, whether taking, making items for the boys at the Pentagon, selling land and insurance or overthrowing governments. But don't be concerned about the fact that ITT cooperated with the Nazis during World War II. Business is business. Afterall, it is a multinational company with assets of $86 billion. Unfortunately ITT has previously admitted that it tried to get the CIA to off the Allende government. That came out after one of those press leaks exposed the deal and that bugged us. Now that the pinko is dead and buried, some commies will say bad things about ITT and the CIA but don't worry! The spokesman has denied it already. And that was good for big business. Salvadore Allende dared to say last year at the UN: "We are witnessing a battle between the giant transnational corporations and sovereign states, for the latter's fundamental political economic, and military decisions are being interfered with by world-wide organizations which are not dependent on any single state and which, as regards the sum total of their activities, are not accountable or regulated by any parliament or institution representing the collective interest." And that wasn't nice.)

7. Always eat scab grapes and lettuce and for that matter never support unions that workers support. Buy Farah Pants.

8. Obey orders and tell the youth to join the military. (At least they'll be visible.)

9. Ignore preachings of peace and justice and avoid giving to the poor (only pay for that amount of your tax dollars that go for the Defense Department) and only pretend to love your neighbor not as they say in Buddhism, Christianity, Hinduism, Islam, Judiasm, Taoism and forget idle talk about a so-called good conscience and higher law. --FOLLOW THE PRECEDING NINE POINTS RELIGIOUSLY--

Sims Expands

The Students' International Meditation Society of U.Mass. has been elected the central coordinating body for all SIMS centers in the Western Massachusetts World Plan Area.

SIMS is the organization responsible for teaching the Science of Creative Intelligence. This new course, presently being offered at the University, promises to give a person both the intellectual understanding of what creative intelligence is, where it comes from, how it develops, and how to apply it to all fields of knowledge, as well as the direct personal experience of this creative intelligence through the practice of Transcendental Meditation.

As Beth Harrington, president of the SIMS U.Mass. chapter says, "This course is probably the most relevant and exciting experience being offered in any classroom at the university. The reason is that not only are we offering an understanding of the basis of all knowledge, but we're providing each individual with the ability to contact and bring out into his activity these qualities of creativity and intelligence. As a result, naturally everything in life begins to improve - grades, personal relationships, health- whatever we're interested in gets better."

This ability is gained through a simple mental technique practiced for 15-20 minutes twice a day. With the considerable amount of scientific research now being done on this technique, many of the professors and businessmen in the community are beginning the practice, as it requires no change in lifestyle.

Because of the tremendous amount of national publicity over the past year, interest in TM has increased to such a degree that the SIMS U.Mass. chapter has greatly expanded their activities to meet the growing demand. A meditation room has been reserved in the Campus Center every afternoon from 4-6 p.m. for the close to 1000 student meditators in the area; weekly advanced meetings are held Sunday evening at 7:30 p.m.; and lectures on TM for those interested in beginning the practice will be offered frequently. For further information go to the SIMS Office, Student Union (balcony) from 11 a.m.-4 p.m., or call them at 545-1540. The next TM talk will be tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Rm. 101, Campus Center.

Health Services Seek Student Input

Would you like to help guide the health program at UMass? Would you like to work with physicians and staff members of the health services in planning their policy? In improving communications? In selecting new staff members? In responding to student suggestions and complaints?

The University Health Services exists to serve students. Students pay for personal health services and should have something to say about the kind of care and types of service they receive. The Health Service needs student ideas, suggestions and feedback.

The Student Advisory Board will probably meet twice a month. It participates in policy-making decisions and is involved in various projects. Come to the first meeting this Thursday at 5:00 p.m. in 162 C.C.

Percy To Propose Anti-Pollution Tax

By JOHN CHADWICK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. Charles H. Percy, said Monday he will seek a sliding-scale tax on new automobiles based on their rate on fuel consumption.

Under a bill he plans to introduce Tuesday, a tax would be imposed beginning in 1976 on cars that get less than 20 miles to the gallon. The maximum tax would be $381 for a car that got five miles per gallon or less.

The Illinois Republican said in a statement the proposed tax would encourage development of fuel-efficient cars, provide revenues for energy research and stimulate conservation of fuel.

Under the bill the tax in 1981 would apply to all new cars that get less than 25 miles per gallon and the sliding scale of rates would increase to a maximum tax of $1,090.

Sen. Walter F. Mondale, D-Minn., who like Percy is regarded as a potential presidential candidate in 1976, annnounced he would introduce a bill taking a different approach to the energy problem.

Mondale said his bill would create a federal corporation, financed with revenues from offshore drilling leases, to undertake research into energy conservation.

The independent corporation he proposed would look into ways to save energy use, including improvement in the design of buildings and building materials.

Socialists Tie In Swedish Election

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP)- The Swedish general elections ended in a tie between the ruling Socialist bloc and a loose non-Socialist alliance, the official Swedish news agency reported Monday.

The agency said unless party allegiances crack through defections or backstage combinations, parliamentary proceedings could be stalemated and new elections could be necessary.

Premier Olof Palmo's Social Democratic party, which has ruled Sweden for 41 years and set up much of its socialistic system, suffered a marked setback. The party lost six seats, but with 157 it was still the largest single party in parliament.

Complete returns of Sunday's polling left the competing coalitions with about 49 per cent of the vote apiece, the official agency said, and gave each bloc 175 seats in the 350-seat parliament.

Still to be counted are about 50,000 mail votes from Swedes living abroad and others unable to vote at polling stations. Their ballots are expected to be tallied by Wednesday.

Gas Stations Protesting Phase IV

BOSTON (AP)- Some 2,000 gas stations in Massachusetts planned to shut down Tuesday in a protest over Phase IV price controls, according to spokesmen for the station operators.

Most of the stations planned a three-day closing, but about 175 stations in the Springfield area said their shutdown would be for an indefinite period.

A spokesman for the western Massachusetts operators, Harold P. Murphy, Jr. of Springfield, said Monday a three-day protest would not be long enough.

"We want everyone to feel the squeeze," he said. "the average citizen should be able to last the three days without too much inconvenience, but we need their support. We want them to voice their support and write their congressmen."

The operators complain Phase IV price controls are forcing them to lose half a cent for every glalon of gas they sell.

"The squeeze play is on," said John Bell of Lexington, another of the shutdown organizers. "Our backs are up against the wall, and we have nothing left to resort to."

"It's time to organize," Bell said. "We're a powerful industry. We could shut down the economy in three or four days, if we stuck together."

Murphy said he spent Monday talking with station operators in western Massachusetts, "especially those operators who are hesitating or who have refused to join the boycott."

"As far as those dealers who don't close are concerned," he said, "I am quite confident they will run out of gas in just a short time because of the huge demand."

Operators of service stations appeared to agree with Murphy. Many reported long lines of cars at their stations as drivers stocked up on gas in anticipation of the threatened shutdown. "I'll run out of gas at this rate," said a station operator in western Massachusetts. "I'm on allocation, and net striking, yet I'll be penalized."

Are You Bright? Witty? Vocal?

Are you looking for an opportunity to expand your communication skills? Do you wish to learn how to persuade an audience through rational argumentation? How about a chance to earn some extra credit by participating in an activity that can further a career as lawyer, educator, businessman, engineer, doctor? The Public Debate Program provides these opportunities as well as the training necessary to make wise use of them.

This year the Public Debate Program is expanding its membership drive as well as its plans for speaking activities. Tentative plans include debates and workshops in high schools around the state, a public debate tour of other colleges in New England and some radio-TV debate both on and off campus.

In the past, the PDP has argued such issues as the justification of busing to achieve integration, national health insurance, the legalization of marijuana and the legalization of prostitution.

For further details about the program, come to room 174 in the Campus Center, Thursday at 7:30 p.m. or contact Dick Shoen at 545-2055.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You may not be interpreting wishes of those close to you in a correct manner. Key is to see with clarity. Don't project your own desires. Permit loved ones to be independent. By loosening ties, you actually strengthen them. You will know!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Be cautious in connection with what you tell, buy or sell. Means a bit of care now can save money and embarrassment. Aquarius, Leo and Scorpio individuals could play important roles. Mate, partner does not have clear financial picture.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You will have fun, even though some "great expectations" may not be entirely fulfilled. Be ready for stimulating dialogue, a clash of ideas. You will be vibrant and especially attractive to opposite sex.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): What is subdued may start "making noise." You arrive at destination in sense that family affair is settled. Taurus, Libra persons are apt to be involved. Avoid excess--moderation now is a real ally. Know it; act accordingly.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Avoid fooling yourself. Pisces, Virgo persons appear to be in picture. Face facts as they exist. Truth can make you strong. Realize it and do something about it. Love and "mixed up" feeling seem now to blend. You will comprehend!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Results occur--past efforts bloom. There is opposition but you emerge victorious. Heavier responsibility leads now to greater rewards. You are due for recognition. Older individual will open doors.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Finish rather than begin--deal with Aries individual. Accent is on potential, expression of emotions, ability to articulate feelings. Find better ways of distributing product. Display. Let others become aware--of you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Highlight independence, originality. Imprint your own mark. Don't be led--and check temptation to imitate. Bring forth creative resources. One close to you who talks about expenses is merely fishing. Know it and don't worry!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may not be seeing too clearly. Hold back. You need not make definite commitment. Situation is subject to change. You may be getting more--or less--than you expected. Emphasis is on joint effort, partnership, marriage. Pisces is in picture.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be with persons who share your interests. There will be work changes, revisions. You will need allies. Start building bridges of social contacts. Being alone and gloomy is not the answer. Make known your views.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You may have to do some remodeling. What appeared to suffice may lack solid base. Reconstruction is a necessity. Taking others for granted would be error. Double-check. Leo and Scorpio persons could be involved.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): One in authority may be uncertain. Professional associate could be sincere but misinformed. Be analytical. Do your own checking. Obtain hint from Aquarius message. Gemini, Virgo persons figure prominently.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are somewhat headstrong, independent, perceptive and analytical. You are concerned with medicine, law, theater. You express yourself in direct, dynamic manner. You associate with Aries, Libra persons. Basic charge, travel is likely to occur in December. You know plenty about health. Your views on most subjects are unorthodox.

"Battle Of The Sexes"

BJ Readies For Showdown

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

HOUSTON (AP) — Like Greta Garbo, Billie Jean King wants to be alone.

Once one of the most outgoing and ebullient personalities in tennis, the 29-year-old Wimbledon champion has gone into a shell in preparation for her $100,000 winner-take-all match with 55-year-old Bobby Riggs at the Astrodome Thursday night.

"No private interviews-no personal appearances," was Billie Jean's edict after arriving on the scene for the socalled "Battle of the Sexes."

Before going behind her own private bamboo curtain, Billie Jean told the world that she was feeling fine, that she loved pressure matches and that she was ready for her match against the aging hustler from Newport Beach, Calif.

"I don't have leukemia, hepatitis or hypoglycemia," she said. "I am fine. I feel great."

To prove it, she submitted to two singles matches Monday in the women's tour tournament and indicated she might play a third Tuesday before taking off to prepare for Thursday night's $2-million spectacular.

There has been concern over Billie Jean's physical condition since she pulled out of a third-round match in the recent U.S. Open at Forest Hills, N.Y., and returned to her Hilton Head, S.C., base to undergo a series of tests.

Doctors reported that she had low blood sugar, probably as a result of some kind of virus, and that she might be subject to tiring in intense heat or in a prolonged match. The duel with Riggs will be the best-of-five sets.

"The doctors tell me that I had a bad cold and I am now over it," Billie Jean said. "Both mentally and physically I will be in top shape for Riggs."

Billie Jean said upon arrival that the match was not a contest between man and woman but between King and Riggs.

"I just plan to prove that I can beat him," she said.

Meanwhile, Riggs has gone out of the way to help promote the match. He has played four newsmen at a time, taken on the entire Rice University tennis team and engaged in matches with chairs on the court while dressed in an overcoat and carrying an umbrella-old hustling tricks of his.

Women CCers Topple Falmouth

By TOM DERDERIAN

The UMass women's cross-country club won the first major cross-country meet of the season Sunday in the fields behind WOPE and in the orchard area. Scoring a low 22 points compared to the Falmouth T.C.'s close 33 the Sugarloaf Mt. Club (combined with the UMass Women's T.C. under the same A.A.U. charter) placed all of its runners in the top 9 of the 3 mile open race.

Senior Charlotte Lettis won the race easily by 75 seconds over teammate Kathy Kelly of Granby, Mass. Merry Cushing, a UMass Grad, placed 4th, while Lynda Laakso and sophomore Marianne Wilcox placed 6th and 9th.

Mary Biagioni of the Somerville Track Club won the 2 mile novice race from freshman Judy Kline. Kline had the race well in control until she lost her shoe in the mud a half mile from the finish. She finished carrying one muddy shoe 5 seconds behind.

The Sugarloaf team will compete again next week in Cambridge. The team is open to any women in the area. There are no team cuts and practices are held only twice per week.

Forty-one women ran these races and 40 finished.

Pro Blackout Era Ends

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The National Football League has begun the era of the blackout ban to the accomplishment of a bedsheet proclamation expressing the attitude of some fans and underscoring the concern of the league.

"Will Swap Two Season Tickets, Umbrella and Steeler Pennant For One Color TV," read a banner at Pittsburgh's Three Rivers Stadium as the NFL season opened Sunday under a congressional ban of blackouts in local areas of games that were sold out 72 hours in advance.

And a lot of ticket holders agreed with the banners, staying home and watching the games on television.

Nine games were affected by the ban, and the NFL said Monday those contests totaled 49,313 "no-shows"-tickets distributed which were not used.

NFL Commissioner Pete Rozele said he was not surprised at the number of ticket holders who stayed away Sunday and predicted that the figure would grow as the season progressed.

"We will not go out of our way to prove our point," said Rozelle. "All we can do is develop the figures and prove what we have been saying all along."

What Rozelle has been saying about the lifting of the blackout is "potentially this could be the biggest threat in the history of pro football."

The owner, Leonard Tose of the Philadelphia Eagles, who had 4,617 no-shows, said he planned to do something about the "threat." "I can't do anything but live up to the letter of the law," said Tose, who added that he will sell seats with obstructed views and will not allow another home telecast of a home game unless every seat is sold. Obstructed seats normally do not figure in sellouts.

But a question about the validity of the no-show figures was raised Monday by Sen. John O. Pastore, D.-R.I., one of the major sponsors of the legislation prohibiting local blackouts.

"How many of those tickets are in the hands of scalpers?" Pastore wondered. And, he added, if the NFL is going to make a point about the no-shows, "I want to see the rosters of these people who buy big blocks of tickets."

An NFL spokesman said the league had no further comment on the matter of no-shows.

As for scalpers, at least one was unhappy.

"If the game hadn't been televised here, a $6 seat would have brought at least $12," said one young "businessman" outside New York's Yankee Stadium. "Today, if I'm lucky, I'll get $10 for a $6 seat."

Kelliher Accepts His Stand-By Role

By STEVE CROWE

It's back to the bench for junior quarterback Freddie Kelliher, unexpected hero of the UMass 21-20 victory over Villanova Saturday. Ashes to ashes, dust to dust and from whence he came returns Kelliher now that Peil Pennington is healthy again.

But Kelliher, the lean junior from Abington, Mass where he was All-Scholastic, has no complaints.

"I wasn't expecting to play Saturday and I only did because Peil got hurt," he said yesterday at practice. "I knew then that when Peil came back, I would come out."

Kelliher took over the helm of the UMass offense at the beginning of the fourth quarter after Pennington left the game on the last play of the third quarter. He led the team on a 72 yard drive and a touchdown, showing much more poise than anyone expected of him, converting on several crucial third and fourth down situations.

A lack of experience playing varsity football should affect a rookie's performance, but Kelliher, a rookie himself, was not handicapped. "Completing the first pass is really important," he said, "Once you get that first one out of the way, you know you can do the job."

Kelliher's first pass was not complete. In fact, it was blocked.

"That didn't bother me," Kelliher said, "because I had my receiver wide open and I knew I could hit him next time."

It wasn't until after the big fourth down and fifteen play that Kelliher knew he was going to win the game. That was when Bob Wolfe made a fine catch on the 5 yd. line.

How did the pressure affect Kelliher at that moment when he would become either the hero or the goat of the game? He said, later, that he had no time to think about it. UMass had to win; that's all he thought about. (Not a very exciting reply for a writer who likes to glorify a tense moment like that.)

With Coach Dick MacPherson calling almost all the plays, Kelliher completed the drive with a touchdown pass to Bill Wolfe in the endzone. And before anyone could really get settled down, he came back with the same play for the two point conversion.

So ends the most exciting day in the sports life of Freddie Kelliher. What will happen to him now?

I hope I can make the coaches believe that I can do the job when they need me," he said.

Will Fred Kelliher assume the role of Super Sub that Mark Tripuka held last season, taking over the reigns when Pennington has a bad day?

"I hope not," said Coach MacPherson. "We have to think positively that Peil will do the job. If Peil is going bad, then we will make a change."

If and when that day comes, Fred Kelliher will be ready to prove that Saturday's performance was no fluke.

USC Again Tops Pigskin Poll

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
Associated Press Sports Writer

Nebraska, Ohio State and Alabama lined up Monday to challenge Southern California for the No. 1 spot in The Associated Press college football poll.

The Trojans of Southern Cal, who have been No. 1 since the first week of 1972, opened their season by blanking Arkansas 17-0 Saturday night and earned 38 first-place votes and 1,106 points from the 60 sports writers and broadcasters who participated in this week's poll.

Nebraska, idle the past weekend, and Ohio State, a 56-7 winner over Minnesota, held onto the No. 2-3 positions. Nebraska received eight first-place votes and 995 points while the Buckeyes garnered 11 votes for the top spot and 944 points.

Alabama rose from sixth to fourth, thanks to a 66-0 rout of California. The Crimson Tide received two first-place votes and 809 points.

Michigan remained in fifth place with 666 points following a 31-7 triumph over Iowa. Texas, which doesn't open its season until Friday night, dropped from fourth to sixth with 615 points.

The other first-place vote-and 588 points-went to Penn State, which throttled Stanford 20-6.

Braves Win 7-0; Aaron Runs 711th

ATLANTA (AP)- Hank Aaron blasted his 711th career homer, moving him three short of Babe Ruth's career mark, Dave Johnson smashed his 42nd homer of the year two batters later to tie Rogers Hornsby's record for homers by a second baseman in a season and the Atlanta Braves smothered the San Diego Padres 7-0 Monday night.

Aaron led off the eighth by stroking Gary Ross's 0-1 pitch just inside the left-field foul pole for his 38th homer of the 1973 baseball season.

Dusty Baker then followed with a triple before Johnson unloaded his 42nd homer, the major league high, over the left field fence.

Johnson's blast tied the immortal Hornsby who set his mark in the 1922 season while playing for the St. Louis Cardinals.

Those blasts, plus Marty Perez eighth homer in the sixth, helped Carl Morton, 13-10, who held the Padres to 10 hits, to the complete game victory.

Perez' solo blast broke up a scoreless pitching duel between Morton, 13-10, and Randy Jones, 5-5 and triggerred the Braves to a four-run inning.

Baker had a run-scoring single and Mike Lum a two-run double in the rally.

Expos Win Again!

MONTREAL (AP)- Felipe Alou's two-out pinch single tied the score and then Alou scored Montreal's winner on a weird pinch single by Ron Woods, lifting the Expos to a 5-4 victory over St. Louis in the first game of a twi-night doubleheader Monday.

"One For The Almighty"

A Gift From God - Whether you're into sex, dope, poetry, or the Chancellor's office...whether it's pinball or the coffee shop at 2, or a sweet kiss at 3:00, and a death in the family at 4, life is structured organized, and hopefully somewhat systematic...Don't feed such horseshit to the Villanova Wildcats...You might find yourself meeting that 4 o'clock appointment...

No, by any stretch of the foreboding imagination, it shouldn't have happened. It was a gift from heaven, one of those ecclesiastical epilogues like the time Paul met God on the road to Damascus. The meeting shouldn't have taken place...But after, Paul saw the light and the entire course of Christianity was altered. But that was fate...Saturday afternoon was sheer fantacy...It was a fake.

The University of Massachusetts Minutemen are an 0-2 football team. They know it, I know it, but the Villanova Wildcats must live with the thought that they're not. No, the WUMV-TV cameras didn't have the best view of the game; God, in his eternal press box did...And like the Greco-Roman Augustus with his thumb either up or down on the defenseless Christians, God decided to give the Minutemen a break...I'm glad he did.

First, it was the miracle of Pennington. Peil's injury was to be perhaps the best thing that will happen to the UMass football program this season. Well Peil, if you were on the field at the end of this one, Massachusetts would be 0-2 for sure. We couldn't have won with you...But without you, we gave God a chance to get active in our program...Enter Kid Kelliher...(God huddles with Paul and Peter and brags of how his intercession will help Mass. get back to the Boardwalk Bowl)...Jesus freaks laugh at the thought...

And so Kelliher and the Wolfpack went to work. God got into the act and Kelliher and the Wolfes into the headlines. But there was more. The no-names were not through. And in a season governed by fate, regimentation, inches, and the Almighty himself, the Villanova parody became even more ridiculous...Enter Jimmy Torrance...(The Jesus freaks are now roaring with laughter, but God has different plans for Jimmy...He's decided to make him a star)...By God, he did...

And so, let's go back to Pope Julius and the Sistine Chapel...A tiny little Italian artisan, in the corner of a precious buttress of the Chapel of God, labored for months to produce a product only he could appreciate...Amidst the grandeur of the House of God, his artistry goes seemingly unnoticed. And so, like the incognito artist of Roma...Jimmy Torrance received his calling...And only Jimmy knows the truth...(accept for the Almighty himself).

It was fourth and 17, the season, the Boardwalk Bowl, ABC TV, money, the success of '73...Without this play, the Aggies were sure to finish 6-5 with a weak win over Maine this week and long faces at Harvard, Rutgers, and total, and I mean total HUMILIATION at Boston "show me the scoreboard" College...God love you Freddie Kelliher.

It was a Bob Lord play, a juggling reception by Wolfe, but a corner sealed by Torrance that made God a hero...But we'll take it. "Kelliher to his left...Berra's double covered...This is Wolfe...First down at the five...listen to the crowd"...

Torrance...the block...Kelliher the throw...The Wolfe Bros...the endzone...And in a frustrating performance, a time that shouldn't have been, only the Almighty himself can take a bow...

Harriers Open—Seek 4th Crown

By SCOTT HAYES

Yankee Conference champions for the past three years, the UMass Cross Country team will be after a Conference record fourth straight title when their season begins this September 29th.

Coach Ken O'Brien's harriers will be led by junior co-captains Bill Gillin and Randy Thomas. Thomas and Gillin finished fourth and fifth respectively in the New England championships last year, while the team wound up second.

Sophomore Tom Maguire holds the third spot on the team while Seniors Paul Segersten, Chris Chambers and Doug O'Connell occupy the next three positions.

The only other returning letterman, Tom Wilson should be the seventh man, after a fine sophomore season last year.

Coach O'Brien and his assistant, Mike Muska, hope to receive some help from an outstanding selection of freshmen runners. Among the many hopefuls are former Williston Prep runner, Chris Farmer and Gardner's Paul Doiron.

The 1973 season starts September 29 with an away meet against Boston College. Then comes what could be the most important week of the season. The Minutemen will face stiff competition, running against Providence and Harvard in a tri-meet and Northeastern four days later. Harvard and Northeastern are the "teams to beat" this season and along with Providence and UMass make up the top four teams in New England.

Co-captains Gillin and Thomas are looking forward to the big meets with Harvard and Northeastern. The last time UMass beat Harvard in cross country was way back in 1953. This year's team goal is to improve on last season's second place finish in the New England championships and tenth place IC4A finish. Improving on those finishes could make real every cross country team's dream--a trip to the NCAA national championships.

Despite Statewide Strike

Area Gas Stations Remain Open

By DEAN TUCKER

Amherst gas station owners remained open Tuesday despite pump closing of over 1000 Massachusetts retailers. Boston area dealers have been threatened with legal action by State Attorney General Robert Quinn if they refuse to begin selling gasoline.

A telephone check with several local retailers indicated that none would close. Although some station phones were not answered at all.

College Town Service Center, 161 North Pleasant St., Amherst, would not close said Joseph Berneck an employee there. He said that Monday nights business was brisk. Many motorists feared they would be unable to get gas should there be a pump shutdown.

Matthew Page, manager of L&M Exxon, College St. said, "I'm planning to stay open, that's all I want to say. Mr. Page refused to say if his facility would be forced to shut down due to shortages of gas.

A spokesman for the Amherst Service Center said it would be business as usual for his station, that he had plenty of gasoline with more on the way.

Gasland, Rte 9 will remain open also. The manager who refused to identify himself said that he was expecting a delivery of fuel this afternoon and he had enough to remain open until it arrived.

Stuart Ashley proprietor of Ashleys Shell, a popular automotive watering hole for students who live north of Amherst, said he would stay open as long as he had gas to sell. The station had received 18,000 gallons of fuel on Tuesday. "We're in the business of selling gasoline for a living, as long as we can do it at a profit we'll try to keep the public moving. Ashley claimed that Monday he had six cars at his pumps all day and could not handle the panicky drivers.

Several gas stations did not answer their phones, indicating either extreme business, or they were closed down in protest to recent Cost of Living Council profit ceilings at the retail level....or they had simply become dry gulches in the Amherst area automotive area.

Convocation

Bromery Examines Role Of Higher Ed.

By CATHERINE DONOVAN

UMass Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery spoke yesterday at the annual convocation about the present and future role of public institutions of higher education.

In his speech, which was delivered in the Campus Center Auditorium, Chancellor Bromery said that universities have an enormous task before them. He said that their task is to find a way to best serve the state, nation, and world and to create an environment which will benefit the people at large. Chancellor Bromery said that first, we must set our own house in order and address problems as they occur on this campus.

Chancellor Bromery spoke about the new governance system at UMass which still awaits effective implementation this year. He plans to work very closely with the campus governance system for sound and mutually beneficial relations with the President's office. He calls on everyone to help.

Chancellor Bromery said that we need to establish an intellectual environment "where each learns to accept and recognize our interdependencies."

Upon the conclusion of Chancellor Bromery's speech, there was a presentation of awards by Robert Gluckstern of the Academic Affairs office to distinguished teachers at UMass.

Being Gay At UMass

By JOHN HARRINGTON

At UMass, the letters SHL stand for Student Homophile League--a somewhat informal group of people who are drawn together because of one major common denominator--homosexuality. And although they are not quite yet a true league, the present members of SHL are responsible for a variety of programs and functions dealing with various aspects of being a homosexual at UMass. Among them are gay dances, counselling, and providing educational materials, such as literature and a speakers bureau.

The Student Homophile League conducts its business out of a small, one-room office on the upper level of the Student Union building. The walls of the office are lined with shelves, which hold an abundance of literature on topics from veneral disease to legal rights.

There are about twenty-five active members in SHL, "who do most of the work," according to one member substantially more usually attend the meetings.

There is currently a disagreement within the organization over what SHL's primary role should be. Some feel that it should be mainly a socially-oriented group, making it easier for gays to associate with each other. Others see the role of SHL in a more political context.

The consensus of five members this reporter talked with seemed to be that hard-core political activism is no longer necessary in this area. They agreed that wanton attacks on homosexuals and police harassment are not problems at UMass, as they are in Boston and other places. However, SHL members described other problems of a more subtle nature.

They said that sterotyping of gay people by the straight heterosexual community is a major problem here. One male member said that many heterosexuals still have an image of gays as being "swishy" and effeminate. This is sometimes true, he said, but is by no means the norm.

SHL considers guerilla theater as one means of breaking the sterotypes, although plans for this activity in the future are unclear. One member, Julie Rosenthal, believes that guerilla theater productions in public places will, through their shock value, make straights realize that gays are humans like everyone else.

A prevalent problem, according to one SHL member, is fear of the homosexual. He maintains that sexual attacks and fear of rape are basically a heterosexual problem, not a homosexual one. Several members laughed at the notion of gays using peep holes in toilet stalls, hanging around rest rooms, and so forth.

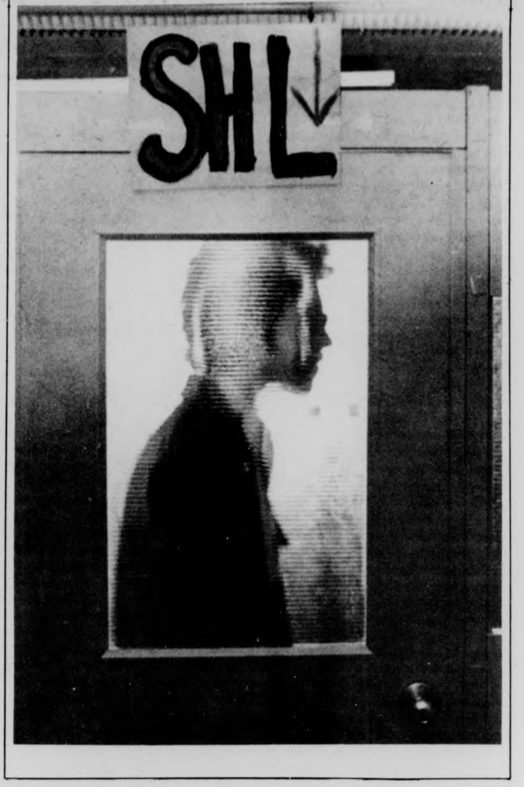
What does SHL plan for the coming year? One major project will be the drive to establish a gay community center. The concept behind this idea is that gays need someplace accessible where they can drop in, be it socially, or for help in dealing with any problems which may occur.

Establishment of such a center will not be without problems. Space on campus is getting harder to find. Although SHL says that it's present budget of $750 is sufficient, more activities in the future will require more money. The present budget is appropriated to SHL by the Student Senate, from the Student Activities Tax Fund (SATF). All undergraduates pay a compulsory student activities tax each semester.

Already under way is a "gay line" open to anyone who wishes to call the SHL office to talk with someone. McKeon cautions that this is not a "hot line", for that implies desperation, and that there is something wrong with being gay.

Also in the planning stages is a weekly half-hour program on radio station WMUA, aimed at the gay community, as well as an association of gay University employees. The employees association though is far from being a reality.

A consistent theme of SHL for the past couple of years has been "coming out of the closet." SHL says that it is not trying to convert anyone, but that there are people having trouble dealing with the reality of their own homosexuality.



Veterans At UMass

High Costs, Late Checks Source Of Hassles

By MARK B. CITRON

Military veterans at UMass have only one real problem with the money the U.S. government is giving them--holding onto it.

A Collegian survey this week showed these problems for the over 2,200 vets on campus:

---High costs at UMass.

---GI Bill checks late or missing

---Claims of "fiscally irresponsible" vets

---New federal legislation extending benefits going un-noticed and un-collected.

But all is not lost. New programs, money and a new director of the Veterans Affairs Office are now in the workings.

A recent study of selected land grant colleges ranked UMass the most expensive of all schools surveyed. The study, published by the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges, showed of the $220 current monthly GI Bill allotment-the amount that goes to full-time student, single vets-$206.11 at UMass is spent on "living funds". This was equaled only by U Illinois and can be contrasted to the $111.11 spent at Penn State U or $128.77 at UMich.

While high financial costs continue to be a problem, it pales in the face of showing up for registration penniless. For a vet who doesn't receive his monthly allotment check, this could be his September fate. A new "Advanced Payment" program was implemented this Fall to solve this problem. The system allows vets to pick up their first two months of benefits in one check at the time of registration. But the system still has some bugs, and many vets ended up at registration checkless.

Arthur Shelley, Special Assistant for Veterans Affairs, cited two problems as transfer students getting their checks late and many checks ending up at UMass Boston.

These problems echo Shelley's warning in a letter sent out to vets last summer. Shelley called the new system "untested" and "subject to. . .errors." Shelley cited the "tremendous amount of red-tape within a bureaucratic system such as the Veterans Administration" as a source of errors and "Pre-enrollment System", where vets would get their checks mailed to their home each month.

The letter also contained a warning to vets who "don't normally budget their money well". Shelley feared that vets would spend their two month allotment before they got their November check. Shelley repeated this sentiment in an interview yesterday:

"Some (veterans) spend their money too quickly. . .they come (here) from the service environment where everything is taken care of. . .and expect to be spoon fed."

Shelley said that while his office only sees the problems, many vets are "fiscally irresponsible".

Though vets-are out of the service, the government has not forgotten them. New legislation concerning job programs, loans and especially medical care, has made the veterans benefit picture complex and demanding a great deal of communication explaining to veterans what is available.

The communication problem is brought to the university level as administrators are often ignorant of new programs. Shelley explained that, "Veterans get hurt often because university people don't keep informed on legislation."

Taking advantage of this new legislation, UMass has recently received a grant of approximately $92,000 to set up an independent veterans office. Shelley said the money, from the Federal Government, will be used for such things as work study projects, job programs, and academic assistance projects.

Programs already underway includes:

--A job bank, headed by John Petell, where over 100 vets have been placed in part-time jobs.

--A special advisor in the Financial Aide office to handle veterans, headed by John Warlick.

The Veterans Affairs office itself will soon have a new chief. Arthur Shelley is leaving the job to attend Amherst College, and a search committee to find a successor has narrowed down the 40 applicants to two. Shelley said that within the next two weeks a new director should be announced.

Six Dorms Without Mail-Sorting Services

Six dorms have been without mail-sorting services for two weeks, but the Central Mailing Office says it will send help soon.

Gene St. Germaine, from Central Mailing, said yesterday that recent personnel changes in the Financial Aid Office have slowed the process of giving work-study students the mail-sorting jobs.

He adds that if necessary some of his own personnel will be sent to the dorms until students are assigned.

Last Tuesday forty Gorman residents burned a symbolic mail bag in protest of their counselors having to sort mail instead of work-study aides.

"We didn't burn the bag to offend anybody, but to dramatize the situation," said a drom spokesperson.

He added that counselors are not normally allowed to handle the mail.

Other dorms presently affected by the tie-up are Baker, Dwight, Lewis, Johnson and Thatcher.

Sylan Radio Seeks More Women, Minorities

"And Please, No Top 40."

By SHARON HUGHES

"There is no need to identify every song - read a yellow Zonkers box instead. And please, no "Top 40". Those are instructions to disc jockeys at WSYL 97-7, the radio station, in Sylvan.

"Right now we're trying for a diversity in programming and would welcome more women and minority group representatives" said President of the Sylvan Area Gov't Mickey Harris. "Interested persons should contact me sometime this week."

Students run the station, and are the disc jockeys, engineers and the music directors. So far, only residents of the Sylvan area are eligible to work, but the area government may allow out-of-the-area disc jockeys in January.

Most of the equipment was built last semester by Bob Nystrom, a student and chief engineer of the radio station. The Sylvan area government partially reimbursed Nystrom for his efforts.

Although the area government initially funded the equipment at the station, it has made no financial provisions for buying albums. The record collection so far is about the size of any two music listerners' on campus. Contributions are welcome and, as a matter of fact, the station's whole collection has been acquired through contributions. Sometimes disc jockeys bring their private collection in for broadcast.

Harris is in the process of contacting distributors from major record companies for free albums (promos) or if they can't get promos, Harris will try for a substantial discount from record companies.

However, Harris anticipates refusal from the companies because SYL is not licensed by the Federal Communications Commission. SYL is called a "flea power" station because its relatively unsophisticated equipment does not meet FCC standards.

Broadcasting at 100 milliwatts, it's not considered a very powerful station either. But its exceptional location allows greater reception than is usual for a similarly powered station.

"We have a potential listening audience of 16,000 from the campus to Sunderland. For this reason we're hoping to solicit funds from the Student Senate", said Harris.

Hate D.C. Food? Then Vote On It!

By M.J. MEYERS

UMass students will vote on a food service referendum today in an attempt to measure public sentiment toward the University Food Services Department.

The referendum, to be held at all four dining commons on campus during the evening meal, will include options other than those of a three entree menu with no seconds on the entree or a one entree menu with seconds on everything, according to Rick Savini, chairperson of the Student Senate's Rents and Fees Committee. Students will also be given a choice to vote whether they would prefer to: 1) buy a meal ticket, if given a choice; 2) pay a flat rate for the cost of the dining commons buildings, but not for the food and its preparation; 3) pay more money and return to the food and service of last year; and 4) buy another set of tickets for seconds.

The option of paying a flat fee for the dining commons buildings would put the Food Services Department, as it is now known, out of business.

"This is 100 per cent more explosive than the parking issue could ever be," said Savini. "It's really important that people make their options known," he added, "not just to themselves, but it's important to the other students."

The ballots will include a place for the students to designate their sex. "According to mail response, the male wants all the food he can eat while the female wants a choice," Savini explained.

Originally, the referendum was to include only two options--that of having a three entree menu with a no-seconds policy on the entree, or a one entree menu with seconds. The other options were added because "we (student government) haven't really felt students out in terms of the meal ticket," Savini said.

Guards Shifted To Enforce Parking

By CINDY ROGERS

The enforcement of the new stricter parking regulations has resulted in the switching of 10 night security guards to the day shift.

David Johnson, director of UMass Security Division, said this will now double the manpower to tow as well as to ticket illegally parked and unregistered cars. He also said in a MDC interview these 10 people who had previously patrolled the academic building and the areas around the dorms will be substituted by police officers in foot and in cars.

The Security Division views the parking situation as having a high priority, especially during its initial phase. Saul Chafin, assistant director, explained that "the added men are necessary to insure that the new parking plan is able to get off the ground." He added that success of the program can already be seen even with the limited enforcement that will continue until Oct. 1. The added manpower has helped in educating motorists to the new rules and giving out warnings and tickets to the illegally parked cars.

However, the dorm areas that depend on the added night security, paid by the Security Division, will now have to use allocated security money to double up on student security especially during the early morning hours.

Agnew Refuses Comment On Resignation

By RICHARD PYLE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Vice President Spiro T. Agnew refused comment Tuesday on reports he may resign as a result of involvement in a Maryland political corruption probe.

But Agnew's office said no such move was expectable.

Agnew, leaving a luncheon he gave for visiting Pakistani Prime Minister Ali Bhutto, was confronted by waiting newsmen and asked about a report that he was considering resigning, possibly by week's end.

"Gentlemen, as you know it is my practice not to comment on stories from undisclosed sources," Agnew said.

Republican sources, meanwhile, named Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., as the senior GOP figure with whom Agnew was said to have discussed recently the possibility of resigning and who told the Washington Post he was "99½ per cent sure that he would resign - probably by the end of the week."

But in New York, Goldwater denied this and said he hadn't spoken in months to the Post reporter whose story touched off the furor.

Of Agnew, he said, "I don't think he's going to quit. My hunch is that he's going to stay." Goldwater said Agnew was a close political and social friend who he has seen often recently but that the subject of resignation has not risen.

"If it did, I would advise him to fight it out," Goldwater said.

The White House refused comment on the matter.

But a source familiar with Agnew's thinking said he believed a serious misunderstanding led to the report.

He said he believed that "a bad overreading of something Agnew might have toyed with" led to the story.

"The source of the story apparently caught Agnew in a moment of reflection and came away with the impression that this was going to happen," the Agnew associate said. "Agnew is a man under siege, and therefore is highly susceptible to being misinterpreted in what he says."

J. Marsh Thomson, Agnew's press spokesman, declined to deny the Post story flatly, but characterized it as "no better a story than the rumors that have been circulating about the vice president recently."

Meanwhile, Gerald L. Warren, the deputy White House press secretary, turned aside with repeated "no comment" all inquiries about the Post story.

Warren said he was taking the no-comment stance after discussing the situation with President Nixon.

Asked if Nixon and Agnew had talked privately since their two-hour session Sept. 1, Warren said, "I don't believe so."

The Post report said the unnamed senior Republican it talked to had spent two hours with Agnew last week trying to talk him out of resigning, but was convinced that he had failed and that Agnew would step down.

The Republican was quoted as saying Agnew is determined to prove that he is innocent of the allegations leveled at him during a federal investigation of possible political graft in Maryland.

Hunt Leading Off Watergate Hearings

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate Watergate committee said Tuesday that wiretapper E. Howard Hunt will be lead off witness when televised hearings resume Monday.

The panel also called John Ragan, a former FBI man and onetime Republican security consultant, to testify about his part in attempting to wiretap the home of newspaper columnist Joseph Kraft.

The only two other witnesses named were White House speechwriter Patrick J. Buchanan and former presidential law-enforcement aide John J. Caulfield, who previously has admitted assisting in the Watergate cover-up.

Missing from the witness list were political saboteur Donald H. Segretti, who has agreed to plead guilty to four election-law violations, and Charles W. Colson, who reportedly faces indictment in the Ellsberg break-in.

The committee hopes it can hear from Segretti and former presidential counsel Colson despite their legal troubles.

Ragan's name was a surprise. He had been mentioned only once before in Watergate testimony, when former presidential counsel John W. Dean III said Caulfield told him Ragan helped tap Kraft's telephone.

Ragan, reached by telephone at his home in Massapequa, N.Y., denied tapping Kraft's phone and said he didn't know why the committee was calling him.

He said he had conducted a "feasibility study" at Kraft's home in 1969, while working as security director for the Republican National Committee. But he said he didn't know whose home it was at the time. "There was no tap," he said.

One committee source said Ragan was believed to have been involved in the Secret Service's reported wiretapping of F. Donald Nixon, the President's brother. Ragan denied that also.

Ragan's name was on an initial witness list released by Chairman Sam J. Ervin Jr., D-N.C., at a news conference following an executive session of the committee.

Senate Committee O.K.'s Kissinger For Secretary Of State

By HARRISON HUMPHRIES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)- The Senate Foreign Relations Committee Tuesday approved the nomination of Henry A. Kissinger to be secretary of State.

At the same time, the committee resolved to undertake a study of the use of wiretapping of American citizens in connection with foreign affairs.

The committee vote on Kissinger was 16-1, with only Sen. George McGovern, D-S.D., recorded against.

McGovern said his vote was a symbolic protest against "needless prolongation of the Indochina war," the secret bombings of Cambodia in 1969 and 1970 and "the 1971 tragedy of Bangladesh."

The Kissinger nomination is expected to reach the Senate floor for confirmation Thursday or Friday.

The German-born former Harvard professor is to make the opening U.S. speech to the new session of the United Nations General Assembly Monday.

Chairman J.W. Fulbright, D-Ark., said the committee's 15-0 vote for a wiretapping study should not be considered a reflection on Kissinger's role in surveillance of 13 government officials and four newsmen between May 1969, and February 1971.

A two-member subcommittee examined secretly an FBI summary of the wiretaps and concluded that Kissinger's role "was not such as to bar him from confirmation by the Senate."

Fulbright said Kissinger, in both public and private hearings before the committee, expressed abhorrence of wiretapping and determination to resist its use in the future.

Quinn Warns Dealers On Gas Station Strikes

BOSTON (AP) - Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn warned leaders of the retail gasoline industry Tuesday that he would take legal action if necessary to prevent a gasoline strike as a service station shutdown met with partial success.

Before meeting with the leaders, Quinn told a news conference he sent telegrams advising leaders that "if the retail gasoline dealer shutdown occurs as represented in the news media, I will take all necessary legal steps to prevent this action as a hardship unjustly inflicted on the consumers of the commonwealth."

He told them a strike threatens "danger, especially to users of ambulance, police, fire and safety vehicles," and he warned that consumers cannot "be caught squeezed in the middle as innocent victims of your protest."

More than 1,000 dealers in the state voted Monday night to close their stations for three days beginning Tuesday to protest Phase IV price controls.

The result was a mixture of the dry and the wet-many stations closed, or at least would not sell gas, but others remained open.

Some of those selling gas attracted lines of motorists eager to buy, and there was the possibility the increased trade would drain some stations dry.

In general, the driest areas were in the western part of the state and in suburbs west of Boston. The South Shore, southeastern part of the state and Cape Cod were not so hard hit by closings.

The American Automobile Association described closings as "spotty" and said no other New England states were affected. The Automobile Legal Association said half the stations it surveyed were closed, and that there was strong sentiment for closings in Vermont and Connecticut.

The ALA said most closed stations probably would reopen briefly, at least to sell to one customer, to fulfill two-day limits on closings it said usually were written into contracts with distributors.

The ALA said most closing were in the metropolitan areas of Boston, Worcester and Springfield. The AAA said more stations were closed than open in Boston and towns north and west of Boston, but more were open than closed south of Boston and on Cape Cod.

The AAA said all stations along the Massachusetts Turnpike were open, and that many stations that would not sell gasoline were nevertheless open for repairs and other service.

A report from Springfield said that 60 to 65 per cent of the stations in that area were closed for the sale of gas and that another 10 per cent ran out of gas to sell.

In Worcester, 39 of 59 area stations surveyed were open, but the managers of 11 of them said they might close either because they would run out of gasoline or because they had decided to join those who closed.

Robert Parsons, owner of a station in Waltham and a spokesman for dealers who voted to close, said the dealers wanted "to let the public and Washington know we cannot live with what they gave us the price ceiling.

Former Civilian POW Tries To Make It On His Own

By GORDON HANSON
Associated Press Writer

DECORAH, Iowa (AP)- Michael Kjome is fighting a life shattered by five years as a prisoner of war. His struggle is complicated by the fact that he wasn't a soldier but a civilian teacher when he was taken captive in South Vietnam.

Kjome, 37, was one of 24 civilians among the 568 POWs released this year. The soldiers had the sanctuary of a military career and related benefits awaiting them after gaining freedom. Kjome did not.

Since his release last February, Kjome has demonstrated the kind of determination that saw him through his ordeal as a Viet Cong POW.

The blend Norwegian-American, a native of Decorah, is trying to overcome years of isolation and near-starvation.

Sometimes, he says, he still wakes up with a chill in the dark of night and reaches for the chain on his ankle.

Meager rations during 1,837 days of captivity were deficient in vitamins, and Kjome says this resulted in "blind spots" in his vision which can't be corrected.

"I'd like to seek a job in education with the State Department's foreign service," he said in an interview. "But to do this, I've got to take an exam which contains a lot of questions about current events-especially of the last five years.

"I don't know these, so I've got to read and prepare."

Kjome was in the Air Force in 1956-57 and a Naval Air reservist from 1959-63. He received a degree in chemistry from Luther College here in 1964 and taught in several schools before joining a civilian agency, Los Angeles-based Pacific Architects and Engineering Inc.

The firm sent him to Vietnam to teach English and vocational subjects to South Vietnamese. He was captured eight months after arriving, on Feb. 1, 1968, during the Tet offensive.

Kjome, a bachelor, has applied for admission to the University of Minnesota's graduate school in education where he wants to spend "one quarter working toward my master's degree." Military POWs received double time toward retirement for each day they spent in captivity.

Kjome's five years as a POW were plucked from his life with no such gain.

He said he isn't hurting financially. Pacific Architects gave him back pay for his time as a POW, "quite a large sum of money which included a couple of pay raises. But no matter how much we received I certainly would have had more promotions plus Social Security benefits" if he had not gone, he said.

Court Seizes Planes From Illegal Anglers

MONTREAL (AP) - Two $40,000 planes seized from six fishermen charged with exceeding their catch will remain in the hands of the court indefinitely, it was decided here Tuesday.

Morris Fish, lawyer for the six anglers, told Mr. Justice Guy Guerin of Quebec sessions court that the seizure of the aircraft was unreasonable.

The six, all Americans from Vermont, pleaded not guilty.

It is alleged they caught 201 speckled trout in the James Bay area last weekend. They were legally limited to 25 fish a man.

Jacques Mongeau, special federal prosecutor, opposed the release of the planes. He said that such seizures, automatic under the law, were confirmed if the parties were found guilty.

There is no reason why normal procedure should not be followed "simply because two expensive planes were involved," he said.

U.A.W. Contract Seems Favorable

DETROIT (AP)-The United Auto Workers Tuesday began to sell 117,000 Chrysler production workers a new contract with key fringe benefit improvements and a first step in the area of voluntary overtime.

Chrysler plants across the country and in Canada remained shut as UAW leaders met with committeemen, officers and shop stewards from all Chrysler locals to explain the new three-year contract.

Local ratification votes are scheduled for Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Chrysler cannot resume production until they are completed.

Most of the shop stewards who attended Tuesday's union meeting predicted ratification, although some said they were upset that UAW President Leonard E. Woodcock said individual locals could not strike over local issues without headquarters' approval.

Of the 69 Chrysler plants involved in the strike, only 13 have settled contracts on local issues.

Major provisions in the contract provide for full retirement after 30 years' service and a limitation on management's right to assign overtime. Under it, a worker cannot be told to work more than nine hours a day, six days a week. In addition, each worker must be given every third Saturday off if he asks for it.

Other provisions of the package include a three per cent wage increase in each of the three years, with an additional 12 cents per hour in the first year; a revised cost of living formula that will boost the payment 17 per cent; a company-paid dental plan beginning in the second year, and a longer uninterrupted holiday during the Christmas-New Year season.

UAW officials called the package a major American labor breakthrough and said they will not ask for any better package from Ford or General Motors.

Traditionally, the union has tried to win a slightly better agreement from the remaining two members of the Big Three U.S. auto makers after winning its pattern agreement.

Sources said Ford is next on the union's list.

The union struck Chrysler at midnight Friday to back up its contract demands. The settlement was announced 63 hours later.

Chrysler announced Tuesday it is raising car and truck prices an average of $72.80 to cover the increased costs of labor and materials, but said the hike does not reflect the cost of the new contract.

35 Countries Open Security Conference

By CARL HARTMAN
Associated Press Writer

GENEVA (AP)-An East-West conflict over increased contacts across the Iron Curtain arose Tuesday almost as soon as the United States, the Soviet Union and 33 other countries met to write new accords on security and cooperation.

The meeting, opening the substantive phase of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, began with a brief public session in Geneva's new International Conference Center. Then the delegates met in three committees behind closed doors.

The trouble started in the third committee, which deals with "cooperation in humanitarian and other fields."

The Soviets and their allies wanted to start the talk on some general statements that the Western delegations consider to be just a preamble. The West wanted to get some specific agreements drafted first.

The Western position won support from one neutral, Austria. But the conflict remained unresolved.

Western delegates thought V. Dubinin of the Soviet Union and other East European delegates may be trying to do two things:

-Stall the talks on human contacts until they get a head start on matters that interest them more, such as a statement on the inviolability of frontiers.

-Keep any agreements on human contacts as vague as possible, lest discussions get too close to the subject of Soviet dissidents and the way they are treated. It was announced that for the first time in a meeting of this kind, a delegation from the executive commission of the European Common Market will take part in drafting economic agreements. Since the commission speaks for the nine Common Market nations as a group, its participation is considered a significant step toward West European unity. The Soviets, who had long pressed for a European security conference, want results by the end of this year. Western delegates think it will be February or March before any agreements are in shape for signature.

Advertising Controls Planned By Alcohol Commission

By SETH MYDANS
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) - A group of newspaper publishers is battling plans by the Alcoholic Beverages Control Commission to issue stiff new regulations against advertising liquor prices.

The ABCC argues that advertising of competitive prices is driving small stores out of business and ruining the industry.

In a running dispute, the Massachusetts Newspaper Publishers Association charges that the restrictions would knock out a legitimate form of advertising for newspapers, and would deny the public's "right to know."

"There's no reason why legitimate advertising for a product that is for sale shouldn't be allowed," says John R. Herbert, executive secretary of the MNPA.

The three commissioners of the ABCC disagree.

"The mama and papa liquor store was getting clobbered" by competition from big stores that buy in bulk and sell cheaply, says Commissioner A. Ernest Zangrilli.

The new regulations would prohibit any mention of prices in liquor advertisements, except by the manufacturer of a brand name.

Herbert argues that "in a free market the public has a right to know what the going price of a product is."

"The great fear is that this kind of philosophy could go into the whole field of merchandising," greatly restricting advertising, Herbert says.

But Commissioner Stanley R. Lapon says the liquor industry is an unusual one. From the point of view of the commissioners "The major purpose of the industry is giving revenue to the Commonwealth" through taxes, he says.

To that end, he sees it as the duty of the ABCC to insure a healthy industry, even at the expense of a free market and unrestricted advertising.

But when pressed as to how restrictions on letting the industry run free would gain more revenue for the state, Lapon said, "The arguments for and against price advertising do balance out equally, and we believe we can then make an administrative decision."

He was not specific as to why the commission made the administrative decision it did.

The dispute between the ABCC and the MNPA goes back to January, when the commission sent a letter to all wholesalers and importers stating that the commission "now offers a set of policies . . .that it will adhere to and enforce with uniformity and consistency."

Heating Oil Supplies Look Good For Winter

By JERRY HARKAVY
Associated Press Writer

PORTLAND, Maine (AP)- Heating oil supplies will probably be sufficient during the coming winter, an official of the Nixon administration's voluntary fuel allocation program predicted Tuesday.

While acknowledging that there's no way to guarantee an adequate supply, John H. Smithson of the Office of Oil & Gas said that barring an unusually cold winter, "I think we will squeak through."

Smithson appeared at a news conference following a meeting of the Maine Oil Dealers Association.

Newsmen were barred from the meeting, but an association spokesman said the group urged the federal government to shift to a mandatory fuel allocation program and revise some Phase 4 regulations.

Smithson told newsmen that the voluntry allocation program was "not working very well," primarily because the major oil companies were naturally reluctant to break their existing contracts in order to supply the independents.

He said the nation would probably have to import 500,000 to 750,000 barrels of heating oil a day during the coming winter, comparied to 200,000 during the same time last year.

"If we have an unusually cold winter, those figures will have to be higher," he said.

In the event of a fuel shortage, said Smithson, homeowners, hospitals and farmers and food processors would have top priority on existing supplies.

Association President Ronnell F. Harris said Maine oil dealers were considering a series of advertisements aimed at encouraging oil users to take conservation measures.

He mentioned lowering thermostat settings; insulating buildings and installing storm windows, and making sure that fireplace flues and hot water faucets are shut.

Neither Harris nor Robert A. Flynn, the association's managing director, would speculate on possible increases in heating oil prices.

The price for No. 2 oil in the Portland area is around 21 and 22 cents a gallon, and there has been speculation that it would climb to 25 cents by the end of the winter.

Flynn said supply problems may be a particular problem for owners of Maine's 3,000 new mobile homes, many of which are heated with kerosene.

Smithson said a tight oil supply situation would be a fact of life for at least the next three years, until new refineries and pipelines can be constructed.

Delta Crash Details Released

Faculty Equipment?

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer

PEABODY, Mass. (AP)-The pilot of a Delta Airlines jetliner that crashed in Boston killing 88 persons said he distrusted his instrument landing equipment seconds before the plane slammed into a seawall, according to a transcript released Tuesday.

The transcript of the plane's cockpit voice recorder was released during the opening session of a National Transportation Safety Board hearing into the circumstances of the crash July 31 at Logan International Airport.

According to the transcript, the plane's first officer, Sidney Burrill, said "This censored control bar shows..." as his voice became garbled. The control bar is a needle on the instrument that tells the pilot whether he is on course and at the proper altitude.

Then, 25 seconds before impact, the pilot, John N. Streil, said "You'd better go to raw data. I don't trust that thing."

Raw data consists of backup equipment that provides information similar to that of the control bar.

Fifteen seconds later, the first officer said "I just gotta get this back." Then there was a shout, and the plane crashed at the end of Runway 4-R, where it ends at the seawall at the edge of Boston Harbor.

Last month, the board said the jetliner had a three-month history of radio and flight instrument problems. "Many of these complaints were of a recurring or chronic nature," the board said.

The chief investigator of the crash, Arnold E. Holstine, said a pilot observer was sitting in the cockpit but had been instructed by the airline not to participate in the conduct of the flight.

However, according to the transcript, the observer appeared to be reading a checklist of flight routine.

Holstine said there was no evidence of pre-existing structural damage to the plane or control malfunction, nor was there a fire before the crash.

He said the engines appeared normal.

The plane's wreckage was not discovered until several minutes after it crashed at the end of the fog-covered runway.

The chief of the airport fire department, Charles T. Arena, said he was told of the accident by a construction worker at 11:14-six minutes after the crash.

Apparently no one was the impact because of the fog, but a truck driver unloading at a dock across the harbor said he saw the plane as it approached the runway.

"His nose was down," said the driver, Thomas N. Karakoudas. "It wasn't a nosedive, but it was down."

The plane was about 200 feet off the ground, he said, "so low I could see the rivets on the plane."

An air traffic controller who handled all but the plane's landing said the flight from Manchester, N.H., to Boston was normal.

"It was routine," said Charles M. Taylor. As the plane neared the airport, "Delta asked me if it was cleared for approach. I said 'yes'."

"Pilot acknowledged with something like 'yeah' or 'okay'," he said. "I turned it over to the tower, and that was the last time that I worked the aircraft."

Taylor said he did not give the Delta flight as much attention as he ordinarily would have because he was preoccupied with separating two other airliners that were mistakenly flying at the same altitude.

Under questioning from a Delta lawyer, Taylor said that because of the two other planes, he did not fulfill as usual some of the routine for bringing in the doomed Delta jet.

He said he did not give the plane its approach clearing at the usual time, nor did he tell it to contact the control tower when it was 5-1/2 miles from touchdown, as he ordinarily would have.

However, Taylor maintained that he gave the Delta jet all the information that was needed.

"Delta was not problem," Taylor said. "He had the option to go around, hold, or execute a misapproach."

Pre-Crash Transcript

PEABODY, Mass. (AP)- A transcript of cockpit conversation aboard a Delta jetliner that crashed July 31, killing 88 persons, was released Tuesday by the National Transportation Safety Board.

Aboard the plane, which crashed at Logan International Airport in Boston, were the captain, John N. Streil, the first officer, Sidney W. Burrill, and an observer, Joseph E. Burrell.

The board censored apparent profanity from the transcript, and garbled speech is indicated by a question mark.

Here is a partial transcript of the final minutes of the flight before impact:

1106:33.5 1st officer-"Checklist."

1106:43.5 Observer-"Three green, pressure and quantity." Captain-"Get on it Joe, ah, Sid."

1106:47.5 1st officer-"Gettin' down ah thousand feet a minute."

1106:50.5 Captain - "Leave it below one ? "

1107:05.0 1st officer-"This censored command bar shows ? " Observer-"Before landing...before landing is complete." Captain-"Yeah, That doesn't show much."

1107:14.0-Approach controller-"Seven two three is cleared to land, Tower one nineteen one."

1107:14.5 Sound of stabilizer in-motion warning horn.

1107:17.0 Captain on radio-"Seven two three."

1107:19.0 Captain-"Going like a censored."

1107:21.5 Observer-"Oh my God."

1107:28.0 Captain-"Okay, your localizer startin' to come back in now." Unidentified radio voice-"All right." 1st officer-"Okay."

1107:35.0 1st officer-"set my power up for me if I want it."

1107:37.0 Sound of heavy click.

1107:38.0 Captain-"Okay, just fly the airplane."

1107:40.0-Captain-"You better go to raw data. I don't trust that thing."

1107:43.0-Captain on radio-"And Boston Tower, Delta seven two three final."

1107:45.5 Tower-"Cleared to land four right. Traffic's clearin' at the end. The RVR shows more than six thousand. A fog bank is movin' in. it's pretty heavy across the approach end."

-On Sept. 13 the pet boa constrictor of a UMass student who lives on South East St. slithered quietly down the stairs and across the lawn and across the street. Never to return. Some students have reported hearing slithering noises around the campus pond. Or is that just the pipe they use to transport the drinking water to Worcester Dining Commons?

Banks Raise Prime Rate

NEW YORK (AP)-A record high 10 per cent prime rate became virtually industrywide yesterday as more banks raised their prime by 1/4 per centage point., a move begun late last week by Wells Fargo Bank.

Among the banks announcing increases Tuesday were California's Bank of America, the nation's largest commercial bank and New York's Chase Manhattan, the country's third largest.

A hike in the prime rate generally signals higher interest rates in general.

Judge Restrains Gas Station 'Gang-up'

DEDHAM, Mass.(AP)-A temporary restraining order preventing gasoline retailers in the state from "acting in concert" to close service stations in protest of Phase IV price controls was issued Tuesday by Norfolk Superior Court Judge Vincent R. Brogna.

The injunction was granted on a request from state Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn, who said a mass shutdown of gasoline service stations could result in "danger, especially to users of ambulance, police, fire and safety vehicles."

More than 1,000 Massachusetts dealers voted Monday night to close their service stations as part of a nationwide protest against the federal price controls.

The restraining order issued Tuesday does not prohibit individual dealers from locking up their pumps but prohibits them from banding together to do so. It also orders retailers to refrain from harrassing or picketing service station operators who choose to remain open during the protest.

A hearing on a motion for a permanent injunction is scheduled for Friday in Norfolk Superior Court.

Quinn warned dealers earlier Tuesday that he would seek legal action against them "if the shutdown occurs as represented in the new media."

He said Massachusetts citizens should not "be caught squeezed in the middle as innocent victims of the dealers protest."

The American Automobile Association described closings Tuesday as "spotty" and said Massachusetts was apparently the only New England state involved in the dealers protest.

The Automobile Legal Association said half the Massachusetts stations it surveyed were closed and said there was strong sentiment for closings in Vermont and Connecticut.

The ALA said most closings were in metropolitan areas of Boston, Worcester and Springfield. The AAA said all stations along the Massachusetts Turnpike were open, and many other stations in the state refused to sell gas but stayed open for repairs and emergency services.

One leader in the dealers shutdown, Harold P. Murphy Jr. of Springfield, said western Massachusetts service station operators would meet Wednesday. Meetings were scheduled by dealers in other parts of the state Tuesday night.

Murderer Under Strict Guard

PLATTSBURGH, N.Y. (AP)- Robert Garrow, accused of stabbing a camper to death and then eluding a huge search party for 11 days, is to be released from the hospital Wednesday. Authorities aren't taking any chance with him.

Garrow a stocky man with a reputation for exceptional strength, showed his cunning while being stalked in the Adirondacks.

"We aren't taking any chances," said State Police Maj. Donald Ambler, noting Garrow will be escorted from the hospital here to Lake Pleasant, where he will be arraigned on a murder charge.

Ambler said the trip by patrol car will take up to three hours. "We're in no hurry," Ambler said, conceding he didn't even want the possibility of an automobile accident.

Six armed troopers will be with Garrow from the moment he leaves the hospital, where he has been recovering from the four shotgun wounds that felled him. Police say Garrow is recovered and in walking condition.

The balding, 37-year-old bakery mechanic is charged with the stabbing death of Philip Domblowski, 18, of Schenectady July 29.

The manhunt for Garrow started near Speculator after three hysterical teen-age campers told authorities a man brandishing a rifle had tied them to trees and then stabbed Domblowski in the chest. Garrow was captured 50 miles away in Witherbee, in the backyard of a sister.

While in Champlain Valley Physicians Medical Center, Garrow was described as cheerful but stubbornly silent about the case. He has been guarded day and night.

Authorities also want to question him about the murder of Daniel Porter of Concord, Mass., and Porter's missing companion, Susan Petz of Skokie, Ill.

Decomposed Body Found

WASSAIC, N.Y. (AP) - The body of a 26-year-old severely mentally retarded mute was found here Tuesday afternoon, shortly after the discovery of a badly decomposed body nearby.

State Police and officials at the Wassaic State School said Richard Roth's body was discovered at about 5:45 p.m. Authorities had been searching for the man since Friday when he was allowed to leave the school building to empty trash. School officials said a badly decomposed body of another man, believed to be a patient who left the grounds without permission six months ago, was found about two hours earlier some 250 yards from Roth's body.

Officials said they believe Roth went through a wooded area that contained ledges and underbrush before entering the swampy area.

Richard Merges, the acting director of the state school, said the cause of Roth's death was "exposure." He said Roth had been dead about 36 hours.

The search for Roth covered a 5,000 acre area in eastern Dutchess County.

Sisters Involved In Maine Robberies

PORTLAND, Maine (AP)- Two young sisters from Portland were involved in at least 20 burglaries during the past four months, police said Tuesday.

Wendy Lee Davis 21, and Barbara Louise Hooper, 19, co-operated with investigators in helping to clear up a score of unsolved burglaries, said Lt. Clement Dodd, chief of the detective division.

Miss Davis and Mrs. Hooper were arraigned in District Court Tuesday on charges of breaking and entering. The charges were continued without plea to Sept. 26, and the women were released in $1,000 bail each.

Dodd said the women cooperated with police after their arrest Monday on charges stemming from a break at a policeman's apartment in which a service revolver and some savings bonds were stolen.

One of the women, police said, has a month-old child, and "must have been seven or eight months pregnant when she was breaking into these places."

Dodd said the two women have helped police recover some of the loot from the series of burglaries, which included eight breaks in a single night at the Munjoy South apartment complex.

"We're probably talking in the area of $7,000 or $8,000" from all the burglaries, he said.

According to Dodd, the women operated alone as far as the actual breaks were concerned, and sold the loot to fences in various parts of the city.

He said Miss Davis and Mrs. Hooper were being driven by police around the city to see if they can recall any other homes or apartments which were burglarized.

"When you go back a few months and you're very active, you can slip up on some of them. They're going back to see if they can refresh their minds," he said.

Old-Age Assistance Costly

BOSTON (AP)- Legislation to increase assistance to the state's blind, elderly and disabled could cost the state $295 million by 1980, not counting extra Medicaid benefits, Welfare Commissioner Steven Minter said Tuesday.

"Counting the Medicaid, it would be almost impossible to project what the cost would be through 1980-certaintly substantial-a half billion dollars or more," Minter said at a public hearing on two bills, one which would affect only the elderly.

The bill affecting only the elderly, introduced by Sen. Jack Backman, D-Brookline, would attempt over a five-year period to increase old age assistance payments to the median standard budget for elderly citizens of the federal Bureau of Labor Statistics: $345 per month for an individual and $493 for a couple.

The other bill, introduced a week ago by Gov. Francis W. Sargent, would increase assistance to the elderly to $225 per individual and $340 per couple as of next January and would allow an increase of the cost of living plus three per cent every year until it reached the median standard.

Minter estimated that would take 10 to 12 years.

If the state takes no positive action on either bill, the federal government would take over old age assistance as of next January, with a drastic reduction in benefits for the state's 85,000 recipients.

Under the federal program an individual who now gets $196 per month would receive only $130.

Marty Kelley's Face

Marty Kelley has a rude face and he's the first to admit it. If you don't know what a rude face is, just look at Marty's sometime. He's got one.

It's the sort of face you can't help feeling a little sorry for----fat and Irish and....well, rude. It's a face you can't take too seriously, especially if you happen to own it.

Remember when you were a kid and you pressed silly putty over a cartoon character's face and stretched it every which way? That's what Marty's face reminds me of.

No one is quite sure how it got to be that way. I've heard it was from french kissing a jack hammer, but I'd tend to believe he simply lost a bout with a sperm cell at an early age. That face is, to be blunt, pretty goddamn awful.

But there's a lot more to Marty Kelley than his face (which, for his sake is a good thing). You see, if you are born with a face like Marty's, you have to compensate somehow. In Marty's case, he capitalized on his misfortune, which leads us to Marty Kelley's act.

Marty Kelley has a rude act, and he's the first to admit it. Every now and then you might catch him making a mental note to himself to clean up his act, but you can be sure that he won't. Marty's act started one morning during his high school years when he lookat at himself in the mirror and realized what he was cursed with.

His first reaction was to start writing Little League and high school sports stories for a local commercial newspaper, which may seem like a strange first reaction, but there was a reason for it.

You see, like Napoleon tried to conquer the world despite his shortness, and like Alice Cooper tried to conquer the world of rock music with his grotesqueness, Marty Kelley tried to conquer the world of sports journalism with his face.

Admittedly, Marty has a lot working against him, and he won't let you forget that. His baggy plaid pants, don't do much to help, and neither do those fishtank eyeglass lenses, which are so thick that they're transluscent. And when he gives you one of his horsemouth grins, you might think he has a chicken bone stuck in his throat.

It's rude.

Nevertheless, Marty Kelley is out to replace Howard Cossell. He talks incessantly of the day when he'll be hauling in fifty grand a year and driving his Ferrari to and from his New York studio, but in the meantime he's content to sleaze quarters off me every time we walk into a bar.

Now if Marty ever found out I was saying these things about him, he'd tell me he was "horrored" or "phloegmed" or "cobbed" or one of those other Kelleyisms that manage to work their way into the vocabularies of those of us who are unfortunate enough to hang around him too often.

So why do I bother saying such nice things about him? Because I hope that ten years from now, when I'm hitchhiking along the New York Thruway, Marty Kelley will pick me up in his Ferrari and take me to the New York City Press Club Bar. And I hope that while he's sitting there in his baggy plaids, horroring the waitress, and ordering his usual Turkey Club.....I hope that maybe, just maybe, he'll buy me one of those beers he owes me.

How To Survive With A Meal Ticket

I don't have a meal ticket. My deepest heartfelt sympathy goes out to anyone who has one. Bob Estelle wrote an interesting piece on fixing your own meals. That's the easy part. The difficult part is how to survive with a meal ticket.

The Dining Commons has grown progressively worse since I've been a UMass. To steal an old adage from the infamous 1969 strike, "Some shit we will not eat, STRIKE." Unfortunately striking will not solve the problem. Your meal ticket is already paid in full. The University couldn't care less if you eat or not. (In fact, the second's policy is allowed only because the University takes into consideration that not everyone eats every meal that they pay for.) So, the best thing is to know how to get around the crap that the Dining Commons dishes out.

When your stomach decided that it is absolutely necessary to visit your local DC, take your stomach into consideration when you go. Eating just for the sake of getting full is not the way out. In fact, that's probably why so many people feel disgusted after eating at the DC. Watch your diet, seriously, you can't fool your stomach.

Proteins and starches are digested much faster than vegetables. That's why you get hungry an hour later. If you don't like the main course, don't fill up on bread and potatoes and desert, you'll wind up at the Coffee Shop by nine-thirty. If the main course is smothered in gravy and what not to hide it, ask the DC ladies to give you a portion without all that junk on it. They used to give me a dirty look, but that's too bad. Eat salad. Even though it's only lettuce, get as much of it as you can to start. Vegetables are digested slowly, so you won't get as hungry as soon if you were just devouring turkey stuffing sandwiches. Take your mother's advice, eat your vegetables. Especially since the Dining Commons insists upon a 99% starch meal. For desert, Cookies look good but ice cream is better for you in the long run. When available, take a couple of apples and oranges for the munchies later on.

If you're watching your weight, eat at Basic Foods. The food is better there anyway. If your protein conscious, eat a lot of cheese, nuts, fish, and drink milk.

You really can eat decently, if you eat right at the Dining Commons. Just use a little common sense when your stomach is involved. It'll save you from the Alka-Seltzer Blues.

All this is easy enough during weekdays. Weekends provide a special hassle. It is definately worth it to confiscate some sort of refrigeration. If you can't get a conventional small refrigerator, then the cold winter months could definitely work to your advantage. Many of the dorms have ledges outside your windows where you could keep small quantities of perishable items, such as milk, juice, beer, etc. Also, many of the dorms have some sort of kitchenette facilities so you can do your own cooking. Canned goods that you just heat are good if your lazy, but then again they contain almost as much starch as the DC meals. Homemade soup is really simple to make, all you do is throw in a bunch of anything in a big pot with a bunch of water and boil it for a while. You can make a meal out of soup, if you get good at it, the thicker the soup, the more sustaining it is. Or, invest in a cookbook, it's easier than you think. Stay away from carbonated beverages, they may taste good, but they speed up digestion. Drink milk or juice, wine or even water. Actually, you're not supposed to drink anything with your meal, the best time for a beverage is afterwards.

Chilean Coup: The Junta And Who?

By ZOE BEST

A week before the celebration of Chilean national independence, a week after the three-year anniversary of Allende's election, a junta led by Gen. Augusto Pinochet Ugarte bombed and shelled La Moneda, the Presidential Palace. With the death of President Salvador Allende Gossens, the subsequent reprisals, executions, press censorship and abandonment of all parliamentary process, a long standing democratic tradition, hardly interrupted in one and half centuries, is brutally ended. "General Pinochet said he hoped his men would not have to go into the streets because, 'the army, unlike the police, goes out to kill.' " (NYT, 9-15-73)

To some this may be a surprise and to many, even of no significance. The important aspects of Chilean history for North Americans begin when after WWI, the major foreign investments were from the U.S. The Guggenheims developed Chuquicamata, the world's largest copper mine, and sold it to Anaconda. The Guggenheims retained nitrate mines; Anaconda, Bethlehem Steel and other U.S. companies extracted mineral resources and profits so that by 1968, total U.S. investments in Chile were approximately worth $964 million.

U.S. headlines immediately denied U.S. participation in the coup: "U.S. learned night before of Chile Military Coup." Is it coincidental that in the 9-17 NYT this headline appeared: "Between Coups, Employes of CIA Learn to Knit, Bowl and Play Softball"? The U.S. government and those investing corporations have done more than watch the three-decade evolution of Chilean politics toward a socialist profile.

In 1958, Allende lost the Presidency by 33,500 votes. In 1964 the Roman Catholic Church and U.S. corporations aided in the election of Eduardo Frei Montalva, who had to yield to national pressure and began nationalization of copper mines during his term. After Allende's election and after the Chilean Congress unanimously approved a contitutional amendment which legalized full nationalization of foreign concerns (1-'71), U.S. corporate interests and the CIA began their intrigues. The coming Congressional hearings on ITT will reveal the following:

International Telephone and Telegraph has a history of regarding nations as profit arenas and utilizing U.S. government agencies to protect their corporate penetration. In 1920, Colonel Sothenes Behn consolidated Puerto Rico Telephone Co. and the Cuban Telephone Co. and by 1930 following some "Marine incursions", ITT had secured dominant interest in communication in Chile, Uruguay, Brazil, Mexico and Argentina. From 1959 to 1970 ITT absorbed over 200 corporations. This conglomerate is firmly present in 67 nations and has over $76 billion in assets. ITT ranks 23rd among companies receiving Department of Defense contracts and besides supply-the U.S. military with technoligical weaponry, they do the same for France, England, Portugal, Brazil and South America.

Columnist Jack Anderson made public ITT documents. One of the letters was from W.R. Merriam, Vice-president in charge of Wash. D.C. ITT office, addressed to John McCone, former head of the CIA and now me of the 12 executive members of the ITT board of directors. The letter dated 10-9-'70 read: "Today I had lunch with our contact at the McLean agency....(CIA hdqtrs. at McLean, Va.) He is still very, very pessimistic about defeating Allende....Approaches continue to be made to select members of the Armed Forces in an attempt to have them lead some sort of uprising---no success to date." In an inter-office memorandum from J.D. Neal, a ITT lobbyist to W.R. Merriam, Neal writes: "I told Mr. Vaky (former Latin America advisor to Kissinger) to tell Mr. Kissinger, Mr. Geneen (pres. and chairman of the Board of Directors of ITT) is willing to come to Washington to discuss ITT's interests and that we are prepared to assist financially in sums up to seven figures....We have feared the Allende victory and have been trying unsuccessfully to get other American companies aroused over the fate of their investments and join us in pre-election efforts."

ITT and their six subsidiaries in Chile had $200 million in investments, which included Chilteco which in 1968 yielded $60 millivn for ITT. Sept. 30, 1971, the Chilean government took over the operation of Chilteco claiming the services were "highly deficient".

Last year (12-10) in the New York Times, Tad Szulc wrote of the U.S. terminating aid to Chile for public projects and food imports, but doubling military aid for '73.

Had the oligarchy, linked to U.S. corporate interests, not sabotaged the transportation and food industries the upsurge of the first year of Allende's term would have prevailed: Agricultural production doubled, construction increased 9 percent, unemployment declined from 8.3 percent (12-'70) to 4.7 percent by 9-'71. Beef and poultry consumption was up 15 percent after Allende's first year and Chile's increase in GNP was second in Latin America at 8.5 percent.

The fascist coup which is shaving long-haired people, executing former government officials, Congress members and political exiles, will continue to suppress all democratic rights. The junta is meeting resistance and there is a possible ensuing civil war. Nevertheless, throughout the Southern Hemisphere, the discourse will definitely reopen on the tactics, electoral or guerrilla, to counter foreign and fascist intervention.

Nathanial Davis, U.S. ambassador to Chile is back in Santiago after last weekend's flight to Washington. Copper prices are up on the stockmarket and headlines continue, "U.S. Insists It Had No Role In Coup."

The timing for this coup was designed from an international perspective rather than from a general's mentality. The unaligned nations had met in Algeria, Fidel was travelling and meeting with triumphant delegations from North Vietnam, the Arab oil nationalizations had accelerated, the Indochinese wars, specifically in Cambodia recently had shamed the U.S., Watergate's publicity attributes for the down-and-outers had waned and what else could provide a solid statement of U.S. intentions to maintain hegemony at least in the American hemisphere?

Allende himself knew of the U.S. policy that disregards independent national interests as exhibited by his term in office. He stated:

"They can lay no accusations at my door--all the civil liberties have been maintained: freedom to hold meetings, freedom of opinion, freedom of the press, etc. The social process is not going to disappear if its leaders disappear. It may be delayed or prolonged, but in the long run, it can't be stopped. In the case of Chile, if they assassinate me, the people will carry on, they will follow their course, with the difference perhaps that things will be much harder, much more violent, because it wold be a very clear and an objective lesson for the masses, showing them that these people stop at nothing."

In Defense Of Sylvan

To The Editor:

I am writing to comment on the editorial cartoon "UMIES" which appeared in the September 18th issue of the Collegian. I feel that the cartoon was without cause and was completely unjustified. I spoke to the artist on the phone to find out what his qualifications were to make such harsh criticism of the Sylvan Area. He told me that he lived in Sylvan a year ago for his first 3 semesters at UMass, which was Sylvan's first 3 semesters also; he couldn't stand it so he moved to Southwest. How can he honestly and accurately comment on a situation that he has not been part of for over a year?

In rebuttal to some of his claims. The mud in Sylvan is just like the mud everywhere else on campus! Sylvan is just as far from everything as are the Hill, Southwest and Central Areas. In fact, Sylvan is closer to the center of campus and the north side of campus than are all those areas. His claim that the elevators are "cold and impersonal" is very humorous. I have yet to see a warm and friendly elevator; at least all the elevators in Sylvan work correctly. They are clean and well lit, which is more than I can say for some other elevators on campus. Every attempt is made to place compatable people together, but I ask Mr. McGilvray, are you compatable with everyone on your floor in Kennedy?

The Sylvan Area Government is not on an "ego trip". They have been working diligently to improve Sylvan in all aspects. Area money is spent wisely, with the students 90% of the time deciding where the money goes. Students have a lot of input with all area matters. Every area committee (including the hiring committee!) has a majority of students on them. Some things Sylvan does have: over 35 colloquia programs last semester; an area snack bar that realized a profit last year (Area Government run and only one of two to profit); a totally student run and funded radio station (WSYL 97.7 FM); a photography studio; a pottery and ceramics studio; a leathercraft shop; a carpentry shop; a weekly area newspaper; a large number of house sponsored intramurals teams; on Saturday, Sept. 8th Sylvan had an area picnic-concert-movie that cost over $1,000 (which couldn't have been too bad as I saw people from the Quad there!); last Sunday there was a free 3-band concert open to anyone; each house has already had a dorm party with funds allocated by the area government; each house had coffee and donuts for the residents on Sunday mornings; area money was spent on carpets for the lounges, color TV's for each house, bulletin boards for each floor, and industrial vacuum cleaners (4 per house) to help aid in the grave shortage of janitorial service in Sylvan. You may remember reading of the successful efforts of Sylvan people to prevent a hike of their already highest-on-campus rent. "I could go on and on."

Sylvan may not be perfect, but it is a great area, perhaps the best on campus. It is the smallest and most personal. Where else can you sit down and talk with your area director? Or any other area staff person? Has any other area had a get-together between the staff and janitors featuring chicken, clams, beer, soda, and lobster? Is any other area as unified as Sylvan?

Please Mr. McGilvray, next time you severely criticize an area please be a current resident of the area. Sylvan may have sucked a year ago, but it certainly doesn't now! Maybe that's because people like you have moved out. . ."I could go on and on."

John Bohn, Sylvan area assistant to the University Ombudsman.

O Say Can You See?

By MIKE BROPHY

The phrase used by Francis Scott Key in the opening line of the Star Spangled Banner could have been asked by any number of fans at the first two UMass home football games expecting to see the Stars and Stripes flying at the south end of the Stadium.

The flag did not fly at either the Holy Cross or Villanova games because the roping on the flag pole is broken. This has been the case since last spring and has been brought to the attention of the proper authorities on numberous occasions yet no action has been taken to correct the situation.

It is almost, if not, an American tradition that the Flag flies at football games and other athletic events and yet UMass has chosen to take an unAmerican route around the situation.

Sure, the anthem is played and there is a flag for the people to salute. It is held by a color guard down on the field in front of the marching band and disappears after the pre-game ceremonies are over. This is not the way it should be.

The American flag is a flag of great beauty to those who understand what it is and means and I personally feel that it deserves to be flown over our stadium for the entire duration of the football contest. So do many of my confreres who have noticed its absence.

Yest it has been missed. . .and it's time to get back where it belongs—on the pole at the stadium where it can guide the Minutemen, young Americans, and their followers, also young Americans, to victory. And that is what it should do. It's our Flag. Our relatives have fought for it, and we deserve to be able to have it flown magestically at the Stadium.

The games will go on regardless whether or not the flag flies at the stadium and many people will most likely not realize its absence. But it is not they for whom I show concern. It is for we few who have realized that the Flag we are accustomed to seeing that I raise the question of 'why"?!

That flagpole should have been fixed ages ago and there is absolutely NO EXCUSE for it not being fixed by now. I call upon Mr. Justin Cobb and who ever else may be totally, or in part, responsible to act immediately, if not sooner, to see to it that Old Glory is flying Saturday when the pigskin flies at 1:00 p.m.

Gas, Oil Drilling Off Coast Splits N.E. Politicians

By JAMES F. DONOHUE
Associated Press Writer

CAMBRIDGE, Mass.(AP)- Political leaders from Massachusetts and New Hampshire differed sharply Tuesday on the question of oil and gas exploration off the New England coast in testimony before a federal environmental control commission.

Gov. Meldrim Thomson of New Hampshire called for immediate action to begin developing the oil and gas deposits believed to lie beneath the ocean floor on the Atlantic continental shelf.

He called the need for such development "urgent and immediate."

Gov. Francis W. Sargent of Massachusetts and Rep. Michael Harrington, D-Mass., urged caution and more study before efforts were made to tap offshore oil and gas supplies.

Their testimony came at the opening of two days of hearings by the President's Council on Environmental Quality, which is looking into the environmental impact of oil and gas drilling on the Atlantic continental shelf and in the Gulf of Alaska.

Thomson said there was no further need for studies about drilling. "We look favorably on immediate oil and gas developments along the Atlantic continental shelf," he said.

"The shortage of fuel in New Hampshire is critical and getting worse," he said. "The time for study is passed. The time for action is now."

He criticized "little bureaucrats yapping for more time for environmental study," and said the people of New Hampshire have "a chilly view toward more bureaucratic study and political doubletalk.

"I do not fear offshore gas and oil exploration," he said, "and I believe a proper environmentally clean oil refinery can be built."

Thomson said his office is looking for "any responsible groups" to talk to about building an oil refinery in New Hampshire.

Thomson also asked for federal support for New Hampshire's claim for rights in the ocean and ocean bed to a point 200 miles off the state's 17.7-mile coastline, or to a depth of 100 fathoms 600 feet.

Sargent, speaking before Thomson, said more study is needed into offshore drilling before the nation or status embark on this "irreversible course."

He said the commission's five-month, $500,000 timetable and budget were not sufficient.

"I urge you to go back to the President and the Office of Management and Budget and ask that your timetable be extended and your budget increased," he said.

"Moreover, if you cannot change your situation, if you must finish your draft report by January, then I recommend that you admit the limitations confronting this study, that you point out the areas which demand further attention.

"I have no illusions about your efforts," Sargent said. "You alone will not solve the energy crisis. You will not uncover all the solutions.

"We in Massachusetts intend to move forward on two other fronts that will complement your efforts on a national level," he said.

"First, we will begin to develop a coastal zone plan. Second, we will begin to assess our state's future energy needs, with an emphasis on petroleum needs."

Harrington called on the federal commission not to be pressured into quick action to approve offshore drilling because of the current shortage of gas and oil in the country.

"I believe these shortages were artifically created by the major oil companies in order to create an atmosphere where projects such as offshore development would be pushed through with a minimum of public opposition," he said.

"The time necessary to do a full analysis of the problem should be taken," he said. "The council should not be scared or pressured into superficial study.

"The oil industry itself has only one driving goal-profits," he said. "Stipulations to insure New England its share of the benefits of offshore development must be built in before any development can be permitted to take place."

Douglas M. Costle, commissioner of the Connecticut Department of Environmental Protection, testified on behalf of his state's governor, Thomas Meskill.

Costle said the potential oil and gas development of the continental shelf "could be of benefit to New England, both environmentally and economically."

Air Force Ordered To Rehire Fitzgerald

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON, (AP)- The Air Force was ordered by the U.S. Civil Service Commission Tuesday to rehire A. Ernest Fitzgerald, the financial analyst who was fired after disclosing the $2-billion cost overrun on development of the C5A jet transport.

Fitzgerald, 46, said he would like to return to his job, which now pays $36,000 per year, because "there is still a lot of fat to trim out."

"I'm certainly willing to go back if the Air Force doesn't balk," he said.

The order, which may be appealed by the Air Force, directs that Fitzgerald be given back pay to Jan. 5, 1970 when he was fired from his job as deputy for management systems. The job then paid $31,874 annually.

The Air Force had no comment on the decision issued by Herman D. Staiman, chief of the commission's appeals examining office. It becomes final in 15 days if there is no appeal.

Staiman rejected Fitzgerald's claim that his C5A testimony in 1968 before a congressional subcommittee caused his dismissal. Instead, the examiner ruled, the Air Force improperly used a manpower cutback to get rid of the controversial analyst.

Fitzgerald would be entitled to more than $120,000 back pay if the decision stands, but an Air Force spokesman said the amount could be reduced by Fitzgerald's earnings since the dismissal.

Fitzgerald testified in 1968 before a subcommittee headed by Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., that the program involving the world's largest aircraft would cost $2 billion more than the original estimate of $3.1 billion. He blamed it on faulty estimating by the Air Force, inadequate controls and planning, among other things.

Rep. Asks Closing Of Naval Headquarters

SAN DIEGO (AP) - A ranking member of the House Armed Services Committee says he will ask congress to eliminate five Naval District headquarters including Boston.

Rep. Bob Wilson, R-Calif., said the Navy also wants to eliminate headquarters in Philadelphia, Norfolk, Va., Washington and San Francisco.

He said his bill would be introduced this week.

In an interview, he made public a copy of the plan proposed by Secretary of the Navy John Warner in a letter to House Speaker Carl Albert. The letter said the plan would save $4,150,000 annually and eliminate 176 military and 157 civilian jobs.

The Navy's proposal and Wilson's bill would make New York City headquarters for a new northeast region, New Orleans for the southern, Seattle for the northwest, San Diego for the southwest, Great Lakes for the midwest and Charleston, S.C., for the southeast.

The northeast district would include the coastal states from Maine to Delaware, plus Vermont, Ohio and Pennsylvania.

The southeast district would be the coastal state of Maryland to Georgia, plus West Virginia, Kentucky and Tennessee.

In the southern district would be the Gulf Coast states from Florida to Texas, plus Oklahoma and Arkansas.

Cities Push For Fuel Security

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP)- A steering committee of the National League of Cities urged Congress Tuesday to adopt legislation requiring the Nixon administration to develop a mandatory allocation program for petroleum fuels, with cities as priority customers.

Many of the nation's cities have been unable to secure guarantees of adequate fuel supplies for the winter despite the administration's voluntary fuel allocation program which went into effect in May, the committee said.

Other communities, the committee reported, "have been able to obtain enough fuel only at increases in per gallon costs of up to 100 per cent."

Providence Mayor Joseph Doorley Jr., chairman of the municipal government and administration steering committee, said, "The National League of Cities three years ago told the national administration of the problems we were going to face. Nothing was done."

In addition to the allocation program, Doorley said the committee is advocating an intensive search for new fuel supplies which are "Environmentally reasonable and economically feasible."

Prospects of fuel shortages this winter are so serious, he said, that they threaten heating of schools and operation of police cars, fire trucks and snow plows.

Elliott Roosevelt Tied To Assassination Try

By JANET STAIHAR
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-A convicted stock swindler said Tuesday he was offered $100,000 by Elliott Roosevelt and an alleged mobster frontman to assassinate Bahamian Prime Minister Lyndon O. Pindling.

Louis P. Mastriana, now imprisoned in the federal penitentiary at Texarkana, Tex., said the assassination contract was offered because of Pindling's failure to grant a gambling license to an associate of mobster Meyer Lansky.

"They expected me to kill him," Mastriana said. "They came to me and offered me $100,000 to kill, to whack Pindling."

Mastriana, appearing before the Senate permanent subcommittee on investigation, said the offer was made by Roosevelt, son of former President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

According to Mastriana, the assassination contract was made because of Pindling's failure to grant a gambling license to reputed mobster Mike McClaney.

Mastriana testified that McClaney, who has been convicted of securities violations, gave about $1 million to Pindling for his political campaign in exchange for a gambling license for McClaney and his business associates.

Mastriana said the political money had come from Lansky.

Mastriana said the gambling license was never handed over and this angered McClaney.

"They came to me and offered me $100,000 to kill, to whack Pindling," Mastriana told the committee.

Thunderstorm Hits N.E. Coast With Small Twisters, Heavy Rain

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A violent thunderstorm swept up the New England coastline from Long Island Tuesday morning, spinning off small tornadoes and drenching the area in heavy rain.

Three tornadoes were confirmed by police. Three other sitings were unconfirmed. Authorities said property was damaged but no one was hurt.

A tornado watch for the seaboard ended Tuesday afternoon as the frontal system moved out to sea, according to the National Weather Service at Bradley International Airport in Windsor Locks, Conn.

Riverhead, N.Y. police said a twister spun a moving intercity bus sideways across a Calverton highway and blew out a service station's plate glass window. No injuries were reported.

A funnel in Nasseau County left a half-mile swath of uprooted trees, capsized small boats and damaged homes throughout South Bellmore, police said.

In Greenwich, Conn., police said a tornado touched down at 11:45 a.m. and uprooted large trees in a wooded section near North Street. Trees four to five feet in diameter were toppled.

An unconfirmed tornado struck Tolland, Conn. shortly after noon, the Weather Service said. Local officials said trees and power lines were felled and several houses were damaged.

What police described as a "mini-twister" knocked down power lines and trees in Southington, Conn.

The weather service said 1.10 inches of rain fell at Bradley International as the storm moved through the area.

Southern New England Telephone also reported only a few service interruptions.

Jury Picking Stalls In Turner Trial

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP)-Jury selection in the federal mail fraud conspiracy trial of Glenn W. Turner, F. Lee Bailey and seven others was delayed Tuesday as lawyers met privately with the judge.

Under the "gag rule" imposed by U.S. District Judge Gerald B. Tjoflat, attorneys were barred from explaining the delay, but it apparently had something to do with dissatisfaction over the way jury selection was proceeding.

At noon Tuesday, tentatively seated in the jury box were three housewives, a supermarket manager, the assistant superintendent of a tire recapping firm, a newspaper dock worker, a professional roller skater, two maids, a fruit stand operator and an apartment manager.

Turner, 38, Bailey, the Boston criminal lawyer, and seven Orlando area men are accused of using the mails in a scheme to defraud persons who bought distributorships in Turner's firms.

Three Turner firms also were named last May in the 28-count indictment. They are: Glenn W. Turner Enterprises Inc., the parent organization with headquarters in Orlando; Koscot Interplanetary Inc., a cosmetics company, and the motivational program, Dare To Be Great.

Bailey, 40, who has represented Turner and Koscot, is accused of appearing in allegedly misleading filmed promotions for Dare To Be Great.

The other defendants are Harry B. Atkinson, W. Leroy Beale and Jess O. Hicman, all of Orlando; Ben U. Buntin and Clyde C. Cobb of Maitlan; Malcolm A. Julian of Fern Park and Hobart Wilder of Winter Park.

Chrysler Asking Price Hikes

DETROIT (AP) - Chrysler Corp. notified the Cost of Living Council today that it intends to raise the price of its 1974 cars and trucks by an average of $72.80.

Chrysler said he increase did not reflect labor cost increases resulting from the tentative agreement with the United Auto Workers.

The price hike, Chrysler said, is to cover the increases in cost of labor and materials and other expenses, including product improvements, incurred during the period from October 1972 through August 1973.

New Insurance Rates $1 Million Lower

BOSTON (AP)-Massachusetts insurance companies providing personal injury compulsory automobile coverage have filed new rates for 1974 that are estimated to be about $1 million lower than charges for this year.

The proposed 2.2 per cent reduction was announced Tuesday by the companies in a joint statement. Details weren't made available immediately and it was pointed out that some rates, based on accident experience, will be higher and some lower but would represent "an overall reduction of about $1 million in premium income."

The statement from the Insurance Information Institute and the American Mutual Insurance Alliance cautioned, however, that the companies could be seeking higher rates next month for comprehensive fire, theft and collision coverages.

Both types of automobile insurance are under the state's "no fault" statutes.

The companies said an increase in the various property plans "may be indicated due to an increase of 5.3 per cent in accidents reported by the Registry of Motor Vehicles for last year, plus the rising cost of automotive parts requiring replacement and a continuing increase in repair shop hourly wage rates."

Insurance Commissioner John G. Ryan has scheduled a public hearing on proposed rates for next year, the spokesmen for the companies reported. It will be at 10 a.m., Oct. 15 in the Saltonstall Office Building.

Gas Plant To Be Built In Fall River

BOSTON (AP) - A gas storage and liquefying plant may be built in Fall River, the state Supreme Court has ruled.

The high court overturned a Superior Court ruling that approval of municipal authorities was required.

The approval of the state Department of Public Utilities, granted in December, 1971, makes local approval unnecessary, the Supreme Court said in Monday's ruling.

The New England LNG Co. Inc., of Lowell, plans three 600,000-barrel tanks and other facilities on a 22-acre site at Mount Hope Bay in Fall River. Gas brought to the plant by ship would be sold to pipeline companies and to gas companies in the state.

Chotiner Asks Lid On Watergate Sources

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) - Former presidential aide Murray R. Chotiner asked a federal court today to deny a request from a newspaper and a reporter for permission to reveal sources to Watergate investigators.

Chotiner is suing the Manchester Union Leader and one of its reporters, Arthur Egan, for $3 million in a libel suit stemming from publication of a story April 27 linking Chotiner to the Watergate affair.

Judge Edward T. Gignoux, who will consider the request Friday in U.S. District Court at Portland, Maine, has ordered Egan and the newspaper to reveal the sources for the article to him. He directed the parties in the suit not to disclose the information to anyone else.

Egan asked for permission to reveal the sources Monday in the federal court in Concord. He said the Senate Watergate Committee investigators who interviewed him last week in New Hampshire asked for the information.

In a letter received by the District Court here Tuesday, Chotiner objected strongly to the information's being made available to the Watergate investigators.

After Chotiner filed his suit, Egan refused to answer questions regarding his sources, claiming that his "personal safety and welfare and that of his family will be in jeopardy if he is required to reveal the identities of persons inquired about."

WHAT IS "SOUND IDEAS?"

Sound Ideas is owned and operated by students of the five colleges. Its two originators were tired of the kind of treatment given to students interested in stereo by the established hi-fi shops in the area and decided to open Sound Ideas as an alternative. Since we started here, all but one of the old stores have closed their doors, proving that a store truly responsive to the needs of the student population can succeed, and we're basing our future on continuing service to this segment of the community.

We offer an alternative to traditional high pressure and "no service after the sale" attitudes in the stereo industry by offering the following conditions on any sale of new equipment.

1. Seven (7) day money back guarantee — If for any reason you're dissatisfied, within 7 days, return the merchandise in its original packing and we'll refund every cent.
2. Thirty (30) day direct exchange of any defective merchandise — If we can't fix it within 24 hours.
3. One year trade-in policy — Your full purchase price back towards any component the same price or more expensive provided the exchanged equipment is in original condition and packing boxes.
4. We service what we sell — With rare exception where the factory has no individual service stations, we do all our own warranty work.
5. Free delivery and installation of all systems in the 5-college area.

SYSTEM #5: THE STANDARD

GARRARD 42 M/S
NIKKO 5010
EPI 100's

We call this system the standard because it sets the standard all our other systems have to live up to. For overall accuracy, freedom from noise and distortion and maximum acoustic output capability, this system is our standard of value.

The Garrard 42M/S features a four-pole synchronous motor and full-size platter for low wow and flutter, rumble, and excellent speed accuracy, adjustable tracking and anti-skating controls, and viscous damped cueing. It comes with a Shure M75ECS elliptical magnetic cartridge, hinged dust cover and base, and has a full year warranty.

The Nikko 5010 FM stereo receiver has 90 watts (IHF) of power (25 watts RMS/channel) at less than 0.5% total distortion from 20 to 20Khz. It features FM interstation muting, two tape monitors, switching for two sets of speakers, circuit breaker output protection and a FET and IC in the FM section. It comes complete with walnut case and antenna, and has a three-year warranty.

The "standard" is set by the EPI 100, whose superiority was recently affirmed in an independent consumer testing laboratory survey of "under $150 loudspeakers" where it finished first, ahead of Advent, Dynaco, KLH and AR loudspeakers. The quality of every speaker is assured by the inclusion of individual graphs of each EPI 100's actual performance at the end of the assembly line in the instructions packed with it. Thus, the manufacturer's guarantee of frequency response ±3db from 38-18,000 hz minimum specification is a proven quantity.

"The Standard" — Let it show you what linear sound is all about.

UCF Reception Today

A reception for F. Peter Sabey, new staff member with the United Christian Foundation, will be held today between 2 and 4 p.m., at 319 Hampshire House (between Whitmore and Southeast.(

The reception will coincide with the second of a series of coffee hours which UCF is having this fall to introduce its Task Forces, programs and people to new and returning students at the university.

Mr. Sabey will be working with United Christian Foundation this year on a quarter-time basis. He is an alumnus of Amherst College and Union Theological Seminary, and holds a Th.M. from Princeton in psychology and religion, working under Seward Hiltner. He was chaplain for eight years at Lafayette College, Pennsylvania, before coming to U. Mass. a year ago to pursue a doctorate in human relations in the School of Education. Among other appointments, he served as pastor of the Williamsburg Congregational Church from 1960 to 1964.

Mr. Sabey's special areas with United Christian Foundation will include peace action and education, a pre-marital counseling program, a Faith Explorations course on contemporary worship experiences and possibly other concerns.

United Christian Foundation is an ecumenical ministry at UMass sponsored by mayor protestant denominations. Its other staff members for the current year are Thomas Lindeman and Ruth Fessenden.

Faculty and staff, as well as students, are invited to attend the reception Wednesday.

Coast Guard Abandons Search

SOUTHWEST HARBOR, Maine (AP)- The Coast Guard said Tuesday it has abandoned its search for a 35-feet cabin cruiser reported afire and sinking about 20 miles east of Prospect Harbor.

Six Coast Guard cutters and two helicopters searched the area but found no debris or other traces of the vessel, said Lt. Ernest Blanchard.

The search began Monday night after a commercial fishing boat relayed a distress call it had monitored on a citizen band radio frequency.

Blanchard said the vessel was identified as either the Unabelle or the Isabelle. Extensive checks along the coast have revealed no boats of that description missing or in danger, he said.

Asked if the radio message was a hoax, Blanchard replied: "We can't make that conclusion."

Bike Club Meeting At 7:00 p.m.

The Bicycle Club will hold its meeting in Campus Center rooms 805-9 at 7 pm. tonight.

Bicycle touring plans are not yet firmed up, though tours may be planned tonight. The two long weekends in October (6-8 Columbus Day, & 20-22 Veteran's Day) are being considered for fairly ambitious tours--perhaps around Cape Cod, or upper New York state. These would tentatively involve driving out to those areas, then touring in the region rather than bicycling to the area. So far only the Montague Plains day tour on Sunday October 14th in cooperation with the Mt. Holyoke Groups of the Sierra Club is firm. Details of that tour will be available in a week. Several day trips are also planned for this fall.

Journal Court Battle

Executive Abused

PROVIDENCE (AP)-A Providence Journal Co. executive tesified in Superior Court Tuesday he was pushed to the ground and kicked while trying to re-enter the Journal building shortly after the newspaper's strike began last Thursday night.

Vice President Charles P. O'Donnell said the incident occurred after he left the building to talk with representatives of the non-striking pressmen's union who had gathered outside.

The testimony came during the second day of hearings before Judge Christopher DelSesto on the company's request for an injunction against striking members of the Providence Newspaper Guild.

The company contends the Guild members are engaging in illegal mass picketing and are intimidating non-striking employes from coming to work.

Guild lawyers are expected to begin calling their witnesses Wednesday afternoon, after the remaining three company witnesses testify, court officials said.

In the first two days of hearings, the company called 15 witnesses. Three of those were Providence police officers testified Tuesday.

Maj. John L. Eddy said he was struck in the mouth as he attempted to escort an advertiser into the newspaper building last Thursday night. He estimated about 25 pickets had been arrested since the strike began, but not all were charged.

Lt. William J. Murray said he witnessed three shoving or kicking incidents involving pickets and non-striking employes.

Sarge To Ask For Judge Troy's Resignation

BOSTON (AP) - Gov. Francis W. Sargent will ask the Executive Council to meet in special session Thursday to consider the removal of disbarred Dorchester District Court Judge Jerome P. Troy.

The legislature passed a petition for address last week asking Troy's removal. The judge earlier had been disbarred and enjoined from sitting again by the state Supreme Court, which found that he committed six "extremely serious" offenses.

Sargent, in the statement, said he will formally call for Troy's removal Thursday "because I believe it is important that I personally present this petition..."

Dr. Kenneth Negus, professor of literature at Rutgers University in New Jersey, teaches astrology on a credit course basis. He declares, "In the past astrology was regarded as a vast storehouse of knowledge and wisdom, as an important part of learning." Dr. Negus claims astrology is becoming more important again and that "astrology deserves serious study at our universities and colleges." He correctly points out that English literature, expecially the works of Shakespear, contain numerous astrological references and symbols.

Aaron Takes It All In Stride

By ED SHEARER
Associated Press Sports Writer

ATLANTA (AP)- Henry Aaron resembles the eye of a hurricane.

There is a constant swirl of activity around him as the 39-year-old Atlanta Braves' star closes in on Babe Ruth's career home run record of 714.

But the man himself is so calm you wonder if he realizes what he's about to do-strike down the most revered baseball record in the game.

Autograph-seekers are everywhere. Broadcasters and writers press him for interviews.

The pressure on an ordinary human would appear to be impossible to withstand. But, Hank Aaron is an extraordinary individual. His accomplishments prove it.

He was asked about pressure, especially the kind that might be on him this winter if he fails to break the mark in the final 10 games this season.

"The same kind I'm under right now," Aaron said. "None."

He moved another notch nearer Monday night when he smacked No. 711 off San Diego's Gary Ross in the eighth inning of a 7-0 Atlanta victory.

"I still have a shot," he said. "Yep, it enhances my chances.

"I'd like to hit 714 this year, but it doesn't bother me," he said. "If I can't, I feel next year should do it. I just do the best I can at all times, whether I have 713 home runs or 730 or none. It's a job I have, my job, and I go out and do it."

Aaron's latest home run came before a crowd of only 1,362-a record low in Atlanta. Among those in attendance, however, was Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn, who had announced that Aaron would throw out the first pitch at the 1973 World Series.

Fall Baseball Opens Sunday

By MIKE BROPHY

For prospective members of the 1974 baseball squad the past week has been nothing but hard work as they have been laying the groundwork with Coach Dick Bergquist for the upcoming season.

Tryouts have been conducted for the past two days and starting tomorrow the number of candidates will be limited to nearly 40, a more workable group for Bergquist now that he is handling the coaching chores alone.

During the past weeks the ballplayers have been working out and getting their baseball muscles back into shape for the fall season that consists of nine games with other schools in the area such as Springfield and Holy Cross.

"This time of year actually is the best baseball weather we get here in New England," commented Bergquist, "because the spring is so cold around these parts and it is such a short season. We have only four to five weeks of good baseball weather before school lets out for the summer recess," he continued.

The logic behind having tryouts and an abbreviated season in the fall is that it gives the athlete a chance to tryout on natural turf as opposed to making the team in the cage after basketball is through for the year. It enables Bergquist to see what he will have for possible pitchers and allow them to work on possible new pitches such as an off-speed combination.

This Sunday will see the opening of the fall season as the Minutemen play host to the Crusaders of Holy Cross in a doubleheader of seven-inning games starting at 1:30. The following Tuesday Springfield College will be in for a game at Earl Lorden Field.

As of yet the starting pitchers have not been announced, however, it is expected many new faces will see limited action.

John Olson and Craig Allegrezza will not see action this fall as both have arm troubles and are under doctors' orders not to throw. So Bergquist must play a waiting game on his pitching staff.

Hunter Wins 20th; A's Win 5-4

OAKLAND (AP)- Jim "Catfish" Hunter became a 20-game winner for the third straight year Tuesday by teaming with Darold Knowles and Rollie Fingers to pitch the Oakland A's to a 5-4 victory over the California Angels.

The victory moved the first-place A's closer to clinching their third consecutive American League Western Division title.

Hunter, 20-4, was relieved by Knowles in the eighth before Fingers snuffed out a California rally in the ninth.

California's Rudy Meoli made a wild throw in the first inning to allow two runs to score and made a bad throw to second base trying for a force out in the fifth, allowing another run in.

Sal Bando accounted for the two Oakland runs on run-scoring singles in the first and second.

California 101 200 000-4 8 2

Malendez Slows Up Expos, 7-4

MONTREAL (AP)- Luis Melendez belted his second homer of the season-a three-run shot off Balor Moore in the third inning-and doubled twice and came around to score two more St. Louis' runs, leading the Cardinals to a 7-4 victory over the Montreal Expos Tuesday.

The victory moved the third-place Cardinals to two games behind the front-running Pirates in the National League East and dropped the runnerup Expos to 1½ games back, pending the outcome of Tuesday night's Pittsburgh-New York game.

The Cardinals opened the scoring on Joe Torre's RBI single in the first.

Ted sizemore led off the third with an infield single for St. Louis and moved up on a base hit by Ted Simmons before Melendez blasted his homer.

Taiwan Giants Investigated

By LEONARD PRATT
Associated Press Writer

TAIPEI (AP) - Taiwan's Little League organizers are calmly awaiting an investigation of their phenomenally successful 12-year-old sluggers, secure in their conviction that there's no more to their teams' winning streak than a lot of hard work.

Taiwan teams have taken the world Little League baseball championships four out of the past five years, and the last three years running.

That probably would have been hard enough in itself for other countries' teams to take, but apparently some felt the victory of the Taiwan City Giants last month at Williamsport, Pa. came close to adding insult to injury.

There, the Taiwan boys romped over the team put up by the United States, the country that invented the game. They beat the Americans with 57 runs in three games, giving up neither runs nor hits in the process.

Many of the U.S. players and officials watching couldn't believe that Taiwan could produce such regularly successful teams without somehow bending Little League rules.

Little League President Peter J. McGovern announced he would send a committee to Taiwan this fall to look into Little League practices here.

"Our boys won just because baseball is the most popular game in Taiwan," said Education Minister Tsiang Yen-Shih after McGovern's investigation committee was announced.

The American charges concerned the practice time, district sizes and eligibility rules of the Taiwan teams.

The Taiwan officals admit their teams' playing time before the world championships is one month longer than for American teams. But they say this was approved in 1971 for all Far East teams, because the teams have to make at least one international trip-for the Far East playoffs-followed by another for the winning team to get to the United States for the championships at Williamsport.

The district size controversy revolves around American charges that the Taiwan teams are all-stars drawn from all over the island. This is not true, the Taiwan officials said. The Taiwan Giants are all from the same elementary school in that South Taiwan city. All Taiwan teams are formed in schools, rather than in playing districts as in the United States.

That charge, and suggestions that some Taiwan players may have been ineligible because they were past their 13th birthday, should be laid to rest when the committee is shown the boys' registration documents, officials said.

Little League baseball is the only team sport in which Taiwan has achieved international recognition. The craze for it that began with the island's first victory in 1969 starts in the paddy fields and runs straight up to the top of the Nationalist Chinese Government.

When the Giants returned to Taipei recently they were greeted at the airport by about 20,000 cheering fans, then paraded through crowd-lined streets in army jeeps for more than an hour. They were the stars of a one and one-half hour television special.

Riley Hangs On With Seals

By BILL BALLOU

Two former UMass hockey stars passed go and collected $200 last week in their attempts to break into professional hockey.

Don Riley and P.J. Flaherty both received invitations to major league training camps off their play in rookie camps.

Pat Kennan, who spent last week in Fitchburg with Flaherty in the Bruins' rookie camp, was cut but was extended offers to play with minor league teams Cape Cod and Dayton.

Riley, captain of last year's UMass squad, is getting his shot with the California Golden Seals. According to Jack Canniff, UMass hockey coach, he had a tough, but good week, and scored a goal and an assist in a full-scale exhibition at the end of the week.

If Riley doesn't stick with the Seals chances are he'll be dispatched to their top farm club, the Salt Lake City Golden Eagles of the Western Hockey League, or their International League affiliate in Columbus.

Flaherty was one of 17 players to advance from rookie camp to the Bruins-Braves camp in Fitchburg. He was the only non-draft choice goalie to make the jump but still faces a tough fight for a job in Boston with either the Bruins or Braves. Realistically you can count the Bruins out, so it seems he'll have to outduel Dave Reece, Chuck Goddard, Don Wallis and Peter Crosbie for a spot on the Braves. Gilles Gilbert will play with the big boys, that's for sure, and it would seem that either Ken Broderick or Ross Brooks would be his back-up, and maybe both.

Keenan was the leading scorer at the Bruins rookie camp, and said in phone interview from his home in Weston, Ontario last night that he was "surprised and disappointed" that he got cut.

He has gotten offers from Cape Cod of the new North American Hockey League and Dayton of the International League and at the moment is learning toward Cape Cod.

"The guy down there has made me a pretty good, concrete offer and seems to want me pretty bad. I'm supposed to check with Dayton Wednesday and I'll see how their offer compares."

"They're supposed to have cleaned that league (the NAHL is the old Eastern League) up and I think Cape Cod will be a pretty good deal."

Two more of last year's seniors, John Kiah and Lonnie Avery, will be getting shots at the pros during the last week of September.

Kiah, a goalie who saw very limited varsity action in his four years at UMass, was invited to the Springfield Kings camp which opens at the Olympia in West Springfield September 28.

He's a Springfield native and a Kings fan so this is really a once-in-a-lifetime chance for him. And he supposedly played very well in a league in Connecticut this summer, so the big guy might be able to stick.

Avery's club is the New York Golden Blades of the WHA, but he has no real shot at making that team. He's hoping to land a job with their farm club, the Syracuse Blazers of the North American Hockey League. Avery comes from Massena, New York, which isn't all that far from Syracuse so it would be a good deal for him if he could stick with them.

Of this group it would seem that Riley has the best chance of making it into even a high minor league. He's big, has the strength and physical tools to play pro, and is trying out with the weakest of the teams.

Mr. Flaherty was ready then and he'll have to be ready now if he has any hopes for playing with the Boston Braves. He was invited to the Bruins camp, but the B's seem pretty well set at goal with Gilles Gilbert and either Ross Brooks or Ken Broderick slated for the two game spots on the Bruins roster.

Bobby Riggs: The Vitamin Kid

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

HOUSTON (AP)- "Hey, Rheo, where are my pills?" Bobby Riggs yelled. "I'm ready for my pills."

Rheo H. Blair, nutritional scientist from Los Angeles, rushed across the red carpeted room and placed a plateful of white pills in front of tennis' most celebrated has-been.

Bobby poured the whole batch-perhaps as many as 20-into his hand and swallowed them with one gulp. He washed them down with a glass of lemonade.

"Ah," said Bobby. "I feel better."

"This is what will beat Billie Jean King," said Blair, a specialist who has treated several Hollywood and television personalities. "These nutrients don't just give you strength. They sharpen the mind.

"Bobby will have such power of positive thinking, such concentration that you couldn't distract him with a bomb."

Two days before the highly ballyhooed, $100,000 winner-take-all match at the Astrodome Thursday night with the 29-year-old Wimbledon title-holder and feminist, Riggs relaxed in his hotel suite surrounded by bottles of pills, sparring partners and friends.

"There are 70 known nutriments," said nutritionist Blair, who is being paid $15,000 to oversee Riggs' physical well-being, "and Bobby is getting all of them.

"The pillsare like food, just don't take up as much room. In a day, Bobby gets the equivalent of 2,000 fresh oranges, two pounds of liver, four pounds of beefsteak and two gallons of milk.

"Our aim is to have Bobby take 415 a day. Sometimes the number falls to around 300. Bobby doesn't keep his mouth closed long enough."

"The way I see it," Riggs said, "Billie Jean will either go out and blow me off the court in straight sets-and I don't think it's possible, understand, but just conjecture-or she'll meet the same fate as Margaret Court.

"That was the day Margaret was led to the guillotine-the Mother's Day Massacre, May 13."

Riggs referred to his 6-2,6-1, victory over the reigning queen of tennis at San Diego last spring.

"This is not so much a match of physical power and skills as of concentration and emotion," argued Riggs. "Women lack the stability of men. If Billie Jean doesn't beat me quickly, she can come apart at any stage of the match.

"That's what I'm counting on."

The two antagonists have adopted drastically conflicting approaches to the big match.

After winning two matches in a women's tournament Monday, Billie Jean announced that until Thursday night she would avoid private interviews and public appearances.

Pat Keenan, in a typical #4 finish to a rush. He looks left, then goes right and scores in last year's action. Again, Keenan has two ways to go. He can sign with Dayton in the International League or play for Cape Cod in the North American League. He was cut by the Boston Bruins earlier this week. (photo by Alan Chapman)

Ex-Expo Sinks Bucks

By DAVE EIBEL

Former Expo Don Hahn climaxed a five-run New York Met uprising with a two-run single to center, as the New York Mets beat the Pittsburgh Pirates 6-4 last night and moved within two and one-half games of the top in the National League East. With one out, pinch-hitter Jim Beauchamp singled, Wayne Garrett doubled, and Felix Millan drove in both of them with a triple to right-center. Rusty Staub was then walked by Ramon Hernandez forcing Danny Murtaugh to replace Hernandez with ace-reliever Dave Giusti. Giusti gave up a pinch single to Ron Hodges that knotted the score, walked Cleon Jones to load the bases, and was replaced by Bob Johnson who gave up the single to Hahn that put the Mets in front. The Pirates scored a run in the ninth on two walks and a pair of infield groundouts.

The Pirate loss left the Bucs only a game ahead of the Montreal Expos who dropped a 7-4 decision to the St. Louis Cardinals in an afternoon game. The Mets, who play the Pirates three times in New York this week, are now only two and half games out.

UMass Sports Guide

I feel as though I left out something important in the first eight issues of the sports pages this year. While all the other departments have been indoctrinating the freshmen and transfers in the ways of this great university, I have failed to inform them of the whereabouts of the sports facilities here:

Alumni Stadium is the home of the Massachusetts Minutemen football team. If you don't already know that, then you probably haven't been to a game yet this year...or maybe you don't remember being there. Last year, it was rumored that the stadium was sinking at a rate 2.5 inches per year, but this hoax later gave way to the idea that it was actually floating down the Pioneer Valley on an iceberg.

Curry Hicks Cage (the "Cage") is the cozy home of the UMass basketball team and upon occasion will house a gymnastics meet, a wrestling match, a rodeo, a long wrasslin' contest or even a Philadelphia Philharmonic concert.

Boyden Physical Education Building is the home of the UMass wrestling, gymnastics (both men's and women's), and swim teams and also the hang-out of the UMass coaches, athletic department heads, and athletes. This is where to go for all autographs.

The Northeast Physical Education Building, formerly known as WoPE is the home of most of the women's teams: softball, basketball, volleyball, and field hockey.

The baseball field and track are located on the other side of the Stockbridge manure pile. It takes the most loyal of all UMass baseball fans to sit through a complete game when the wind is blowing in from the east.

Lacrosse and tennis are played on the field and courts beside Boyden and the soccer field is across the street. Crew races are on the Connecticut River, the cross-country team runs out in the surrounding country, and the ski meets are held on the mountains.

If you are looking for the hockey facility, stop looking. You probably pass right by it every day and don't realize what it is you're seeing. It's better known as the "Campus Pond." This is really closest thing UMass has to a hockey arena; the team has to use Amherst College's Orr Rink

If I gave the impression that I was against WUMV-TV showing the UMass football games at the Bluewall on Sunday nights, excuse me. That is not what I meant to do at all.

I am all for the video-tape station. What I am against is the telecast of the games on cable TV. The product is not yet ready for that and I do agree with athletic director Frank McInerney that no telecast of the games is better for the university than a sub par telecast.

Incidentally, I saw the UMass-Villanova game at the Bluewall on Sunday and I thought it was very well done. The picture is a much better quality than I expected-100% better than the Monday night TV football games. Marty Kelley and Earle Barroll are entertaining, witty, and sometimes almost professional.

It's a great feature for the Bluewall.

Blow On...

By MIKE KNEELAND

Thanks to the freshman class, the University Marching Band is blowing stronger than ever.

Last year, there were barely 100 members. This year there are about 150 members, 100 of which are freshman.

Bandsmen say they have three claims to fame: former world baton twirling champion Diane Luciani, a cowbell beat with Yankee Conference notoriety, and Robert Redford's look-alike, Joe Duchi, as an assistant director.

The Band has made impressive showings this year. "We used to have a traditional style but now we're switching to the more entertaining Broadway style," said Band manager Carl Gordon.

Organizing such performances is more difficult than it might appear to a layman.

"It's tough to look good and sound good at the same time," said publicity manager Michael Slobodkin. "You've got to have continuity."

The Band nearly lost its funding last year, but a campus petition with more than 10,000 signatures prompted a favorable University reconsideration.

Band members now say they'd like to get new uniforms related to the school's Minutemen theme. They say the present uniforms are out-dated and inappropriate.

For the time being, however, the Marching Band is concentrating on next week's show.

"The Maine game," they say, "promises to be the looniest halftime performance ever to be seen at UMass."

(Staff photo/Alan Chapman)

The voice as well as the bugle comes into use when it's time to urge the team on to another victory. And just think-if it weren't for a petition bearing 10,000 signatures, we'd have to be doing all that bugling and yelling ourselves.

Textbooks:

It's No Rip-Off

By STEVE TETREAULT

No, UMies, the Textbook Annex is not ripping you off.

Or so say several people associated with the Textbook Annex, University Store, and Campus Center Board of Governors. If anything, it is likely that the UMass Textbook Annex is Cheaper than other college stores as far as textbooks are concerned.

While many students may find this hard to believe, the above named associations point to a required 5% text markdown set by the University Board of Trustees as a reason.

Two years ago, two graduate students, Sam Manian and Sam Stewart, conducted a study for members of the CC Board of Governors concerning comparative text prices of UMass and area schools such as Harvard, URI, Northeastern, Yale, MIT, and BU. The study, done on a sales percentage basis, concluded that UMass, because of the 5% discount, were cheaper than texts sold at other schools. Manian, now a departmental assistant of the Campus Center, told the Collegian that since the study was privately requested by a few members of the Board, the results could not be publicized.

Peter Pezza, Textbook Manager of the University Store, who is responsible for the Annex, told the Collegian that although the study was done two years ago, the comparative prices should still be about the same. He invited doubtful students to check into text prices at other colleges. "The Textbook Annex follows the publisher's sales charts exactly," he said, and added that besides the 5% markdown, prices are not altered in any way on new books. Prices on paperbacks adhere to those listed on the cover. "However, we are human," added Pezza. "Now and then some mistakes are made in pricing."

The Jeffrey Amherst Bookstore, which supplies texts to Amherst College students, told the Collegian that it follows publisher's charts, also. "None of the small area bookstores can afford to mark down books to any extent, particularly texts, since they are short discount items," said Ms. Dee Waterman, cost buyer of the store.

Ms. Waterman did add, however, that the Jeffrey Amherst Bookstore is being filled with "unhappy, frustrated UMass students in search of books they can't find at the Annex."

Bill Lasher, supply manager of the University Store, pointed out the reason for book shortages. "Simply, students adding and dropping courses", he said. "A few hundred students will sign up for an easy gut course. The profs are changed, or the course is altered, and people drop out, take other courses, and buy other books." Another possible reason for book shortages is students browsing through the annex and picking up paperbacks that interest them. According to Lasher, there is very little the Annex can do about this.

Area students travelling to UMass to take advantage of the slightly lower prices might also add to the shortage of books. Although Manian sees this as a possibility, Pezza doubts it. "I don't see that many people coming from other colleges to save 50¢," he says. The Smith College Bookstore told the Collegian recently that it also could see no big student exodus to UMass.

People associated with the Annex also say that the profit the Annex does make is attributed to paperback sales, since the mandatory discount many times makes text sales run into the red. The Annex profit is coupled with that of its

Guidelines Reached For Collective Bargaining

By JUDY FRIEDLAND

An agreement on guidelines for the conduct of an election which would decide the future of collective bargaining between faculty and administration at UMass was reached last Thursday, September 13.

The election has been scheduled for November 15 and 16, pending approval of the guidelines by the Massachusetts Labor Relations Board.

The signing of this agreement comes after three months of intense negotiation between the University and representatives of the Massachusetts Society of Professors-Massachusetts Teachers Association-American Association of University Professors/Amherst (MSP-MTA-AAUP), a coalition formed for the purpose of obtaining collective bargaining for the faculty of UMass.

The coalition feels that collective bargaining will give the campus faculty more power in dealing with salaries, working conditions and tenure and hiring practices, and in this way improve the quality of education at the University.

The election, originally scheduled for last April 25, was postponed when a disagreement over the definition of a bargaining unit developed between the University and the union representatives. Whereas the MAP/MTA/AAUP believes that all members of the faculty should be included in the unit, the University objects, claiming that department heads and chairmen, some program directors and librarians IV and V occupy managerial positions and should thereby be excluded.

According to the guidelines agreed upon, all faculty members will be eligible to vote in the elections, and if the outcome of the election is determined by the alleged managerial employees, the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission (MLRC) will determine their status. Even if the votes of these personnel are not essential to the election's results, the University reserves the right to file a petition with the MLRC, clarifying the status of these employees, in the event that the MSP/MTA/AAUP is accepted as bargaining agent by the faculty.

Professor Zena Tillona, special assistant to the Chancellor for faculty relations, explained that the University does not, and has never wished to block the running of these elections. "This (the decision on collective bargaining) is the single most important decision that the faculty has been required to make. We want every faculty member to vote, and vote intelligently," she said.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery stated in his covering letter attached to the guidelines, "While we believe that collective bargaining is a backward move for faculty participation in campus governance and is contrary to the best interest of the faculty and the whole University community, this is an issue that the faculty itself must resolve on the basis of the best information available and sensitive consideration to its profound long-term implications."

So that faculty will be well-informed, Professor Tillona said that the University plans to make available to the faculty a wide range of materials about the theory and practice of faculty unionism and collective bargaining. In addition to a copy of the election guidelines and a copy of Chancellor Bromery's covering letter, the University plans to distribute a complete bibliography of collective bargaining, collated by Linda Harmon, a reference librarian. They also plan: to

D.C. Results

Results of the Rents and Fees Referendum ballot were tallied last night. They are:

1. 1225 votes for the present menu (one choice) with unlimited seconds, no additional charge.
2. 1525 votes for two-three choices with no seconds on the main course, (increased portion on main course wherever possible), no additional charge.
3. 2287 votes for two-three choices with no seconds on main course (increased portion on main course wherever possible). Option of purchasing "meal chits" that can be used to obtain seconds on main course.
4. 391 votes for two-three choices with unlimited seconds with an approximate $20.00 - $25.00 increase this semester prorated from time of institution.
5. 328 had no satisfactory option.

Most students would purchase a meal ticket if they had a choice and students would be willing to pay a flat tax for the cost of maintenance and building mortgage in order to have the option of not buying a meal ticket.

This ballot is the sole determinant in the course of action which will be taken.

Food Science 101

Every Umie's Favorite Gut

By ROBERTA MARTONE

If you are one of those unscientific people who is short of "E" core requirements, don't despair--there is a course for you: Food Science 101.

According to Fergus Clydesdale, professor of Food Science here at UMass, a large number of students enroll in the course because it is interesting and there is little emphasis on grades. "The percentage of people who take Food Science 101 because it is a supposed "gut", are very few."

When asked if he would define Food Science 101 as a "gut" course, Clydesdale replied, "The issue is not really whether the course is easy but, rather, the worth of the course; I mean the percent to which I am able to raise the level of awareness of the student."

Clydesdale said it was a "good" feeling when undergraduates, (more so than graduates) were made aware of food problems because "you are starting at a zero or minus degree of awareness and can't go anywhere but up."

It is important that all 100 level courses be taught in a more unpressured way, said Clydesdale. He stressed the fact that most 100 courses are taken to fulfill core requirements and therefore should be "a supplemental learning experience that is fun. You can't become an expert in any field in one semester."

However, Clydesdale feels that core requirements are important so that people will be exposed to areas of study other than their major. "Core requirements are a service kind of course and should be viewed in this way." If this isn't realized soon, he fears the total abolishment of core requirements.

The purpose of Food Science 101, said Clydesdale, is to give a broad over-view of the struggle for food in the world today. "I feel this course is necessary in order to prevent a kind of "Future Shock". It should help people cope with the food problems of today and, of course, be interesting enough to create a learning experience."

The national impact of Food Science courses can be seen in the changing curriculum of other universities throughout the country, among them Kansas State, Purdue University and the University of Florida. "There is a lot of movement towards this kind of course," said Clydesdale.

Currently, the UMass Food Science department is planning to do a study on the effects of Food Science 101 on this campus and how it relates to the food crisis today.

On courses in general, Clydesdale said there should be a "long, hard look at what we are teaching and if we are really satisfied with what we are doing."

Clydesdale commented that he wasn't sure whether he, himself was fulfilling all these ideas but, said, "It feels good to walk into a Friday afternoon class and find only 20 out of the 600 seats empty!

Fergus Clydesdale, no relation to Ed MacMahon, is professor of what is probably the most popular undergraduate course at U.Mass. Two years ago the word got around, and since then enrollment in Food Science 101 has skyrocketed. The real effect of this course can be gauged in the growing awareness among students about the importance of careful nutrition. Little wonder that yesterday's Dining Commons voters chose to have the option of choosing their own poison. Quality, not quantity, is the name of the game.

UMass: The Future Of Collective Bargaining

establish five mini-libraries around campus, making available to the faculty numerous articles and books dealing with this bargaining process.

Professor Tillona, who has been active in faculty-administration relations since she came to UMass in 1966, agrees with Chancellor Bromery that the achievement of collective bargaining would be "a backward move in campus governance." She feels that in the past five years the University has gone forward in democratizing the governance of the University. Personnel policy and procedures are recommended by committees made up of faculty members. In some cases, students have been able to fill out teaching evaluations of their professors.

"Collective bargaining is an iffy thing," Professor Tillona explained, "there is so little historical perspective from which to make predictions. It may be that these practices will not be altered, but on the other hand, the faculty may lose the gains it has made already."

mother, the University Store, and is sent to the Campus Center to finance programs and upkeep.

Many students ask about the high prices in the first place. Lasher attributed this to the rising cost of paper, which is passed from the mills to the publishers to the universities to the students. Also, many times a professor orders a higher priced text or paperback because of translation or updated material.

The Textbook Annex is hoping to expand and renovate in the future. Although it rented the greatest number of cash registers it could accomodate, the Annex was still mobbed the first week of classes. The building is also poorly ventilated. "Its too hot in the summer, and too cold in the winter," said Howie Levin, UMass student and member of the CC Board of Governors. Levin added that the Board is hoping for state funds to renovate, since the building in which the Annex is presently housed is state university owned.

October 2, 3 and 4

Senate Election Date Set

By SHARON HUGHES

The Student Senate last night voted to hold its annual general election for the 1973-74 Senate on October 2, 3, and 4. Nomination papers are now available in the Senate office on the second floor of the Student Union, and are due Wednesday, September 26 at 5 p.m.

Registration for New Africa District, a district developed by the Senate last year to insure greater representation of minority group students, begins immediately and will continue until Monday, October 1st at 9 a.m. Nomination papers for NAD are currently available in the Senate office, but by the end of the week will be available in New Africa House as well.

The Senate voted to retain the method of apportioning senators that was developed last year:

One senator for each 250 students or fraction of 250 students: residing in each residential hall, residing in or belonging to the active membership of recognized fraternities, and sororities and 1 senator for each 250 students or fraction of 250 students residing as commuters.

Additionally, the Senate provides for 15 representatives (senators) from New Africa District. Potentially any undergraduate may register as a member regardless of where the person lives on campus (or off). Last year registrants almost exclusively were members of the third community.

Once a person is a registered member of NAD, he is considered a constituent of that district only and cannot also vote as a member of a residential area.

The Senate extensively debated the provision for 15 senators from the NAF. Senator Paul Doran proposed a motion to change "15 representatives" to "1 for each 250". The motion was first approved, subsequently reconsidered and finally defeated.

Insurance Hassles

Don't Get Hurt

By Stephen von Lichtenberg

The student insurance policy offered here at UMass is inadequate in a catastrophic situation.

Were a student to have an accident or sickness of exceptional duration, the policy would leave him paying much of the cost. As an illustration: suppose a student were to have a hospital stay of one year at a hospital charging $55.50 a day for semi-private accommodations (the same rate Cooley Dickinson charges). His bill for accommodations alone would be quite steep.

During the first 180 days, a student's personal liability would be over $1,900. After this, the policy would lapse, leaving the student the full cost for the remainder of the year of $10,267.50. For the full year this adds up to a staggering 12,167.50 dollars.

If the same student were to spend only four days at the same hospital, his personal cost would be a mere $11.10 for room and board. It is here in the initial stages of a sickness or an accident that the UMass policy provides sound protection for the student.

The benefits written into the present policy were discussed and decided upon by a student committee during 1972. These students did not include provisions to cover the catastrophic situation. If such a situation arises, cost to the disabled party will be in the thousands of dollars.

Added coverage for the catastrophic situation on a dollars-per-day cost of coverage would be cheaper than the first dollar coverage the student now has.

Got Nothing To Do?

Student Government Needs You

By JEFF HOWARD

Every year dicisions that directly effect the lives of most or all undergraduates are made by committees which are relatively obscure to them. Student government needs people to serve on these committees to represent undergraduate interests in such areas as: scholarships and financial aid money; University budget; the parking plan; and the Campus Center-Student Union.

What is needed to be on one of these committees is a will to work hard, not necessarily years of experience. Applications can be picked up in the Student Senate offices, 420 Student Union. All candidates will be interviewed by a search committee comprised of students and this committee suggests the names of those whom they think will do the job best.

If the Senate approves your name, you become the official representative of the student body to the committee for which you applied. Don't let the Administration and Faculty be the only ones to manipulate student money and make important decisions-represent the undergrads and have some "student input" of your own. Do it soon, for all applications must be in by next Monday morning at the absolute latest. Questions may be referred to Jeff Howard at 5-0341.

CAMPUS CENTER-STUDENT UNION BOARD OF GOVERNORS

This is a group of appointed students who set policy for the Campus Center Complex. Although it works closely with the administration, the Student Senate and the management of the Campus Center, very much so the word of the Board is law.

The Board does much of its work through a committee system which specializes in areas of Food Services, Services (Hotel, Store); Building Operations (Office Assignments, some personnel); Finance; Program Council; and a task force looking at plans to remodel the Student Union. All proposals that come to the full Board for approval go through this committee system. Because the committees are small, each member becomes a sort of "expert in his/her own field" The committees also include many students who have volunteered their time but have no vote on the Board itself. Each Area Government has an appointment to the Board, and the main student government has several.

TRANSPORTATION AND PARKING COUNCIL

This is the committee that last year come out with the now-controversial parking proposal. Two undergraduates will be appointed, one for a one-year term and the other for two years. In a letter dated September 4, 1973 Chancellor Bromery described what this year's Council has to do: 1) "To analyze the operation of the new parking-transportation program from the points of view o major campus groups. 2) To make recommendations to the Chancellor to improve the parking system for the Spring 1974 semester or for the 1974-75 academic year in order to make that system more effective and equitable, and consistent with environmental and ecological concerns. 3) To call to the Chancellor's attention any patent inequities that should be redressed immediately."

If you are concerned about the parking situation on campus this is a good place for you to start work, as this is the committee which advises the Chancellor in this area.

FINE ARTS COUNCIL

The Fine Arts Council recommends the amount of the Fine Arts fee levied on all undergrads, recommends the appointment of professional and clerical staff for the program, and controls the use of funds for Fine Arts programs within certain guidelines. There are five undergraduate seats on this Council which is supposed to "arrange and support a varied, balanced and comprehensive program of Fine Arts events for the cultural enrichment and enjoyment of the undergraduate body."

Even though this group reports to the Faculty Senate and the Student Senate and makes its recommendations to the Chancellor, the Council is in a very influential position concerning how all of that undergraduate money is to be spent. Also, it has a heavy work, if not total control, of deciding who is going to come to campus to play, dance, etc. for the following year. So, if you're interested in having a decent Fine Arts Program this might be a place for you to be.

ATHLETIC COUNCIL

The Athletic Council reviews all that goes on in the Athletic Department (including the expenditure of the student Athletic fee money.) This Council has added importance this year as students seem to have 'primary responsibility' for decisions in this area under the new Wellman Document.

SCHOLARSHIP AND FINANCIAL AID

This committee pretty much decides what policy will govern who gets scholarships and financial aid for the coming year. Although its carge is to "recommend policy concerning Scholarships, fellowships and financial aid," those recommendations are usually implemented. It is very important that the undergraduates be heard on this committee due to the crucial nature of its decisions to the student body. A Faculty Senate Committee.

PROGRAM AND BUDGET COMMITTEE

This committee reviews budget proposals before they are finally approved by the administration, reviews the "administration of funds on the Amherst campus" and occassionally surveys the costs of proposed programs. Although it is only an advisory step in the campus budget process, it is also one of the only places in that process where an official student voice is heard. (The administration often listens to official student voices more than unofficial ones.) A Faculty Senate committee.

SEARCH COMMITTEE FOR THE DEAN OF BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION

We need a new dean for the school of business administration. Undergrads will have two seats on the search committee for this important position. Basically, the search committee reads resumes and interviews candidates for the position, eventually submitting a list of names of people who they think are qualified to the administration. Since the dean makes decisions which help to determine what happens in the school, this is a very important committee for anyone concerned with the future of the School of Business Administration.

Commuter Assembly Discusses Busses

The Commuter Assembly last night initiated a petiton which called for the resumation of bus service to South Deerfield and Belchertown. Continuing bus service to these areas was publicized, but since then, has been terminated.

"A demonstration grant from the federal government has been enacted toward the use of buses running from peripheral parking lots to inner campus," said Randy Dahl, of Student Affairs. It is an experiment to see if commuters will ride the buses instead of taking their cars to campus. There are three basic aims behind the grant:

1. To introduce a no-fare bus service to see if there is general usage.
2. To modify parking regulations in a manner complimentary to the bus system.
3. To reduce traffic congestion on campus.

To get a capital grant for the bussing, the present program must be declared successful. This is a trial period, as such, since the grant ends at the end of September.

In further business Dr. Heen Hill was introduced to the Assembly as the new advisor to non-residential students (commuters). Her job will be the counselling of commuters on problems that they may Elections will be held soon for the Executive Board of the Commuter Assembly. They will be concurrent with the Student Senate Elections. There are six available seats left on the Executive Board. Also, two people are needed to serve on its judiciary board. The Commuter Assembly needs people. Meetings are held each Wednesday at 5:30 p.m. in the Commuters Lounge of the Student Union.

Hey You!

Dutch Official Aids In Local Tree Inspection

Amherst, Mass.--One way to find out about Dutch elm disease is to ask the Dutch, something the UMass Shade Tree Laboratories staff has been doing for over a decade.

More specifically, the Shade Tree labs and the Elm Department of the Dutch Forestry Research Station in Wageningen have been operating since 1964 in efforts to find elm strains that show resistance to the disease.

The most recent meeting was a visit by Hans M. Heybroek, head of the Dutch Forestry Station's Elm Department, to see Professors Francis W. Holmes and Terry A. Tattar of the shade tree labs and examine imported Dutch clones of elms growing in research nurseries at Amherst and Belchertown.

Since 1954 Mr. Heybroek has directed the Dutch program of selection and breeding of elms, started in 1929, in the search for elms resistant to Dutch elm disease. UMass research on resistance to Dutch elm disease is much more recent (12 years old) but University scientists were the first to predict that more virulent or aggressive races of the disease fungus could arise in nature (1963), and the first to discover that they indeed had arisen--in England (1971).

Some moderate levels of resistance have been found in American elms, but nothing yet worthy of release to the nursery practice, according to Dr. Holmes. Among European elms, however, the longstanding Dutch research program has led to release of four resistant elm clones, the most recent and best being the "Groeneveld" or Greenfield Elm, brought to America by Dr. Holmes in 1963 as part of the Shade Tree Laboratories program and released by the U.S. Plant Quarantine Service for general use in 1965.

The Netherlands-UMass cooperation is a longstanding one: this is Heybroek's fourth visit to the United States, the others being in 1964, spring 1968, and fall 1968-

Bridge Club Changes

By Stephen von Lichtenberg

The UMass bridge club has made some plans for the upcoming year and has also undergone some changes.

This year, under the auspices of Resident Director Mark C. Bennett, the bridge club has been franchised to give rating points by the American Contract Bridge League.

The club has scheduled two tournaments for this year here at UMass. In February the A.C.U.I. tournament and later on in April the UMass invitational will be held.

The bridge club is planning on sending teams to the Connecticut State Championship in Hartford beginning this September 28th and ending the 30th; as well as to the John Hopkins Intercollegiate in April.

Duplicate bridge play for rating points begins tonight at 7:30 p.m. in C. C. rooms 170-172. Play is open to all those interested. Direct inquiries to Mark Bennett at 549-4489.

"Josh" Explained

By TERRY PEARSON

Josh McDowell, a Christian activist and travelling speaker for the Campus Crusade for Christ, will be the first speaker in a week-long series of lectures and seminars on Christianity, beginning September 24, and sponsored by the Christian Service Coalition and other Christian organizations on campus.

Other lecturers will be Arthur Katz, Candi Lowe, and Bill Dancy. The lectures will be held at UMass, Mount Holyoke and Hampshire Colleges.

McDowell, who had been the subject of the blackboard campaign all over campus, (Josh is coming!), has spoken at more than 450 colleges in 42 countries. He will be lecturing on "The Resurrection," "Maximum Sex," and "Prophecy."

The Christian Service Coalition is also holding a weekend retreat at which McDowell will be the main speaker on September 21-23.

Federal Panel Studies Off-Shore Drilling

Quinn: Environment Panel Favors Drilling

By JAMES F. DONOHUE
Associated Press Writer

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn of Massachusetts accused a federal environmental panel Wednesday of having already made up its mind to approve oil and gas drilling off the East Coast.

"I cannot escape the conclusion that the purpose and the result of these hearings will be to attempt to justify decisions already long made to exploit the mineral resources of this Commonwealth to the deteriment of its citizens," Quinn said.

"I get the distinct impression," he said, "that in the present atmosphere of crisis, which has been engendered by the Washington administration and by the powerful oil and utilities interests, the people of Massachusetts will be asked to sacrifice. . . in order to satiate the oil lust of the major oil companies."

Quinn made his statement at the second day of a two-day hearing by the President's Council on Environmental Quality, which is looking into the environmental impact of offshore drilling.

The oil companies have created the current oil shortage by "their ill will, or if one gives them the benefit of the doubt, their abysmally poor planning," Quinn said. Even though they have created the shortage, he said, the oil companies now seek to use it "as a bludgeon against those who oppose their plans to plunder this area."

Quinn, a Democrat, said the Nixon administration was biased in favor of the oil companies over the environmental interests of the people.

"Undoubtedly, what these gentlemen envisage is an equitable scheme whereby the oil that is pumped out will go to the major oil companies and the oil that is spilled in the ocean will go to the people of Massachusetts, free of charge, on their beaches," he said.

John A. Busterud, council chairman, said Quinn had engaged in "a partisan tirade."

At that, Quinn said he believed Busterud, and co-chairman Beatrice E. Willard, had been conducting the hearings, which began in Washington, with "dignity and grace."

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., in a statement delivered for him to the council, said he has "an overwhelming bias" against offshore drilling.

Assurances of protection for the New England shoreline, fishing industry and overall economic and energy needs would be required "before we can sanguinely stand aside for the oil derricks and the oil rigs," he said.

"I doubt whether the citizens of New England and its public representatives can afford to state new that offshore drilling can at no time, under no circumstances, be permitted on the Atlantic outer continental shelf," he said.

"But what we can say, and what we should say, is that all relevant information, all relevant date, must be avilable before a decision is made in Washington for drilling to commence.

"The public must be shown not only how best to develop the offshore mineral resources, but whether or not they need to be developed," he said.

The U.S. senators, both members of the Senate Interior Committee, testified in favor of quick approval for oil and gas exploration offshore.

"I feel it is imperative that the Atlantic outer continental shelf be offered for oil and gas development at the earliest possible time," said Sen. Clifford P. Hansen, R-Wyo.

"Our challenge is to find ways to produce adequate, secure, clean and reasonably priced energy," he said. "Rapid development of the Atlantic continental shelf is the answer, at least for the short term."

Sen. Paul Fannin of Arizona, ranking Republican on the interior committee, said oil has become a political weapon for the Arab nations.

"There are some authorities who have predicted that our growing dependence upon Arab oil, and their growing tendency to use it as a lever against us to force us to abandon Israel, will result in a serious threat to world peace," he said.

"The escalation of such political trends could lead to economic war, and an economic war could all too easily convert to total war," he said.

"We must have a maximum effort to develop all our sources of energy if we are to avert the possibility of a petroleum Pearl Harbor in the near future," he said.

Members of the American Petroleum Institute, led by Rawleigh Warner Jr., chairman of Mobil Oil Corp., spoke for rapid approval of offshore drilling.

In delaying offshore exploration, Warner said, the United States "is responding neither as wisely nor as well to the energy problems as are other industrialized nations."

"Other oil importing nations want, need and are willing to take risks to develop sources of oil much closer to home and less susceptible to foreign control," he said.

The New England Coalition on Oil, an environmentalist group, urged the council to move slowly on authorizing offshore drilling.

King And Riggs 'Vitamin Racket'

By BRIAN SULLIVAN
AP Science Writer

NEW YORK (AP)- The Billie Jean King-Bobby Riggs tennis battle of the sexes has also become a battle of the vitamins, and some specialists believe the latter is mostly nonsense.

Mrs. King is said to be taking Vitamin E to build up her strength. Riggs is reported taking enough Vitamin C to equal that in 2,000 oranges a day, apparently plus other vitamins. Whoever wins in Houston tonight, it won't be an endorsement for either vitamin producing a powerful health effect.

One leading nutritional specialist described all this Wednesday as "90 per cent nonsense."

For one thing, the Food and Nutrition Board of the National Research Council, National Academy of Sciences, has just put out a study of Vitamin E, saying that "misleading claims" that Vitamin E supplementation of the diet can help such things as muscular weakness "are not backed up by sound experimentation or clinical observation."

The board said that because Vitamin E is widely distributed in vegetable oils, cereal grains and animal fats, it is "very unlikely" there would be a dificiency in humans, woth the exception of premature infants or persons with a severe stomach ailment.

Some vitamins-A and D-are actually known to cause damage if taken in massive dosses. Massive doses of Vitamin A, for example, can cause headache and vomiting.

In general, nutrition scientists say a person needs only a certain minimum level of nutrients in the body to maintain good health. Below that level, one becomes susceptible to illness; above that, there is no added benefit and perhaps damage due to an imbalance of the nutrients.

Senate Approves Collective Bargaining

BOSTON (AP)- The Massachusetts Senate gave final approval to collective bargaining legislation for all public employees Monday night after spending five hours debating an earlier version of the bill.

A new draft was drawn up after the Senate spent the afternoon amending an earlier version until it was almost unrecognizable.

The main feature of the legislation which survived the redraft extended to state employees the rights of county and municipal employees to bargain collectively for wages and job benefits.

One amendment proposed during the afternoon session by Sen. John W. Bullock, D-Arlington, extended the time limit for arbitration from 30 to 60 days.

UAW, Chrysler Sign Contract

DETROIT (AP)- The United Auto Workers reached agreement yesterday on a new contract to cover 10,500 white-collar workers, bringing all 127,500 UAW members at Chrysler under tentative new agreements.

Top officials of the two main locals involved and a union spokesmen said agreement had been reached about noon Wednesday on a seperate contract covering the white-collar workers. They said ratification votes on the new contract were set for Thursday.

Details of the white-collar package were not announced. The union's powerful Chrysler Council met Wednesday in Detroit to approve the contract agreed to earlier this week for 117,000 assembly line workers, and sent it to the rank and file for ratification.

Ratification votes in production workers locals are to start Friday and final totals from each of the 69 locals are to be in Detroit Sunday night, a union spokesman said. Workers will be told to return to work the first shift Monday.

Phnom Penh Supply Lines Opened

Port Opened

By DENIS GRAY
Associated Press Writer

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — Scores of trucks and minibuses piled high with food, firewood and general cargo rolled up from the sea coast to Phnom Penh Wednesday following the clearing of Highway 4 of Communist-led insurgent forces.

It was the first time in 25 days that government traffic could flow between the country's only deep water port of Kompong Som and Phnom Penh 147 miles away.

Field reporters said government troops broke through Khmer Rouge forces straddling another highway near the capital and linked up with a battalion encircled for nearly a month.

Fighting continued on Phnom Penh's road to the South Vietnamese border, the reporters said.

Col. Am Rong, chief spokesman of the military command, said fighting at Kompong Cham, Cambodia's third largest city, was concentrated north of town.

Highway 5 to the rice-growing Battambang Province remained cut for the 14th consecutive day.

In Saigon the government of South Vietnam warned it will take military action against a dozen airfields it claims North Vietnam has established south of the demilitarized zone if Hanoi fails to heed demands that they be dismantled.

Government spokesman Bui Bao Truc said since building the airfields amounted to a violation of the Paris peace agreements, "military action taken against these violations would be understood as self-defense."

The Viet Cong maintains it has the right to build and improve airfields within its territory in order to develop its own civil aviation.

Village Appears Safe

KOMPONG CHAM, Cambodia (AP) - A silver-tipped ivory and wood swagger stick with the two gold stars of a major general lay on a low table in front of Sar Hor, the government commander of Kompong Cham.

The crackle of machine-gun fire was still audible from the western edge of town as Gen. Sar Hor declared: "The city is free."

At the outbreak of major fighting inside Kompong Cham on Sept. 6, diplomatic sources in Phnom Penh had said President Lon Nol's pledge to hold the city at all costs with reinforcements from Phnom Penh's reserve forces was militarily and politically a calculated risk.

The risk appeared to have paid off. The Communist-led insurgents have been dealt a set-back with losses in men, supplies and offensive momentum. Though still resisting at the outskirts, they have been driven from Kompong Cham, a key provincial capital 47 miles northeast of Phnom Penh.

Senate Passes Pension Reform Bill

By JOE HALL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) —The Senate passed Wednesday a private pension reform bill designed to guarantee that pension plan enrollees actually receive benefits when they retire.

The legislation would require that all plans be fully funded and give participants 100 per cent vesting after 15 years and would set up a government insurance plan to pay benefits when a private plan fails.

In addition, it would offer special tax incentives to individuals not in private plans to set up their own retirement programs and to self-employed persons to improve their programs.

The Senate vote which was 93-0 climaxed several years of study of ways to give much stronger protection to the rights of approximately 40 million persons now under private pension plans.

Sponsors of the bill said the study had shown that thousands of enrollees never received any benefits despite many years of service under a pension plans.

The vote sent the legislation to the House where the Education and Labor and Ways and Means Committees have been working on similar measures.

The Senate bill goes beyond President Nixon's recommendations on pension reform. For instance, Nixon's proposals did not cover situations where a company goes out of business and its pension fund lacks the assets to meet its obligations.

Nevertheless, several senators attacked the bill as inadequate.

Only about half the U.S. work force are presently covered by pension plans. Some senators noted that the legislation would not require more companies to adopt plans.

Private pension payments currently average about $141 monthly. The bill provides that any increase in this amount would be the subject of employer-union or employer-employe bargaining.

However, the Senate rejected all attempts at major liberalizations in the legislation.

Some 34,000 private pension plans are now in operation with assets totaling some $150 billion.

The Senate did adopt a floor amendment which would place a $75,000 annual ceiling on pensions of private executives paid out of funds accumulated from tax-exempt contributions.

Employment Bill Postponed

BOSTON (AP) - The Massachusetts Senate debated for almost five hours Wednesday on a proposed collective bargaining bill for public employes before deciding to postpone action to later in the evening.

A series of amendments were adopted, chipping away at the original points of the bill, until Senate Majority Leader Joseph J. C. DiCarlo announced that a new draft of the bill, expected to be a much watered down version, would be put before the Senate by 9 p.m.

The only feature of the legislation expected to survive the redraft would extend to state employes the rights of county and municipal employes to bargain collectively for wages and benefits.

One amendment, proposed by Sen. John W. Bullock, D-Arlington, extended the time limit for arbitration from 30 to 60 days.

Another, by Sen. John Parker, R-Taunton, took away the power to bargain collectively for retirement and life insurance.

A third, by Sen. Joseph Timilty, D-Boston, would allow principals and assistant principals to participate with teachers in the bargaining process rather than being considered management.

And a final amendment, introduced by Sen. John Aylmer, R-Barnstable, would allow towns to take up funding questions resulting from collective bargaining at their annual town meetings.

Drug Studied To Cure Blindnes.

BOSTON (AP) - Researchers report that a drug being studied at the Massachusetts Eye and Ear Infirmary and the Retina Foundation is effective in treating a viral infection that can cause blindness.

They said that the drug, Ara-A, or adenine arabinoside, was found effective in animal tests and trials on human beings, and that it fights herpes virus, which can infect the cornea and cause blindness.

They said that 16 patients suffering herpes uveitis infections were treated with Ara-A after being treated unsuccessfully with another medicine.

The researchers said 10 of the patients, who had mild to moderate infections, did poorly on the Ara-A but that six with severe infections showed much improvement.

Talks Stall In Canadian Paper Strike

MONTREAL (AP)- Contract negotiations broke off Wednesday between Canadian International Paper Co. and the union representing 5,000 workers on strike since early August at five mills in Eastern Canada.

Three of the mills produce newsprint.

L.H. Lorrain, Canadian director of the United Paperworkers International Union, said negotiations collapsed when the company rejected the latest set of union proposals. The talks had resumed last Friday after a lengthy interruption.

He said the union has four main priorities in its contract demands, and the company has "failed to come close" on three of the issues and is "short of the mark" on the fourth.

The priorities include a two-year contract, a cost-of-living escalator clause, improved job security and increased pension benefits, he said.

"We have bargained in good faith. We have amended some of our proposals on the bargaining agenda. But we can make no further concessions on our proposals...", he said in a statement.

A company spokesman said negotiators made a new proposal Wednesday, but the union delegates rejected it after some study.

The mills affected are located at Hawkesbury, Ont., Gatineau, Treis-Rivieres and La Tuque, Que., and Dalhousie, N.B.

Meanwhile, a two-day break was taken by negotiators who have been meeting in Kenogami, Quel, in an effort to forge a new contract for 2,000 workers of Price Co. Ltd.

The workers have shut down two newsprint mills located at Kenogami and nearby Alma, 135 miles north of Quebec City, since Aug. 10.

A Price Co. spokesman said the talks will resume Friday.

The workers are represented by three unions affiliated with the Confederation of National Trade Unions.

At Saint John, N.B., about 400 workers of the UPIU began their 11th day of strike action against a Macmillan-Rothesay Ltd. newsprint mill.

Traditional Sex Roles Challanged In Jr. High

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP)- The traditional assignment of boys to study industrial arts and girls to study home economics in junior high school is being challenged by the Vermont chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union.

A suit filed Wednesday in U.S. District Court in Burlington charges the Harwood Union School Board with sex discrimination, citing the 14th amendment of the constitution.

Connie Montgomery, chairman of the Vermont ACLU Women's Rights Project, said the case could affect schools throughout the state.

She said two parents of children at Harwood Union High School asked the ACLU for help after they were unsuccessful in getting the school board to change its rule restricting class choice for 7th and 8th graders.

Ms. Montgomery said students in higher grades were allowed to choose either industrial arts or home economics, regardless of sex.

However, she said this presented problems for the girl who entered a carpentry class, for instance, in the 9th grade and was forced to compete with boys who had two years of background.

She said opening the classes to free choice would help to rid the school of artificial sex sterotypes.

"There is no reason why a few girls shouldn't learn about carpentry, or a few boys shouldn't learn to cook," added David Harrison, ACLU director for Vermont.

A hearing has been set Monday in Burlington on the ACLU's request for an injunction to force the school to allow a student to change classes immediately.

Someone got a start yesterday upon finding their late model sports car gutted by flames in Lot 65. It provided some excitement for passersby until some spoil-sport came along with a fire extinguisher and saved the day.

Delta Crash Hearings Continue

Pilot Unaware Of Fog

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer

PEABODY, Mass. (AP)- The pilot of a Delta jetliner that crashed in Boston July 31 did not know until 20 seconds before the crash that he was heading toward a fog-covered runway, inquest testimony revealed Wednesday.

"If he the pilot had called me when he should have called me he would have gotten the weather," said the local controller, Jeffrey M. MacDonald.

"If the weather had changed, he would have gotten that before touchdown."

MacDonald testified at the second day of a National Transportation Safety Board hearing into the circumstances of the crash, which killed 88.

One purpose of the hearing is to determine if the weather contributed to the crash. MacDonald said that even though the runway was foggy, visibility was still good enough for the plane to land.

MacDonald testified that he cleared other planes to land on the same runway after the Delta DC9 slammed into a seawall.

He had been told by a third controller that the Delta plane was safely on its way to the terminal.

About the time of the crash, an alarm buzzer went off indicating trouble with the landing lights on the runway. The lights had been smashed by the jetliner, but MacDonald said he ignored the buzzer because it frequently sounded false alarms.

Ordinarily the approach controller guides incoming aircraft until they are about six miles, or two minute, from landing. Then he turns them over to the local controler.

But Charles Taylor, the approach controller, testified Tuesday that he delayed turning over the Delta plane because he was preoccupied with two other aircraft that were mistakenly flying at the same altitude.

Because of this, the Delta pilot did not get the weather information until nine seconds before he had to make a final decision on whether to go through with the landing.

According to a transcript of cockpit conversation, MacDonald, the controller, radioed to the plane,, "Cleared to Land Four Right...A fog bank is movin' in. it's pretty heavy across the approach end."

The pilot acknowledged the information but at the same time told his first officer that he didn't trust his automatic landing instrument and realized he was off course.

The moment was reaching the point of no return on the landing, the pilot was telling the first officer, "Let's get back on course, if ya' can."

Then the first officer said, "I just gotta get this back." Ten seconds later, the plane crashed into a seawall at the approach end of Runway 4-Right.

The control tower did not learn of the crash until seven minutes later, when it was notified by the airport fire department.

MacDonald said he tried in vain to contact the wrecked plane, but when he could not, he asked the ground controller who was sitting nearby where it was.

"When I asked the ground controller if he Delta was at the gate, he responded that he was going to the gate or at the gate," MacDonald said, "We have a very good trust in each other. We have to in this job."

The Delta flight was Number 723, and another Delta Flight, Number 623, had landed shortly before.

"It's possible that I misunderstood the first number," MacDonald said. "But to the best of my recollection I get the answer that I was looking for," referring to his question as to whether the plans was at the terminal.

The ground controller, Paul Borrielle, disputed MacDonald's statement. "He turned to me and asked if I had Delta, and I understood he said 623," Borrielle said. "I don't believe he said 723. I replied that 623 was just about at the gate."

MacDonald said that when an alarm and red light on the runway approach light system went off the warnings were turned off. "Usually it the warnings means water has gotten into the lines," he said.

"In my opinion, it is not an unusual occurence. Seems like it's lit most of the time he worked that position."

However, a safety board report said the Delta plane destroyed two light bars when it crashed. And, it said that would have set off the alarm.

According to the board, the plane was too low and to the right of the runway when it crashed.

Only one person-Air Force Sgt. Leopold Cheuinard of Marshfield, Vt.-survived the crash. He remains in critical condition after burns covered 80 percent of his body.

Yablonski Triggerman Gets Chair

By JOHN BRONSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON, Pa. (AP)- Aubran W. "Buddy" Martin, one of three triggermen convicted in the 1969 Yablonski family murders, was sentenced yesterday to die in the electric chair.

Judge Charles G. Sweet, sitting in Washington County Common Pleas Court, imposed the sentence although Pennsylvania outlawed capital punishment three years ago and has dismantled its electric chair.

Sweet said he believed his sentence was constitutional despite state and federal court rulings. In the event that his sentence was found to be contrary to the law, Sweet sentenced Martin to three consecutive life terms in prison and provided that he is not eligible for parole or furlough.

The sentencing was the first for the seven persons who have been convicted or pleaded guilty in the Yablonski murders. Two more persons, including desposed United Mine Workers president W.A. "Tony" Boyle, have been charged in the case.

The sentence was handed down 22 months after a jury of seven women and five men found the boyish former Cleveland resident guilty on three counts and recommended death.

Sweet said he decided on death because Martin had committed "the worst possible murder, killing for hire."

Sweet said Martin not only had killed the target, United Mine Workers rebel leader Joseph A. Yablonski, but also two others in the house, Yablonski's wife and daughter.

And Sweet said: "He Martin has never exhibited the slightest remorse."

Experts Advise Mandatory Fuel Limits

By FRANCES LEWINE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon and his energy experts told governors and other representatives of 10 states yesterday that the administration expects to make a decision "very quickly" on whether to order mandatory allocation of fuel.

Nixon's top energy adviser, former Colorado Gov. John Love, said that the seven governors attending a White House meeting indicated they favored "some sort of mandatory allocation;; to cope with an expected shortage of heating oil this winter.

The administration has asked for comments on a mandatory rationing program and expects to have the results analyzed by tomorrow.

"Very quickly thereafter," Love said, officials will decide whether to put some controls into effect.

Love himself appeared to have reservations. At a briefing after the two-hour session, he said that mandatory allocation of fuel and heating oils was "a very difficult thing to administer well and wisely."

Interior Secretary Rogers C. B. Morton said that if the nation has average winter weather there would be an increase of 10.5 per cent in the demand for heating oil over last winter. He estimated that the shortage in heating oil could range from 250,000 to 350,000 barrels a day to a maximum of 800,000 barrels depending on the weather.

The mandatory allocation program the administration has outlined could involve heating oil alone or all petroleum products, including gasoline.

In a related development, the American Petroleum Institute reported that the country's fuel-oil stocks on Sept. 14 were up about 3.2 million barrels from the same day last year but about 23 million barrels below the 1971 level.

Gasoline stocks also were up about 4.1 million barrels from 1972 and down about 2.3 million barrels from 1971.

But API marketing director Ray Wright said the supply figures, when matched against demand, do not add up to optimism.

The Sept. 14 fuel-oil stocks represents a 53-day supply in 1973 and 1972 demand terms he said, compared with a 71-day supply two years ago. Gasoline stocks now represent a 30-day supply, when the same amount would have been a 34-day supply in 1971.

A bill prohibiting the export of any refined petroleum product was introduced Wednesday by Sen. Thomas J. McIntyre, D-N.H.

Garrow Pleads Innocent To Murder Charge

LAKE PLEASANT, N.Y. (AP)- Robert Garrow, still carrying the pellets that felled him for capture, pleaded innocent Wednesday to a charge of stabbing an Adirondack camper to death.

Garrow, speaking only to say he understood the charges against him, pleaded innocent to 13 counts in the stabbing of Philip Domblewski July 29.

He also pleaded innocent to two counts of criminal impersonation of a police officer and attempted kidnapping in connection with an incident at the religious camp the day before Domblewski was killed.

Garrow, chained in a wheel-chair dressed in a plaid shirt and dark trousers, was transferred from a Plattsburgh hospital earlier in the day.

The small courtroom was packed with police, newsmen and onlookers as Hamilton County Judge George W. Marther read the indictments. Garrow's only utterance was, "yes," when the judge asked if he understood. Marther refused to let Garrow out on bail. He was immediately turned to jail.

There were four counts of second degree kidnapping, one for Domblewski and the others for Domblewski's three companions. The surviving trio had told police the four were tied to trees. Domblewski was then stabbed in the chest, they said.

Authorities refused to discuss details of the charges concerning the religious camp incident, Camp O' the Woods, about five miles south of Speculator and within 20 miles of the scene of the Domblewski murder.

Garrow, with a cast on his left arm and a bandage around his right foot, was lifted in his wheelchair and carried to the courtroom.

Although he had covered his face with clothing when he left the hospital and arrived in Lake Pleasant, he entered the court plain-faced, except for spectacles.

Authorities had planned to arraign Garrow immediately upon his arrival, but jailed him pending the arrival of his lawyers.
